GRAFT PROSECUTION.

TREMBLES IN FEAR.

Ruef Pales Before Justice.

Judge Dunne Bitterly Excoriates Arch-Grafter in Court.

Jewish Rabbis Friendly to the Ex-Boss Also Roundly Scored.

Intensely Dramatic Scene at Hearing on Prisoner's Petition.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

SAN FRANCISCO, March 14.—Pale and agitated, Abraham Ruef, former political boss of San Francisco, for a few brief moments today apparently stood in the shadow of the penitentiary, heard himself denounced from the bench as the "greatest criminal who had ever appeared before the bar in that court," heard two Jewish rabbis who had interested themselves in his case, designated "willful, vicious falsifiers," expected that the following words would pass sentence upon him—and the next moment had liberty almost within his grasp—Judge Dunne reluctantly and regretfully granting a motion to arrest judgment on his plea of guilty to the charges of extorting money from the French restaurants.

Only the bail on the other indictments, about $600,000, which he declares he can promptly furnish, now stands between Ruef and his release from the County Jail.

The scene in Department Six of the Superior Court today was intensely dramatic. Heney had asked for a week's time to see if good indictments could be carved out of the extortion indictments, declared by the Appellate Court in the case of former Mayor Schmitz, who was convicted on the same charge, to be fatally defective, which decision was [illegible] sustained by the Supreme Court.

ORDERS ANOTHER INQUIRY.

Judge Dunne, however, dismissed four of the five indictments, at the same time directing the District Attorney to resubmit the facts to another grand jury.

When indictment 285, to which Ruef had pleaded guilty, came up, Attorney Frank J. Murphy, associate counsel of Ruef, asked that the defendant be allowed to withdraw his plea, and filed a lengthy affidavit, made several days ago, as a foundation for this motion.

Heney opposed the withdrawal of the plea, argued that the facts in the indictment had only been "defectively stated" and that the defendant by pleading guilty had waived all rights and was not entitled to be discharged because of the decision of the Supreme Court.

"He now stands before the court for sentence," said the assistant District Attorney, "and the recommendation of the District Attorney in view of the evidence in the Schmitz case is that the defendant be given the full term of punishment provided by law for such cases."

DRAMATIC SCENE.

Counsel for Ruef then began to summarize the grounds upon which the motion was made. When Murphy reached that part of Ruef's affidavit where he read that Dr. Jacob Nieto and Dr. Bernard Kaplan, two prominent Jewish rabbis had stated to the defendant that Judge Dunne had promised to permit Ruef to withdraw his plea, if he pleaded guilty, as desired by the prosecution, Judge Dunne interposed with:

"Stop, Mr. Murphy, I want to stop you right there, to say that any person making any such statements as that is telling a wilful, vicious falsehood and a deliberate untruth made for no other purpose than to interfere with the admission of justice and to assist the greatest criminal that has ever appeared before the bar of this court to escape his just deserts.

"I want to say that if I had the power, I would order this whole matter submitted to the grand jury to the end that indictments might be returned, but the power does not lie with the court, but with the District Attorney.

"Let me tell you again, all persons, no matter how high their station or how respectable their calling, should be brought to the bar of justice, and the higher their station and the more respectable their calling, the more reprehensible their conduct and the more certain and severe should be their punishment.

"The motion is denied. Abraham Ruef, stand up."

RUEF PALES AT WORDS.

The color fled from Ruef's face. For perhaps half a minute he did not move from his chair. Then slowly he arose and, pale and agitated, he stood by the side of his counsel, expecting that the next few words from Judge Dunne would be his sentence, and only recourse to habeas corpus would save him from going to the penitentiary. Murphy, Ruef's assistant counsel, was utterly taken aback by the sudden turn of affairs.

Judge Dunne slowly recited the history of the case and the defendant's plea of guilty. When the court said, "Abraham Ruef, do you know of any legal grounds why sentence should not

STOCKS SHOW PROSPERITY.

Ten Railroads and Five Industrials Increase $431,000,000 Over 1907.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, March 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] At Friday's close, fifteen leading stocks, including ten railroads and five industrials, showed an appreciation of more than $431,000,000 from the low of last year.

Of these stocks Pennsylvania shows the largest increase in stock market valuation from the low of last year, gaining over $59,400,000. Another railroad to show a large increase is Reading, with about half the appreciation of the above amount, or, in actual figures, $44,800,000.

Northern Pacific, with an appreciation of $39,700,000 from the 1907 low, shows the third largest gain. The smallest gain is shown by Southern Pacific, which shows a stock market estimation of $2,400,000 greater than at the low of last year.

Of the industrials, the Steel stocks show a remarkable increase in value of $115,800,000.

CRANKS CAUGHT.

MAYOR BUSSE IS THREATENED.

TWO CRANKS SEND HIM NEARLY A DOZEN LETTERS.

Accuse Him of Murdering Children and Throwing Their Bodies to Bloodhounds, in Addition to Generally Abusing Him—Believed to Be Insane.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, March 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] William Witt, 51 years old, and Mary D. Schuler, 50 years old, living together in the rear of No. [illegible] Morgan street, were arrested today for writing threatening letters to Mayor Busse. They were examined by City Physician L. B. Baldwin and sent to the Detention Hospital as supposedly insane.

The police seized in the rooms they occupied a score of letters denouncing the Mayor, which were ready to be sent out. Letters prepared to be sent to Gov. Dineen, former Mayor Edward F. Dunne, Chief of Police Shippy and other public officials and former officials were also captured.

The letters to Mayor Busse and similar ones denouncing the Mayor sent to West Side business houses were headed, "All About Mayor Busse," in red ink. They were rambling in style, accusing the Mayor of murdering children and throwing them to bloodhounds, and generally abusing him.

Mayor Busse had received almost a dozen of the letters, but they were unsigned. A letter received by Dr. William Schaare, No. 319 West Eighteenth street, was signed, however, and through it the couple was traced. When Detectives Trafton and Sharp visited the house this morning, the woman put up a fight, but the man did not resist. Witt was a former employé of the Pullman Company. His wife committed suicide in a fit of despondency one year ago.

PREDICTS COMING WAR.

Gifford Pinchot Declares Forest Rangers Only Material from Which to Develop Scouts.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

NEW YORK, March 14.—Declaring it is only from forest rangers in the service of the United States that scouts can be recruited for service "in the war that is coming," Gifford Pinchot, chief forester of the Department of Agriculture, started his hearers at a dinner last evening by discussing the war as if the conflict were unavoidable.

"In the great war which this country will fight, but which I hope with all my heart it will not have to fight soon," Mr. Pinchot said, "the only quarter to which this government could look for scouts is the bureau of forestry. There, and there only, are men being trained in such a fashion that would be of service.

"It is of importance that we preserve the forests and the game, but it is more important that we be in condition to furnish for service in that war the material out of which good scouts can be made. The forest rangers make up this material."

He also said there is in this country timber enough for less than thirty years, and coal enough to last less than 100 years.

GOES INTO RIVER.

'Frisco Train Wrecked on High Trestle—Two Persons Killed, and One Fatally Hurt.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

BRISTOW, Okla, March 14.—Two persons were killed, one fatally hurt, seven more or less injured and scores of lives were imperiled when Frisco passenger train No. 406 was wrecked on a high trestle across Spring Creek, eight miles west of here this afternoon.

The engine, baggage and mail cars and the first coach in the train plunged forty feet into the river. An iron bolt nut in the track is believed to have caused the wreck. The dead are E. D. Harrison, fireman, Sapulpa, and W. H. Posten, mail clerk, Monett, Mo. Fatally hurt, Frank Gipson, Canadian, Tex.

CHAPTER VII.

For a second time Katherine Graniger lay awake late into the night, watching the fire-glow glint the walls and throw fantastic shadows on the ceiling.

She had been sent to bed very early.

"You look so tired, you poor thing," Camilla had said as they had sat at dinner.

She herself was going out to a bridge party, but she had insisted on Agnes Brenton and Katherine sharing a dainty little dinner with her.

Of course it was at her suggestion that Miss Graniger was sleeping with the children.

"As you are going to stay with me," she had said, when she tarried a little while in the nursery after Mrs. Brenton had gone downstairs, "I think we had better start as we intend to go on. Agnes, I know, wants to carry you home again with her tonight, but Betty and Babsy want you—don't you, darlings?"

Katherine asked for nothing better, except, indeed, that she was divided in her desire to show deference to both these women who were so extraordinarily kind to her.

"I only hope I shall do," she said earnestly.

Camilla had laughed at this.

Her baby had climbed on her knee, and was cuddling her very tightly.

"This is not what frightens me," she said. "I am only afraid you won't stand our ways. This is a very funny sort of household—isn't it, Betty?"

The child nodded her head wisely. She looked so pretty with her bright hair screwed up in curl rags.

It was Katherine who introduced the subject of Rupert Haverford.

"I fancy Mrs. Brenton thinks I ought to have referred things to Mr. Haverford," she had said, a little hesitatingly.

"I know," Mrs. Lancing had answered quickly, "but I don't in the least see that. Of course you went to Mr. Haverford last night because you did not know what else to do. But surely that does not entitle him to order all your ways? I shall be awfully disappointed if you don't stay with me," she finished; and Katherine had laughed softly at this.

"Then you shall not be disappointed," she had answered.

And so everything had been arranged, and when Mrs. Lancing had whisked away for a long—and a late—evening at cards, Mrs. Brenton had kissed the girl, and told her to go to rest.

"Camilla is right; you do look very tired," she said.

"Oh, I am always pale, but I am not really tired—I am only happy. Just a little while ago I seemed to have nothing given to me, that nothing was possible; and now I feel almost as if I had found everything that had been lacking all these years!"

"Only because you have settled to be the governess to two children who are bound to be naughty and tiresome sometimes, you know?"

"No, not entirely because of that," Katherine answered.

There was something familiar to her to find herself occupying a small bed in a room with children, but this was the only element that was familiar; all the rest was so new and so sweet.

As she lay on the pillows and looked from one little sleeping form to the other her eyes filled, and she had a fluttering sensation at her heart.

After so many barren years these last few hours seemed over full with sympathy and kindness, and with that recognition from others that almost amounted to kinship.

She found herself endowed with a personality all at once.

It was very strange to realize that she had some defined standing; now that the oppression of dependence had been lifted she marveled that she could have endured the burden so long.

"But it is too good to last," she said to herself once or twice. "I know something will happen, and I shall go out into the cold again."

Of course she could not sleep; she thought of a dozen things at the same time.

The spell of Camilla's magnetic personality, the calm strength and womanliness of Agnes Brenton, the charm and prattle of the children, held her in sway alternatively, and kept alive that new sense of warmth that had been kindled in her heart.

Every now and then, too, Rupert Haverford would come into her thoughts.

A note had been sent round from Mrs. Brenton's lodgings addressed to herself, and given to her just as she was going upstairs. In this Haverford had written that he regretted that he was called north on very important matters, but that he had spoken to the lady of whom he had told her, and that a home was arranged for her until she could make other plans.

"My absence may delay the explanation you desire from my mother," Rupert had written, "but in the event of your requiring any reference, you will of course use my name."

It was a brief and very businesslike letter, but Miss Graniger felt grateful to him all the same.

Assuredly he must have troubled himself about her even to have made such arrangements.

Once indeed she felt a little qualm.

"Perhaps Mrs. Brenton was right, and I ought to have asked his advice." The next moment, however, she dismissed this. "It cannot matter to him how I earn my bread."

"I shall send him back the greater portion of the money he lent me," she determined at another moment. "I must get myself a few things to wear. I cannot go about with the children quite so shabby as I was today. But I shall not require more than half the money he lent me, and I shall pay the other off as quickly as I can get my salary."

When she remembered his mother she laughed.

"Explanation! . . . It is very evident that he does not know her as well as I do."

It was very late before Katherine's eyes closed drowsily, and then she had slept scarcely an hour when she was awakened with a start.

Little hands were pulling her, and a little voice was whispering out of the darkness:

"Kattawine! . . . Kattawine! . . . may I come into your bed?"

Instantly the girl was awake. . . . She sat up and held out her arms.

Dennis had warned her:

"If Miss Baby wants to rouse you and creep in with you, don't you let her, miss," she had said "you'll want all the rest you can get and children shouldn't never be encouraged in such goings on."

But Katherine forgot to be sensible; rules and regulations went down before the sweetness, the delight, of holding that warm little bundle in her arms so closely.

Baby kissed her many times, whispered sleepily for a few minutes, and then lay quite still, one little loving hand linked in Katherine's.

. . . .

Mrs. Brenton went back to the country the next day.

It had been arranged that her husband would follow her to town; but instead of doing this, he managed to contract a very bad cold, and as he was not the strongest man in the world, his wife took alarm, and departed in a hurry for Yelverton, notwithstanding all Camilla's entreaties.

"But remember," Mrs. Brenton said as she went, "you have promised to come to me for Christmas; that is understood, Camilla. It will be delightful to have the children, and we must have a Christmas tree and a jolly time altogether."

"I am not sure that I shall have anything to do with you in the future, I am so furious with you!" replied Camilla; then she laughed. "I don't know why I want you so much, because you are always scolding me—aren't you? But I do want you, and I think it is horrid of you to go rushing back now, just because Dick has happened to sneeze twice. If he had come up to town, we could have all nursed him."

The governess saw the children's mother only intermittently during the next two or three days.

Camilla always seemed to be in a tremendous hurry. Except for breakfast, she did not have a single meal in the house.

Nevertheless, the atmosphere was charged with a certain sort of excitement. The telephone bell was always ringing; so was the door bell.

Mrs. Lancing's friends seemed to employ an army of telegraph boys, and she herself would dash home in cabs every now and then in a violent hurry apparently. Though she might neglect or postpone other duties, she never forgot a flying visit to the nursery at bath time.

The clamor of the children, however, and the nonsense and the kisses, precluded anything further than the interchange of smiles and a few words between Mrs. Lancing and her new governess.

It was Dennis who reported that Miss Graniger had settled down to her work admirably; that she was a decided acquisition.

"You've never had any one near so nice, ma'am," was Dennis's opinion, given emphatically. "She doesn't give herself airs, and isn't above doing all sorts of little things that nurse would never have dreamed of doing; and the way she understands children—well, there, it gets over me. Miss Betty was in one of her tantrums this morning, but Miss Graniger, she soon set things right. I'd 'ope, ma'am," Dennis added, "that there'll be no change this time. . . ."

"I never want to change, you know that," Camilla's answer was to this.

She found time to scribble a few words, conveying what Dennis had told her, to Agnes Brenton, and added:

"As the great Mogul has never taken any notice of us since you left town, we are left conjecturing whether he is indifferent or annoyed."

Just when she was closing this letter Camilla took out the paper again and wrote a postscript.

"Violet Lancing scratched to some purpose the other day. I have had a letter from the old man commanding me to take the children to spend Christmas with him. I have not answered him, but I mean to tell him to go to . . ."—she made a great dash—"church on Christmas morning," she finished. "As I am promised to you, I cannot go to the Lancings, can I?" she wrote underneath.

Katherine Graniger was far too busy in these first days of new occupation to give much heed to the fact that Rupert Haverford had sent no answer to the letter she had written to him.

Naturally, the life was not so golden-hued in these after-days as it had seemed that first day.

She found the children, if not exactly spoiled, certainly not trained as they should have been trained.

FLEET COMMITTEE ASKS QUIC LIBERAL GIVING.

To Carry Out Splendid Programme Arranged More Funds Are Needed and Expert Canvassers Will Make the Rounds so That All May Have Chance to Help.

If Los Angeles intends to keep i much-advertised promise to celebra the arrival of the battleship fleet "something different" style its citize must pay their share of the expens The General Fleet Committee nee funds. It has actually in the treasu $2000, equal to the amount subscrib by leading hotels. The county h promised $5000, the city $1800, wh banks and other institutions have p their names down for $6000 or $7000. carry out the plans of the committ $8000 more is needed. The situati has been plainly placed before the pe ple by the press, yet when W. Woolwine, chairman of the finan sub-committee of the fleet commit was seen yesterday afternoon he h again to make his laconic repo "Nothing doing."

This financial situation has reach such a condition that the Mayor y terday sent out a kind of "hurry ca to prominent citizens connected w the arrangements to meet at his off and discuss the matter. Joseph Scott, chairman of the Banquet Co mittee; Gen. Wankowski, gene treasurer and chairman of the E Committee; Motley H. Flint, chairm of the committee on the entertainm of enlisted men; F. J. FIREMAN KILLED ON RUN.

Assistant Chief Injured on Way to Serious Blaze at Union Station in St. Louis.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ST. LOUIS (Mo.) March 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] George Door, driver for the first assistant chief of the fire department, was instantly killed and his superior, Chief T. W. Rucker, was perhaps fatally injured in a collision with a drinking fountain tonight while responding to an alarm at Union Station.

A third man, Howard S. Sawlings, a gas inspector, was seriously injured in the explosion of a Pintsch gas lamp which for a time threatened to destroy every train in the Union Station as well as the train shed.

The fire resulting caused $15,000 damages and caused a panic among the crowds in the midway and the guests of the Terminal Hotel.

The fire started at 8 o'clock, just aft-

HALF-MILLION MEN ARE LAID OFF.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, March 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Since the first of the year seven railroads with 6000 miles of trackage, representing an investment of $415,000,000, has gone into the hands of receivers. The liabilities of the roads aggregate $460,000,000.

The seven railroads whose financial difficulties have taken them into the courts since January 1 are the Seaboard Air Line; the Chicago Great Western; the Detroit, Toledo and Ironton; the International and Great Northern; the Western Maryland; the Chicago, Cincinnati and Louisville, and the Macon and Birmingham.

Railroad men estimate that about 500,000 employés of the roads of the country have been laid off since November 1. The forces of the mechanical, accounting, engineering, and clerical departments have been reduced an average of one-third. In normal times the railroads of the United States employ about 1,600,000 men.

Twenty-five thousand men have been laid off in Illinois. Figures given by railroad men for the probable number in some of the Central and Southern States are as follows: Missouri, 15,000; Kansas, 15,000; Nebraska, 11,000; Arkansas, 5000; Louisiana, 6000; Texas 25,000; Oklahoma, 5000; Kentucky, 5500; Tennessee, 7000; Mississippi, 1,000; Georgia, 12,900, and Alabama, 9000.

Retrenchments are still being made by most of the railroads. Department heads have orders to continue a gradual weeding out process wherever practicable.

"Wages must come down or the freight rates must go up," is the attitude of the railroad people. Either the cost of operation in which wages play an important part, must be reduced, or the receipts be increased. Increased receipts can only be derived from higher freight rates or from an increased movement of merchandise.

GIVES GOOD ADVICE.

French Financial Authority Tells Americans What They Should Do. Advocates Central Bank.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PARIS, March 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Paul Le Roy Beaulieu, the greatest economist and financial authority in France, was asked by your correspondent today for some broad, general advice to America. Said he, after much thought:

"Do not hamper enterprise by too much legislation.

"Prevent the trusts from performing illegal acts, but do not alarm trade, and a strong confidence by excited attacks on all capital.

"Beware of inflating values.

"Create a central bank, taking the Bank of France as a model."

As an economist, Le Roy Beaulieu ventured to criticise President Roosevelt thus:

"Mr. Roosevelt's campaign to check the power of the trusts is all very well, but permit me to say the American President should not wage war on the trusts in a way to frighten investors.

"Of course it is well to forbid and punish unfair means of crushing competition, such as arbitrarily changing railroad rates, or giving rebates, but on the other hand, it seems fantastic to us Europeans to read of a fine of $29,000,000. How can we confidently invest in enterprises which are subject to such extraordinary losses?"

"What is needed in America," he continued, "is some restraint or some limit to the powers of the big stockholders in the great companies. For example, while the votes should be proportioned to the number of shares held, there should be a limit to the number of votes controlled by any one person. That is to say, the shareholders should have some means of making their wishes effective."

ANARCHISTS WILL BUILD.

Chicago "Reds" Meet and Decide to Erect $20,000 Hall in That City.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, March 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Members of the local chapter of the National Organization of Anarchists in America met tonight and voted to raise $20,000 to purchase a site and build an anarchists' hall in Chicago.

"The fund was started by subscription at this meeting," said Emma Goldman, late tonight." There are 17,000 anarchists in Chicago. Among these it will not be difficult to raise quickly even twice that amount, if necessary. A committee has been appointed to canvas the anarchist population of the city. The Edelstad group already has plans under way to raise money for similar purposes, and these plans will be altered to coincide with the movements initiated tonight.

"We will build a hall of our own, and thus insure freedom from interruption when we hold meetings. If necessary, I will stay and dedicate this hall. It is to be completed as quickly as possible. The idea has been suggested often, and has been decided upon following the action of the police in barring us from a Dearborn-street building today."

BLOCKED SALE OF "TIMES."

Sir Edward Tennant, the Man Who Prevented Pearson from Acquiring "The Thunderer."

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, March 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Sir Edward Tennant, M.P., is the man who defeated Cyril Archer Pearson's plan to buy the Times.

Sir Edward is a wealthy manufacturer of chemical fertilizers, but this does not explain his hankering after newspapers. He owns, next to the Walter family, the largest individual share in "The Thunderer," and he owns "The Academy." He is a great free-trader.

Mr. Pearson's idea was to print the Times and his newspapers, the Standard, the Evening Standard and the Daily Express, in the same establishment. Sir Edward contended that the Times would lose its individuality should it be combined, in any sense, with the other newspapers. It happened that the consent of the judge in Chancery is necessary to the sale of the Times stock. The judge agreed with Sir Edward Tennant, and Mr. Pearson found himself unhorsed.

What will happen to the Times now, nobody knows.

FLOUR PRICES CUT.

Washington and Oregon Millers Announce Reduction of Fifteen Cents a Barrel.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SEATTLE, March 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Washington and Oregon flour millers at the conclusion of a banquet given at the Hotel Butler reduced the price of flour fifteen cents a barrel. Business conditions, particularly relating to the export trade, caused the reduction announced by members of the association, which includes the principal flour millmen of the Pacific Northwest.

The statement was further made that retail dealers of flour had agreed to reduce the price of flour five cents a sack, which amounts to a reduction of twenty cents a barrel to the consumers. Further reductions may be made if business conditions warrant.

STATE CONVENTION CALLED.

Independence League to Hold Meeting on May 16 to Elect Delegates to National Convention.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

SAN FRANCISCO, March 14.—The California State Central Committee of the Independence League has issued a call for a State convention to be held at San Francisco on May 16, for the purpose of electing delegates to the national convention of that party, which will nominate candidates for President and Vice-President.

The State convention will be composed of 234 delegates, and will also name a new State central committee.

The call directs that county committees call primary elections in districts where they are not required by law, to be held on May 5. Congressional district conventions shall be called by the Independence League Congressional committees to be held not later than May 16.

POLITICAL.

TAFT WINS DELEGATES.

Gains Thirty-four Votes in the Last Week.

Has Now Total of Hundred and Forty-six.

New Supporters of Secretary of War.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, March 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] A week's developments show a gain of thirty-four in the number of Taft delegates selected. One week ago Mr. Taft had 112 delegates who were either directly instructed for him or whose selection following the adoption of resolutions indorsing his candidacy by the conventions which named them. Of the 112 delegates in question ninety-four were uncontested.

In the course of the week the number of Taft delegates has increased to one hundred and forty-six, out of the total of 182 thus far elected. Of the thirty-four Taft delegates chosen this week four will have to establish their claims in the convention in contests.

The number of uncontested Taft delegates would, therefore, be 124 if it were not for the fact that in the Eleventh and Twelfth Missouri Districts, which were uncontested heretofore, contesting delegations have been chosen and instructed for Hughes, thus reducing the total of uncontested Taft delegates to one hundred and twenty.

The delegates entered this week are from the following States and districts:

Fifth Oklahoma, with a contest.

Fifth Nebraska, instructed for Taft.

Eighth Virginia, uninstructed but for Taft.

Seventh Virginia, uninstructed but for Taft.

First, Second and Eighteenth Ohio, instructed for Taft.

Oklahoma, delegates at large instructed for Taft.

First and Sixth Iowa, instructed for Taft.

First Kentucky, contesting delegations.

Second, Sixth and Third Nebraska and Nebraska delegates at large, instructed for Taft.

An interesting incident of the week was in the development of an overwhelming second choice sentiment in Illinois for Taft, as evidenced by the Peoria County Convention. Speaker Joseph G. Cannon was indorsed by this convention as its choice for Presidential nominee but the convention pledged itself to Taft as second choice.

THROWS UP SPONGE.

HUGHES MAN HAS GIVEN UP FIGHT.

REPRESENTATIVE PERKINS SAYS TAFT HAS CINCH.

Admits New Yorkers Would Like to See Their Governor Nominated, but They Realize That He Has no Chance and Will Be Pleased With the Secretary of War.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, March 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Representative Perkins of New York threw up the sponge for Gov. Hughes this morning. Secretary Taft will be nominated without the shadow of a doubt, he told the President, and though the people of New York are, of course, for Gov. Hughes, they will not be displeased over the result.

"There is nothing the people of New York would like better than to see Gov. Hughes nominated and elected," said Perkins, "but as a matter of fact he has no show whatever for the nomination. This is conceded by practically every politician in the country, in and out of New York. Taft seems to have the nomination nailed down, and his friends have clinched the nails on the under side so that no one can pull it up.

"That being the case, the people of New York will be pretty well pleased anyway, for they like the Secretary of War better than any other candidate after Hughes. The opposition to Taft will not be able to make anything of a combination. As soon as the first ballot is over, if Taft does not have the nomination, then the delegates pledged to favorite sons will flock into his inclosure, and it will be all over."

PAPAL JUBILEE.

ORDINATION OF POPE PIUS.

Fiftieth Anniversary to Be Celebrated.

Ceremonies of Great Splendor Planned.

Joan of Arc at Last to Be Canonized.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ROME, March 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The vast Hall of Beatifications, over the porch of the Church of St. Peter, and communicating directly with the Papal apartments, has been decorated and made ready for several ceremonies of great splendor, which are to take place this year in honor of the fiftieth anniversary of the ordination of Pope Pius X.

A huge throne has been erected, and sitting facilities provided for the cardinals. Two tribunes have been built that will accommodate the members of the diplomatic corps accredited to the Holy See and the Pope's relations. It is from this hall that the election of a new Pope is proclaimed after the conclave has decided.

In this beautiful hall there will be this year some big functions. One will be the canonization of Joan of Arc, the Maid of Orleans. After a discussion pending nearly fifty years, Pius X has decided the ceremony shall be performed in his jubilee year, and preparations are being made in France to attend it. It is believed more than 5000 French Catholics will come here for the occasion, and that nearly all the bishops of France will be present and surround the papal throne. The Pope will make a speech, detailing not only his admiration for the French heroine, but also his love for France, which caused him to add a new saint to the country's calendar.

The beatifications of the venerable Mother Barat, foundress of the Order of the Sacred Heart, is to take place May 3 and for the occasion many members of the order will come from all over the world, especially from the United States, where the order has a strong footing. Special privileges will be granted at the Vatican to the members of the order who attend, as the order has borne all the expenses connected with the beatification and celebration.

Another beatification which probably will take place this year is that of Father Endes, the founder of the order called the Endites. This is under the recommendation of the College Rites, which assembled the other day and pronounced itself favorable on it.

There will be many more such celebrations at the Vatican this year, which will end only when the Pope has said his jubilee mass in St. Peter's, in September.

ROMAN PILGRIMAGE.

PRELATES WILL VISIT POPE PIUS.

AMERICAN BISHOPS TO CALL ON HEAD OF CHURCH.

Many of Them to Pay Their Respects to Him During Occasion of His Sacerdotal Jubilee—His Holiness Favorably Impressed With Our Clergy.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ROME, March 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Information has reached here that in addition to the big American pilgrimage which is to arrive here shortly before Easter Sunday, nearly all the American prelates contemplate paying a visit to the Pope during his sacerdotal jubilee.

There is much gratification at the Vatican over the news, because it is seldom that more than two or three American bishops have been here at the same time. They generally come ad limina, once every five years, and generaly are subjected to the red tape of the congregations which prescribe for them all they do. On such occasions they can see the Pope only twice on arrival and before departing. There is scarcely an American bishop who cares to come to Rome under those circumstances, but the jubilee festivities will give them all an opportunity to visit the Pope, free from all ecclesiastical limits.

Some of the American prelates are assistants to the Papal throne, and because of this in all the functions celebrated before the Pope they will have precedence over other bishops of the grade.

The Pope is fond of the American bishops, and whenever one of them is expected at the Vatican, it is the cardinal secretary of state who has to act as interpreter. Cardinal Merry del Val had to perform this office every time Archbishop Riordan of San Francisco called at the Vatican when he was here.

The archbishop made a splendid impression at the Vatican, and the Pope has decided to send him a gift on the occasion of the silver jubilee of his episcopal consecration, which will occur in August.

Cardinal Gibbons is expected here before the end of the summer. He will receive a warm welcome from all his colleagues in the sacred college. Many other bishops have informed the propaganda of their intention to come to Rome this year.

PRIMA DONNA IN HOT WATER.

BERLIN PRESS ANGRY AT HER ANTI-GERMAN SENTIMENTS.

Emmy Destinn, Who Is Bohemian by Birth, Excites Ire of Papers of Kaiser's Capital by Her Pronounced Sympathy for Her Fellow Countrymen.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BERLIN, March 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Fraulein Emmy Destinn, the famous Berlin prima donna, has got into hot water, owing to her pronounced sympathy for her Bohemian fellow countrymen. Every year she makes a pilgrimage to her native city of Prague, where her reception resembles the triumphal entry of a conqueror.

She has just returned to Berlin, after having subscribed $250 to a well-known anti-German society in the Bohemian capital, which is engaged in making Bohemians out of German children.

The diva is reported to have said that she is a Czech—a Bohemian above everything else, and that Bohemia is for the Bohemians, not for the Germans. The Berlin press, which in such matters is both narrow and ungenerous, reminds Fraulein Destinn that she came to Berlin a poor Bohemian girl, and that she acquired wealth and renown in Germany, not in Bohemia, and therefore is guilty of treason to the German people if she spends any part of that money in a way which would cause them offense.

Destinn says such scolding is absurd, and that she can do, and will do, as she likes with her money, which has been honestly earned, and will be spent in the way she deems best.

SAMOANS OBJECT TO CHANGE OF GOVERNMENT.

Chiefs About to Present Petition to President Stating Natives Are Well Satisfied With System Now Used, and Requesting no Change Be Made.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

SAN FRANCISCO, March 14.—Advices from Tutuila, Samoa, of February 5, state that the Samoans anticipate with some anxiety the establishment of a civil form of government.

It is the desire of the chiefs to maintain the present system of government, and hearing that application is being made to Congress to establish civil government, they are about to present a petition to the President, praying that no change be made at the present time.

After stating present conditions in Samoa, the petitioners ask "that the system of administration of the islands which was introduced upon the annexation to the United States be continued until such time as a majority of the Samoan people can understand and realize the system of government in vogue in the United States of America."

The natives are well satisfied with the conduct and attitude of all the naval officers who have from time to time been at the head of the islands' affairs. The present form of government has always had the full confidence of the people, and they have readily submitted to all regulations or orders.

The United States gunboat Annapolis, Gov. Moore commanding, arrived from Tahiti on the morning of January 19 with a case of measles on board. The vessel was quarantined for fourteen days. Lieut. P. Dugan acted as Governor during the absence of Gov. Moore.

REMARKABLE INTERVIEW.

BARBARIANS THREATEN AMERICA, SAYS ROOT.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, March 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Die Zeit, a daily newspaper of Vienna, contains in its number of March 1, just received in New York, a remarkable interview by its Washington correspondent with Secretary Root. The interview in part is as follows:

Secretary Root: "With regard to the immigration problem, the United States is now in the position of the Roman empire, invaded by the barbarians, who overran it in search of riches.

"The barbarians—Sarmates, Dacians, Avarins, etc., etc.—were miserably poor and the rich coutries of the Roman empire, with their high culture, irresistibly attracted them.

"The same people—I mean from the same countries that sent barbarians Romeward—Croatians, Bohemians, Slovaks, Roumanians, Poles, Ruthenians, Jews and uncultured south Italians—are overrunning the United States. And, as in olden days, they bring their wives and children, settle down in our midst, pushing and crowding us and beginning life anew as if they wer in a conquered country."

NEED OF IMMIGRANTS.

The correspondent: "But the United States couldn't exist without immigration?"

Secretary Root: "Agreed; but circumstances absolutely require that immigrants assimilate with our nation. This needed assimilation was quick as long as the immigrants' intellect and education was equal to our own—that is, during the period when the great masses of future citizens landing at our shores were Irish, German, French, British or Scandinavian.

"They came in goodly numbers and were welcome, but never reached present-day figures, a million or more per annum, and of this million 750,000 are East Europeans, people whom Europe itself regards as only half-civilized."

THE SOLUTION.

Asked if the problem could be solved, or if the United States will regulate immigration, the Secretary said:

"Give us time to consider. We stand but on the threshold of this problem. It would be a very difficult matter to regulate immigration for any length of time. Look at Japan. With Japan we have an immigration treaty, but it never worked satisfactorily. Japan agreed to keep out certain classes of unskilled workmen by refusing them passports. Very well. The immigrants represented themselves to be students or merchants.

"We are now negotiating about a new treaty. Japan will do what she can to protect us. Each applicant for a passport has to furnish proofs that he is really an artisan or merchant—no more coolies, it is promised. Well, let us hope for the best."

"Do you really believe the thing practicable?" was asked.

"I don't, but we must try."

Duke and Duchess of Westminster to Come.

He Is One of Richest Men in the World.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, March 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Duke and Duchess of Westminster, who are devoted to sport, hunting, racing, automobiling, etc., are planning a hunting trip to the Rocky Mountains in the early summer.

The Duke is one of the wealthiest men in the world, owning 600 acres in the very heart of London. The Duchess is the younger daughter of a famous beauty, Mrs. W. Cornwallis West, whose elder daughter married Prince Henry of Pless.

Society has whispered lately that the Duke and Duchess are not entirely happy together, but this gossip seems to be baseless, for the other day the Duke had a slight accident in the hunting fields, and although his wife had just arrived at Cannes, Southern France, she hurried back by the next train to nurse him.

The house parties at their splendid country seat, Eaton Hall, Chester, are made up of gay fashionables, who go in for every kind of sport. The Duke and Duchess frankly say that the heavy intellectual does not entertain them yet. But he is only 29 years, and she is several years younger. They have a son and daughter.

Recently the Duke and his intimates, in their profligacy of youthful spirits, "burglarized" the house of his friend, Lord Cholmondeley. The Duke was vastly astonished that the newspapers thought it worth while to describe this escapade.

HIS ACT CAUSES CONSTERNATION.

POWERS TAKE NOTICE OF SIR EDWARD'S PROPOSAL.

His Proposition to Appoint a Governor-General for Macedonia Responsible to the Powers Is Topic of Hour Among European Governments.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, March 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Sir Edward Grey's startling proposals for reform in Macedonia are the topic of the hour among the governments of Europe, and "consternation" is hardly too strong a word to use in describing their effect in several capitals. They involve a complete change in dealing with Macedonian affairs, namely the appointment of a governor-general.

According to the best opinion in official and parliamentary quarters, if the foreign secretary's plan succeeds it will give him a grat place in the history of Europe. He acted after reaching the conclusion that something practical and drastic must be done to avert war, and saw only one way out—that of promptly and utterly changing the state of things in Macedonia. If Macedonia were quiet, the neighboring powers would be deprived of their excuse for war-like action Hence his proposal for a governor-general, responsible to the powers.

"We may not convert Macedonia from a slaughterhouse into a civilized country," said an official to your correspondent today, "but if we fail, the world is likely to know what and who caused the failure. 'Who's who,' and 'what's what' are desirable things to know in this chaotic and bloody Balkan business."

SUFFRAGETTES ARE OVERCOME.

Call at Residence of Secretary for Ireland, Where They Are Courteously Received by His Wife, but Who Scores Them When They Become Offensive.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, March 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The suffragettes, who scorn the pleadings or advice of mere man were fairly overcome, for the first and only time, by the eminently straightforward and unequivocal reception they got from Mrs. Augustine Birrell, wife of the Chief Secretary for Ireland.

In furtherance of their campaign of exasperation, the suffragettes took it into their heads to call one morning early at the private residences of the various Cabinet ministers. Among others, they went to Mr. Birrell's home, where Mrs. Birrell received them with a courtesy that stilled their shrieking propensities until she told them that her husband was in bed, and could not see them. Then they became aggressive, and were shown out.

Instead of going away they began to make speeches to passers-by from the doorstep, hammering the knocker and ringing the house bell at short intervals. Then Mrs. Birrell lost her patience, and opened a window and said:

"My husband will not see you if you stay here a year. If anything were calculated to make me hesitate about claiming the vote for women it is your senseless and idiotic behavior. As a woman, I think your conduct disgraceful."

This dampened the ardor of the noisy sisterhood, and they dispersed amid the jeers of the little crowd.

OPERATION SUCCESSFUL.

George Crocker Under Surgeon's Knife in New York City for Intestinal Ulceration.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, March 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] George Crocker, son of the late Charles Crocker, the San Francisco multi-millionaire, submitted to a surgical operation this afternoon at his home, No. 1 East Sixty-fourth street, for the removal of intestinal ulceration.

Dr. William Bull, who performed the operation, reported that it was entirely successful, and that the patient was resting easily, with everything in his favor of an early and complete recovery. The ailment which necessitated the operation was contracted while Mr. Crocker was in Mexico, recently and caused him to return home.

Mr. Crocker was formerly a special partner in the firm of Price, McCormick & Co., which failed in 1900 for $13,000,000.

Son of Anarchist Secures Bride Through Work on Doctrines of That Cult.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, March 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] At the bottom of the romance of Oscar Neebe, Jr., lies the little yellow-covered book on annihilation of governments and the "kingdom come" of anarchy.

It was that book which struck a responsive chord in the breast of Emma G. Easton, late of St. Joseph, Mo., and the dual vibrations set the marriage bells jingling today.

The book was borrowed from the library of Oscar Neebe, Sr., who emerged from obscurity at the time of the Haymarket riot and served a term in the State's prison for complicity in the anarchistic outbursts.

CURRENCY.

HOUSE CURRENCY LEGISLATION.

MINORITY REPORT SUBMITTED BY BURTON OF OHIO.

Concerns Itself Wholly With the Fowler Bill and Reasons for Opposing It—Makes No Reference to Either Aldrich's or Williams's Bills.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

WASHINGTON, March 14.—Representative Burton of Ohio today submitted to the House his minority report as a member of the Banking and Currency Committee, dissenting from the majority report, which recommended the passage of the Fowler currency bill.

Mr. Burton's report concerns itself wholly with the Fowler bill and his reasons for opposing it, and makes no reference to either the Aldrich bill or the Williams bill, the latter measure having been recommended by the Democratic members in a minority report.

In his report Mr. Burton says that he does not regard the passage of the Fowler bill as either practicable or desirable at this time. After citing some provisions of the bill and admitting the soundness of their theory, Mr. Burton says:

"At the same time the measure is most revolutionary in its character. The changes contemplated are quite as radical as have ever been attempted in any advanced country, save under the stress of highly exceptional circumstances, such as are exacted by war of a change in the form of government.

"For more than forty years there has been a currency, which, however unsatisfactory it may be in important particulars, has possessed the quality of undoubted security. The people will not readily consent to so marked a departure as would be involved in the substitution of a guaranty fund which is expected to secure not only a problem of one billion of bank notes, but thirteen billions of deposits. While the voluntary agreement of banks for the guarantee of common deposits is worthy of universal approval, a compulsory guaranty is dangerous and unprecedented.

"Such a provision places upon the same level the banker of prudence and honesty and the one who is careless and ready to resort to questionable methods. Under a guaranty of deposits the money of depositors would inevitably gravitate to banks or financial institutions in speculative centers, because higher rates of interest could be obtained. The result would be that capital would be invested in a manner which would be sure to lead to speculation and to unsuccessful undertakings. In the long run, the public as in the case of all oppressive or unnatural legislation, would be compelled to bear the loss, either in the form of higher rates of interest or of a lower return upon deposits."

COOL BOY SAVES GIRLS.

Makes Two Trips with Elevator, Carrying Employees Out of Burning Candy Factory.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

NEW YORK, March 14.—One hundred girls employed in the candy factory of Arthur Essing, at No. 382 Pearl street, were at work today on the fourth and fifth floors when fire was discovered in the bottom of the elevator shaft, preventing their exit by the stairways.

While some of the male employés fought the fire, Henry Coch, the elevator boy, ran his elevator to the top floor and said to the girls in as cool a manner as he could assume:

"There is a fire in the basement. Maybe you had better let me take you down."

Reassured by his coolness the girls were saved from panic and Coch took five elevator loads of them to the first floor before the flames reached such a height in the elevator well that he was compelled to abandon the car. On his last trip the fire burst into the car and burned his hands.

The girls who were not taken out by Coch took to the roof and the fire escapes and reached the ground in safety.

The fire consumed tons of candy and the factory, a five-story building, building, was practically destroyed.

BIG FIRE AT BAHIA, BRAZIL.

BAHIA (Brazil) March 12.—A great conflagration is raging in the business section of this city, and the firemen seem to be unable to check it. Already 33 buildings have been consumed, with a loss estimated at $1,000,000. There have been several fatalities.

The Bavarian government has ordered the immediate expulsion of a number of American Mormon missionaries whose presence is regarded as being dangerous to public order.

VENEZUELAN MUDDLE.

CASTRO WINS ON APPEAL.

Bermudez Asphalt Company Must Pay Big Fine.

Lower Court Is Sustained in Venezuela Case.

Company Mulcted for Aid Given Revolutionists.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

CARACAS (Venezuela) March 11, via Willemstad, Curacao, March 14.—The Superior Court today handed down a verdict confirming the judgment of the lower court which condemned the New York and Bermudez Asphalt Company to pay a fine of $5,000,000 to the Venezuelan government for having extended assistance to the revolution which was directed against President Castro. The sum is the estimated cost of putting down the revolution. The company will appeal to the Court of Cassation.

The finding of the lower court referred to in the above dispatch, which is the civil court of first instance, was handed down in August of last year. The appeal to the Court of Cassation is now the only thing that remains to the company, so far as the situation in Venezuela is concerned. It was from American witnesses and from testimony taken before American judges in United States courts that the Venezuelan government obtained its most important proof of the part alleged to have been played by the asphalt company in the Matos revolution in the furnishing of the money with which to start the fight.

The controversy between the asphalt company and the Venezuelan government has been long and bitter, and was in a critical state at the time that Herbert W. Bowen was American Minister at Caracas. On this occasion the State Department sent what was practically an ultimatum to Venezuela in regard to the matter. The charge that the company aided the revolution with funds has been substantiated, officials of the company having testified to the truth of this statement in New York in 1905.

MARK HANNA ELOPES.

Grandson of Late Ohio Statesman, Freshman at Yale, Weds Miss Adelle Pratt.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

BRIDGEPORT (Ct.) March 14.—Mark A. Hanna, son of Daniel Hanna, and grandson of the late Marcus A. Hanna, and who is a freshman in the Sheffield Scientific School at Yale University, was married to Miss Adelle Pratt of Elmira, N. Y., last night by Justice of the Peace Hull.

Mr. and Mrs. Hanna left for New York after being married, a note being sent to Mrs. Pratt, the bride's mother, who is visiting at the Sanford residence.

It appears that when the young couple first came here they went to a lawyer's office to be married, but having no license and the lawyer not being a justice, they were instructed what steps to take.

In the certificate both gave their ages at 21. Friends here say that it was their understanding that Mrs. Pratt did not wish her daughter to receive the attentions of Mr. Hanna.

LIVED WITH MOTHER.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

CLEVELAND (O.) March 14.—Young Hanna is the son of Daniel R. Hanna, by his first marriage, and he has been living with his mother, Mrs. May Harrington Hanna Stallo, since her divorce from Hanna, and her marriage to H. K. Stallo, formerly of Cincinnati.

Canadian Wheat Lands Company Points Out Way in Advertisement to English Lassies.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, March 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] A strong appeal to English girls is made by the Canadian Wheat Lands Company in a double-column advertisement in big type in a daily newspaper here, reading:

"Girls, this is leap year. Why go to Holloway when you can go to lovely Lashburn, get a fertile farm and a handsome leap-year husband for £40 ($200)."

Did You Ever Stop to Think

Why You Feel Lazy, Moody and Tired?

We'll Tell You Why and Cure the Feeling.

The remedy is yours for the asking.

Dyspepsia bars the way to your attaining success, wealth and influence by clogging the wheels of your health machine. Your work suffers, energy wanes, perseverance flags.

In this age of hurry and bustle, where concentrated energy is essential to success, where the strong man wins and the weakest goes to the wall—you owe it as a duty to yourself, your family, your friends, to keep that God-given health you were blessed with at the start.

Why not make a fresh beginning, and at the expenditure of only 50 cts. in the purchase of a box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, find anew the joy of "living" the joy of "working," the joy of "strife."

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets contain the very elements which your stomach possessed when it was healthy—pepsin, diastate, golden-seal and others. By the action of these digestive ferments the dissolved food substances pass into the blood vessels and lymphatics, and so enter the general circulation.

Deprive the stomach of their assistance and your gastric juice becomes weak, you cannot enjoy your food, you have trouble in your stomach after eating, you become moody, indolent, dispirited.

Remedy these defects by using Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, which assist nature by curing these ills. You need them to restore you to that active condition of body, mind and spirit which is the key to success, the road to wealth and the doorway to fame.

Sold at every drug store; price 50c. We are so convinced that once used you will never be without them, that we will send you by mail, free, on receipt of your name and address, a sample package. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 150 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

Kokomo Woman Gives A For

Receives Hundreds of Requests

In the past few years Mrs. Cora B. Miller has spent $125,000 in giving medical treatment to afflicted women.

Some time ago we announced in the columns of this paper that she would send free treatment to every woman who suffered from female diseases or piles.

More than a million women have accepted this generous offer, and as Mrs. Miller is still receiving requests from thousands of women from all parts of the world, who have not yet used the remedy, she has decided to continue the offer for a while longer, at least.

This is the simple, mild and harmless preparation that has cured so many women in the privacy of their own homes after doctors and other remedies failed.

be passed upon you?" Murphy hastily interposed a motion to arrest judgment, while Ruef sank back into his chair.

"The only chance the people have to have Mr. Ruef punished under this plea," said Heney, "is for His Honor to sentence him. The defendant has the right of appeal.

"The people have never had an opportunity to argue this case before the Supreme Court. We asked for a hearing in the Schmitz case, but we were refused. It may be that the Supreme Court of this State may discover that it has committed error. It would not be the first time that it has acknowledged committing error, nor would it be the first time that the same sort of thing happened in other States.

"I recall that in Missouri when the political boss, Butler, was convicted and his case reached the Supreme Court of Missouri it was reversed in such a way that he went free. I recall also that within three months the same trouble again came before the court with some insignificant personage having been convicted and the court very promptly reversed itself and held the other way. It is barely possible that a change of heart, or a change of understanding, or a change of some kind, might occur here."

SCORES SUPREME COURT.

"Yes," interjected the court, "that might happen with some other defendant, but not the one now before the court."

Continuing, Judge Dunne said:

"The defendant would be sent to Folsom for the maximum term permitted by law if the Supreme Court had not come to his relief on Monday. But at this time, I see no other alternative than to grant the motion.

"I want to say here both as a citizen and as a judicial officer, that in my opinion it is a matter much to be regretted that the Appellate Court did not reach a conclusion, equally open to them, which would bring as much comfort and encouragement to the forces of good as the conclusion which they did reach will bring to the forces of evil throughout the State."

Murphy then brought up the matter of the double indictments, one series of which he wanted dismissed, reducing Ruef's bail by half. But Judge Dunne picked up his papers and abruptly left the bench, saying: "That's a matter between you and the District Attorney," while Murphy kept shouting, "I want to make a motion. I want to make a motion," until the judge disappeared in his chambers.

Ruef cannot make any further action in the matter of the dismissal of the second set of indictments and furnish bail on the others until Monday morning.

DIABETES CURED

THOUSANDS OF MEN AND WOMEN HAVE KIDNEY DISEASE AND DO NOT KNOW IT UNTIL TOO LATE.

WARNER'S SAFE CURE

is the only positive remedy for all forms of kidney disease.

Mr. H. S. Brewer, a prominent real estate dealer of Rochester, N. Y., has been cured of a bad case of diabetes by Warner's Safe Diabetes Cure, which is their special preparation for this form of kidney trouble.

"After suffering greatly from Diabetes Mellitus for some time and not experiencing any relief from different courses of treatment prescribed, I commenced the use of Warner's Safe Diabetes Cure, and soon noticed a great improvement in my condition.

"The excessive thirst and abnormal appetite have disappeared. The flow of urine has been reduced to the normal amount. The amount of sugar is greatly lessened, my weight has increased, and I am surely recovering my usual health.

"I therefore consider it a duty to recommend the use of Warner's Safe Diabetes Cure to the many sufferers from this dread disease, feeling confident that they will experience the same beneficial results from its use."—H. S. Brewer, Rochester, N. Y., Dec. 11, 1907.

CURES KIDNEY DISEASE

When the kidneys are diseased the uric acid is not carried off, and this causes Gout, Lumbago, Rheumatism of the Joints, Rheumatism of the Muscles, Rheumatism of the Heart, Rheumatism everywhere. Warner's Safe Cure drives out the uric acid.

In kidney disease the bowels are often constipated and the liver torpid. Warner's Safe Pills quickly relieve this condition, and no ill after effect is experienced.

WARNER'S SAFE CURE is put up in two sizes and is sold by all druggists, or direct, at 50 CENTS and $1.00 A BOTTLE. Refuse substitutes containing harmful drugs which injure the system.

TRIAL BOTTLE FREE

To convince every sufferer from disease of the kidneys, liver, bladder and blood that WARNER'S SAFE CURE will cure, a trial bottle will be sent absolutely FREE OF CHARGE, postpaid, to any one who will write WARNER'S SAFE CURE CO., Rochester, N. Y., and mention having seen this liberal offer in The Times. The genuineness of this offer is fully guaranteed.

AMERICAN OFFICERS OF HIGH RANK ENDORSE PE-RU-NA. AND OTHERS

Prominent People Recommend the Remedy Pe-ru-na.

Dr. Hartman's World Renowned Catarrh Medicine.

A Remedy for the Grip.

Gen. W. H. Parsons, 925 H St., N. W., Washington, D. C., writes as follows:

"Upon the recommendation of personal friends and many strong testimonials to the efficacy of Peruna in the treatment of the numerous symptoms of the grip with which I have been afflicted for four months past, I have been induced to undergo a treatment of this justly celebrated formula.

"I feel a decided change for the better by its use for one week only, especially in toning up the stomach, and a consecuent decided effect upon my appetite.

"I therefore feel much encouraged that I am on the road to complete restoration.

"My numerous friends in Texas, where I have had the honor to command a brigade of her veteran cavalry in a four-year war, may accept this voluntary testimonial to the merit of Peruna from a sense of obligation for its wonderful efficacy."

Pe-ru-na a Good Tonic.

Gen. M. C. Butler, of South Carolina, writes from Washington, D. C., as follows:

"I can recommend Peruna for dyspepsia and stomach trouble.

"I have been using your medicine for a short period, and I feel very much relieved.

"It is indeed a wonderful medicine, and besides a good tonic."

Colds in the Head and Throat.

Chas. W. Bowman, 1st Lieut. and Adjt. 4th M. S. M. Cav. Vols., writes from Larham, Md., as follows:

"Though somewhat averse to patent medicines, and still more averse to becoming a professional affidavit man, it seems only a plain duty in the present instance to add my experience to the columns already written concerning the curative powers of Peruna.

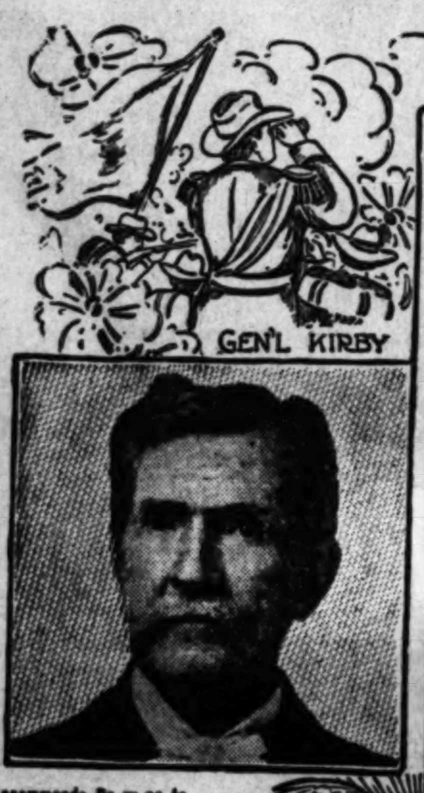
"I have been particularly benefited by its use for colds in the head and throat.

"I have been able to fully cure myself of a most severe attack in forty-eight hours by its use according to directions.

"I use it as a preventive whenever threatened with an attack.

"Members of my family also use it for like ailments.

"We are recommending it to our friends."



Recommends Pe-ru-na to the Afflicted

Brig. Gen. D. T. Kirby, Washington, D. C., writes concerning Peruna as follows:

"Friends of mine having used your Peruna catarrh cure with good results, I am impressed with its curative qualities, and can recommend it to those who are afflicted."

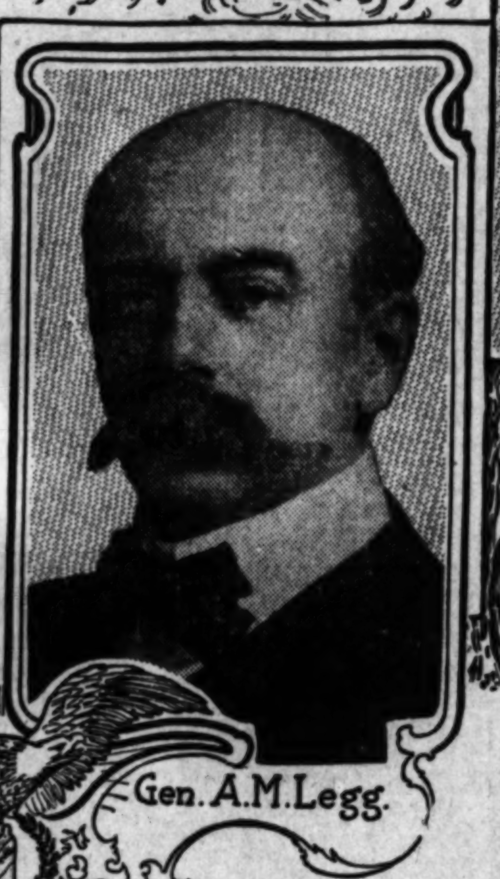
Pe-ru-na in Tablet Form.

Some people prefer to take tablets, rather than to take medicine in a fluid form. Such people can obtain Peruna tablets, which represent the medicinal ingredients of Peruna. Each tablet is equivalent to one average dose of Peruna.

For Catarrh of the Stomach.

Gen. W. W. Duffield, Washington, D. C., writes:

"I have used Peruna in my family and have found it a valuable medicine and take pleasure in recommending it to all who suffer from catarrh of the stomach, or who require a tonic of prompt efficacy."



DEAFNESS CAUSED BY CATARRH—RELIEVED BY PE-RU-NA

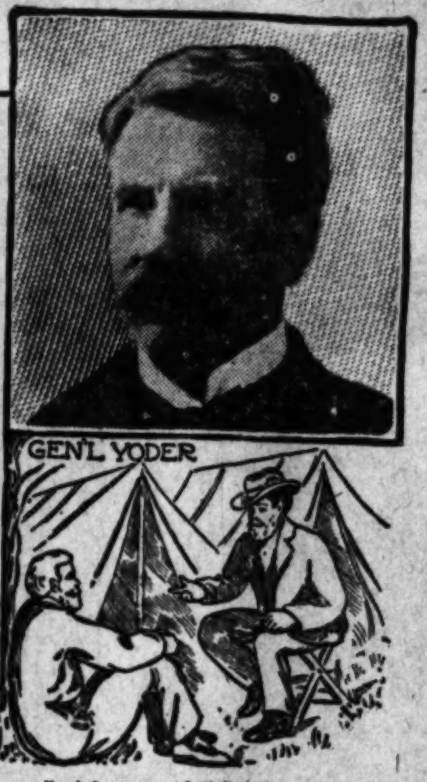
Gen. A. M. Legg writes from the Savings Bank Building, Washington, D. C., as follows:

"I take pleasure in endorsing the many recommendations I have heard and read of Peruna, because of having had knowledge of the truth of so many of them.

"We always tell our sick and ailing friends of the remedies that we have learned, from experience, were good for us when ailing in the same way, and we do it as a duty we feel that we owe them.

"Why is it any the less our duty to advise all the people we can when we know of a good and comparatively inexpensive remedy that makes many cures, and benefits in almost all cases?

"My own little personal experience of being relieved of deafness, caused by a siege of catarrh, warrants me in advising all the afflicted to just try Peruna."



Used Pe-ru-na—Satisfied as to Its Merits—Recommends It to All Sufferers

Gen. S. S. Yoder, 203 Md. Ave., N. E., Washington, D. C., writes:

"I desire to say that I have found Peruna to be a wonderful remedy. I only used it for a short time, and am thoroughly satisfied as to its merits. I shall gladly recommend it to all sufferers."

For Kidney Trouble, Coughs, Colds and Catarrh.

Gen. A. F. Hawley, 1336 25th St., N. W., Washington, D. C., writes:

"I have used Peruna and find it very beneficial for kidney trouble, and especially good for coughs, colds and catarrhal trouble."

Indigestion and Nervousness.

Gen. George B. Williams, whose Washington address is 2121 Bancroft Place, writes: "I have been for many years a great friend of Peruna. It has always helped me wonderfully. I can recommend it for indigestion and nervousness without any qualifications. I am always in possession of a supply of this medicine, and, when required, freely use it."

When Other Remedies Failed Peru-na Proved Efficacious.

Hon. Geo. W. Honey, National Chaplain, U. V. U., ex-Chaplain 4th Wisconsin Cavalry, ex-Treas. State of Wisconsin, and ex-Quartermaster General State of Texas G. A. R., writes from 1700 First street, N. E., Washington, D. C., as follows:

"I cannot too highly recommend your preparation for the relief of catarrhal troubles in their various forms.

"Some members of our own family have used it with most gratifying results.

"When other remedies failed, Peruna proved most efficacious and I cheerfully certify to its curative excellence."

Pe-ru-na a Standard Treatment for Catarrhal Diseases.

Mr. John C. Nelson, Dayton, Tenn., geologist and mining engineer, while a captain in the Federal Army during the Civil War, contracted a case of rheumatism. This malady was constant and persistent, inducing the development of other ailments, which also became chronic. After taking a course of Peruna, Captain Nelson writes:

"Having been painfully afflicted with chronic rheumatism and the adjunctive complications for many years, and after having received many general and special treatments with only temporary relief, I read your scientific treatise on catarrhal diseases.

"At my request you prescribed a special course of the Peruna remedies, which I closely followed, and am happy to report that my rheumatism and complicated ailments are subdued, and I feel young again at the age of 69 years.

"Reason will accept your classification of catarrhal diseases as scientific and true, and the Peruna remedies as a standard treatment for them. I thank you heartily for your skilled and logical advice."

Regained Health and Strength.

Mr. Fred P. Allen, special agent for Fidelity & Casualty Co., 309 Hibernia Bank Building, New Orleans, La., writes:

"About two years ago I was troubled with bronchitic asthma, and was treated by the best physicians in our city, but receiving no benefit from them, I began to despair lest I should not recover.

"I wrote to Dr. Hartman and he prescribed for me. By faithfully following his directions, in six months I was cured of the asthma and the cough had disappeared entirely. I regained my health and strength, and the twenty-five pounds which I had lost, and am thankful to say that I am as well as ever."

IMPROVEMENT ORDERED.

Big Santa Fe Railroad Bridge at Parker, Ariz., Will Now Be Constructed.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

PRESCOTT (Ariz.) March 14.—Word has been received from President Ripley of the Santa Fé lines that the order for the suspension of work at the Parker bridge has been suspended, and that the bridge will be completed, including the contract for grading on the California side, as this action is necessary to protect the work done and the investment already made in the bridge.

This is as was expected, for the bridge is now in such state that to leave it would be to invite disaster from floods, without referring to the immense amount of capital that would lie idle and unproductive.

A couple of miles east of Williams, the Santa Fé Limited had a narrow escape a few days ago. When the west-bound train arrived at Williams, a brakeman reported that he believed that the train had passed over a broken rail. An investigation was promptly made, and it was found that a whole rail was missing, having been pounded to pieces by the train. Seven feet of the steel was absolutely gone, and how the train escaped being ditched is one of the mysteries of railroading.

The body of an unknown man was picked up near Signal Saturday morning and turned over to the Coroner at Kingman. The body evidently was that of a tramp, who had fallen beneath the wheels of a freight train and had been ground to pieces.

There are a number of cases of smallpox in the towns along the Santa Fé, at Ash Forks, Williams, Flagstaff and other points. Stringent precautions have been taken by the health officers, and public gatherings have been prohibited. The disease has broken out in the County Jail at Flagstaff, brought in by tramps. In order to prevent the spread of the epidemic southward, Superintendent Story of the Santa Fé, Prescott and Phoenix, has put into effect special precautions to prevent tramps riding on the trains south of Ash Fork.

The new Harvey house at Williams is to be named the Fra Marcos, presumably after Friar Marco de Niza, one of the earliest Spanish explorers of the Southwest.

Something of a strike is reported in the Normal School at Flagstaff, whence several young ladies have departed, owing to a regulation lately put into effect that all outside students must be domiciled at the dormitory.

At Cherry Creek, Miss Emma Powell and James Boyer were much inclined toward the holy state of matrimony, but were balked by the opposition of the young lady's father. Young Mr. Boyer secured a marriage license in Prescott and at Humboldt enlisted the services of Justice of the Peace Francis. The two proceeded to the Cherry Creek schoolhouse, where a dance was in progress, among the attendants being Miss Powell and her father. The young lady was called out into the darkness where, in the presence of a couple of witnesses, the pair were quickly united, thereafter to return to the dance, where the news was gently broken to the parent by the politic justice of the peace. All was forgiven.

The postoffice at Winslow was entered lately by burglars and $25 in stamps stolen.

MISS EMMETT RESIGNS.

Katherine Emmet yesterday resigned as leading lady of the Belasco stock company. She will rejoin the stock company at the Lyceum Theater, Baltimore, a position she occupied prior to coming to Los Angeles. In the fall Miss Emmet will play the role of Kate Wells in the Cort-Blackwood-Freedman road tour of "Commencement Days," the comedy of college girl life recently produced at the Belasco. According to the management of the Belasco Theater, Miss Emmet's successor has not been decided upon.

LOYAL LEGION ELECTS.

Annual Meeting Held at Hotel Alexandria—Luncheon Follows Transaction of Business.

The Southern California Association of Companions of the Military Order of the Loyal Legion of the United States elected these officers last night, at the Hotel Alexandria: President, Gen. Charles D. Veile, U.S.A.; First Vice-President, Col. H. C. Caldwell; Second Vice-President, Maj. John A. Payne, U.S.A.; Third Vice-President, Capt. J. H. Barbour; Secretary, Charles S. Gilbert; Treasurer, Capt. James S. France; Chaplain, Rev. W. F. Hubbard, U.S.A..

The Funeral Committee is Capt. F. E. Gray, Chaplain Hubbard and Dr. H. M. Bishop.

Following the election, a buffet luncheon was served.

Menney not Afraid.

Since Johnny Coulon beat Young McGovern so easily on Friday night, it has been proposed that Coulon and Eddie Menney be matched for a battle at 116 pounds. Coulon's father stated yesterday that he did not think Menney could make the weight, but Eddie declared last night that he would post a forfeit of $250 for weight and appearance and that if he does not "fight" after he gets into the ring, he will give McCarey the $250 for charity. This is a "come-back" to the opinion that he might back away from Coulon as McGovern did. Menney thinks he could get ready in about three weeks.

AN IRISH EVENING.

On Tuesday evening the Highland Park Ebell Club will give an evening of Irish entertainment at Wood's Hall. There will be songs, readings and violin solos.

DEVOTED TO ART.

COPENHAGEN (Denmark) March 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Princess Waldemar of Denmark (Princess Marie of Orleans, a cousin of the French pretender,) a woman of many accomplishments, is passionately devoted to art.

She paints admirably on china, but her favorite occupation is painting in water colors, in which she has proved to have exceptional talent. She has exhibited a number of excellent pictures in the amateur expositions in Paris, and she has decorated many post cards which have been sold for charity. One of the most popular of her pictures shows her at water-color work.

COMING TO TERMS.

Favorable Outlook for Negotiations Between China and Japan in Tatsu Maru Case.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

PEKIN, March 14.—The negotiations looking to a settlement of the difficulty between China and Japan growing out of the seizure by China of the Japanese steamer Tatsu Maru are making favorable progress.

The Chinese board approved the draft of a document in which China accepts the proposals made by Japan yesterday. China will pay 21,400 yen (about $10,700) and retain the arms that form the cargo of the Tatsu Maru, and she will also pay about 10,000 taels demurrage on the steamer. It is expected that the Tatsu Maru will be released March 16.

In addition Japan agrees to adopt and enforce strict regulations to prevent future traffic in arms and ammunition from China into Japan, but she refuses to include the territory of Macao in this limitation.

China will soon take up negotiations with Portugal regarding the traffic at Macao.

WANTS HIM KILLED.

CONSTANTINOPLE, March 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] All that is needed to throw the Sultan, Abdul Hamid, into peaceful sleep, is to hear that some desperate murderer or would-be assassin has been put out of the way.

The Sultan delights in lurid tales; sensational melodramatic novels. He always has some one read him to sleep, but the telling climaxes in the literature that pleases him disturb his nerves and destroy sleep until the final climax. As soon as the wretched assassin has met his fate, the Sultan begins to snore.

"The Owl" Makes The Price

In the future, when you see in the advertisement of any other drug house a standard article offered at a special sale price— you can depend upon getting it for less at "The Owl" stores. Try it and see.

It Works Out Just This Way

"The Owl" means exactly what it says. To illustrate—if Mennen's Talcum Powder is advertised by some other druggist for 12c, you can get it at "The Owl" for 10c.

Same with mineral waters—supposing Hunyadi Water is advertised at 20c, it is yours at "The Owl" for 19c.

Or Absorbent Cotton—there is a standard drug sundry. If you are offered a pound box at 27c, "The Owl" has it for you at 25c.

And so on right down the line—it makes no difference what the commodity is, so long as it's a standard preparation. "The Owl" absolutely makes the price.

There will be no changes in "The Owl's" prices for patent medicines, which we already sell at such an extremely low price that no lower quotations are possible.

"Special Sale," "Special Price," or what not—it makes no difference. "The Owl" makes the price—you can depend upon that COUNTY REPUBLICANS RALLY IN BIG FORCE.

Leading Members of Great Party Cheer Taft and Other Leaders at Enthusiastic Opening of New Headquarters of Local League.

BUBBLING enthusiasm attended the opening rally of the Republican campaign, when prominent citizens and members of the party throughout the county gathered in large numbers last night to assist in the dedication of the new headquarters of the Republican League of Los Angeles county, at No. 132 South Spring street—the rooms formerly occupied by the Jonathan Club. There was such a jam that all those who sought admission could not enter at the same time. They went in and out in relays.

Moving Figures at a Big Republican Rally.

Cartoonist Gale's impressions of the men who made things go at the rally of party men last night at the new rooms of the league.

Long before the first speaker was introduced every chair in the long front room of the suite was occupied. All the Republican organizations of the city sent delegates.

The candidacy of William H. Taft for the Presidency was heartily indorsed, and every mention of his name was greeted with great applause.

It had been hoped that Gov. Gillett might be present, but he did not arrive from the East. His name was greeted with acclaim, however, and there was abundant evidence of the esteem in which he is held by local members of the party.

BONE AND SINEW OF PARTY.

Judges, prominent members of the bar, leading business men—the bone and sinew of the best citizenship—joined in doing honor to national and State leaders as their names were mentioned by the various speakers, and through the entire meeting and the informal reception that preceded and followed it, indicated in no unmistakable way that the Republican party of this part of California is in the fray to uphold the principles that have made that organization invincible in the past.

Herbert L. Cornish, vice-president of the league, acted as temporary chairman of the meeting. "Just a word regarding the Republican League of Los Angeles County," he said. "The league was not organized to support any one man for office; it was not formed in the interests of any particular person. It was formed to support the regular Republican nominee. Whosoever the convention shall nominate as our Republican Presidential candidate this league will support—be it Taft, Foraker or myself. Gentlemen, I beg to introduce to you Bradner W. Lee, who will act as chairman of this meeting."

Mr. Lee, who is chairman of the Republican County Central Committee, said, in part:

"Four years of matchless prosperity under the peerless leadership of Theodore Roosevelt is about to pass into history. We are here to pledge our support to the man who shall be chosen to wear the mantel of our honored President. Whether that mantel shall fall upon the shoulders of Taft [loud cheers] or any other good Republican, we are here to support him.

"This will be a hard-fought campaign, and it is our duty to gird on our armor and fight. It is the duty of every loyal Republican to take the field and exert himself to the uomost for his party and the principles which it represents."

PROMISING SIGN.

"It is a promising sign that, so early in the campaign, you are willing to turn out in such numbers," said E. A. Meserve. "It shows that you are ready to get into line. And it shows that you want to get into line as Republicans and not as the tail of any so-called 'reform' kite. We must see that we win the coming election by the greatest majority ever known to history. We shall not be called upon simply to pile up a majority for the candidate of our party; we shall be called upon to set the seal of our approval upon the administration which is now drawing to a close.

"In times of war, men under the excitement of the moment, take delight in sacrificing themselves, in going to the front and laying down their lives if need be in the defense of their country. It may not be so easy to hear the call of duty during times of peace. but the call is there just the same. It is just as much our duty to turn out now and work for the principles which we believe in as it would be in time of war for us to go to the front; there is just as much room for patriotism now as there ever has been.

"Take care what men you send to the Chicago convention. See that your platform contains the planks which stand for the policies of the Republican party. See that it represents the policies which have distinguished the party during the past four years. See that it indorses Roosevelt's fight for better government, for enforcement of the law [Cheers.]

"Let one word be your watchword, let it be the standard and there can be but one result. That watchword should be 'honesty.' If you go out tomorrow and the day after and work honestly, you will be looked upon with respect by the young men of that day when your hair shall be white and you shall be approaching the end of your time.

"Gentlemen, even in these times of peace you have the same opportunities for display of patriotism that our brothers here (pointing to the members of the Army and Navy Republican League) had in 1861." [Prolonged applause.]

The next speaker introduced was William J. Hanlon. In introducing him Mr. Lee said he is one of the younger men in the Republican ranks, one of the young men whose enthusiasm would be of inestimable value in the coming campaign. Mr. Hanlon said, in part:

"The success of the Republican party throughout the land must depend upon the clubs and other organizations; the success of these organizations must depend upon the individual men who compose them. Looking back over the history of our country, it seems unnecessary for me to say that our efforts in the coming campaign will meet with the same success that has always greeted them in the past.

"Our party is the party of Lincoln, of Grant, of McKinley, of Roosevelt and of Taft. [Loud cheers.] We stand for fundamental principles essential to the welfare of this land. Our coming campaign must be victorious. Let us do our share toward insuring the election of the man who best can guide the affairs of this country during the busy times that will come in the course of the next four years."

Col. F. M. Chapman of Covina, member of the Governor's staff, spoke on behalf of Gov. Gillett, saying briefly:

"The Governor had hoped to be here tonight to extend to you his good wishes in person. He was unable to make connections, however, so upon me devolves the pleasing duty of representing him. It is a great pleasure to see so many of you here this evening, and we old Republicans, who have been through many a hard-fought campaign in this State, are thankful for the enthusiasm which you are showing. It speaks well for the success of the coming campaign."

State Senator W. H. Savage spoke in behalf of the Army and Navy Republican League. He told why the old soldiers belong to the party which placed Lincoln at the head of the nation, and told of the ideals which, through years of political strife, have kept the old party together. At the end of his talk three cheers were proposed for Roosevelt. The applause which greeted the cheers was deafening.

J. G. Rossiter of Pasadena made a plea for a firm stand in Republican ranks.

"This gathering assures me that the Republicans of this section are firm in their support of Republican policies," he said. "They are determined to show that they treasure the high ideals that have been handed down to them."

"I am reminded of a certain Democratic convention at Chicago. A delegate got up and said, 'We talk of harmony, we say let us have peace, and yet when we get here it is hell.' We don't want any of that sort of spirit. Let us have actual peace and harmony. We believe in Theodore Roosevelt, we believe in his policies. Let us show our belief in him by electing William H. Taft." [Loud and continued applause.]

CONREY FOR UNITY.

Judge N. P. Conrey made a strong plea for unity among Republicans. He ended his talk with the words: "William H. Taft is the only man fitted by training and experience to govern this country during the next four years. He is the only man fitted to face the problems which will be brought before our Chief Executive." [Cheers.]

"The Republican party, born of the exigencies of a time when it was most needed, can never fail so long as it stands by those principles which mean the elevation of man," said W. J. Ballard. "And I want to say right here that I have no misgivings but that William H. Taft will be elected President of the United States at the coming election. [Applause.]

"I remember the memorable debate between Lincoln and Douglass. That great American who towers above all others, said: 'I am opposed to slavery because I believe that it is wrong.' That man was called a buffoon, he was called a clown, but today all are proud to own him as the foremost American that ever dwelt upon our shores. Let us elect a man to office who will carry out the sacred principles which he laid down." [Cheers.]

Other speakers were Col. Albers, D. C. Casselman, Chaplain Allensworth, U.S.A. (retired,) and James A. Foshay.

T. Newman, president of the Republican League, was general host. He stood at the door and greeted all comers and acted as general master of ceremonies.

Of the political clubs which attended the rally in a body none created more enthusiasm than did the Army and Navy Republican League. Fifty strong, the white-haired veterans occupied a place set aside for their especial use.

They brought with them their fife and drum corps and during intervals between the speeches they rendered martial selections. The drummers were on the alert all of the time, and every outbreak of applause was the signal for the "long roll."

The Sixth Ward Republican Club attended in a body. The members took an active part in the rally and lent their services in securing additional members for the league.

The hall was decorated with American flags, while about the walls hung portraits of Washington, Lincoln, Grant, McKinley, Roosevelt and Taft. Over the frame containing the picture of McKinley hung a wreath composed of the favorite carnations of the martyred President. The rooms will be open day and night from this time forth as the gathering place of all Republicans.

At the close of the programme refreshments were served to all of those present.

Prescription For Sluggish Liver

Simple Home Mixture That Counteracts Climatic Effects on the System.

Liver trouble is invariably due to mild, even climatic conditions. Its symptoms are constipation, headaches, skin eruptions, heart palpitation, nervousness, and often sleeplessness.

When the liver gets torpid and inactive it neglects its important function of secreting bile to aid in digesting the food. So indigestion follows and the whole system is affected.

The only way to right things is to get at the real cause—put the liver in proper shape and then the stomach and other organs will be all right.

This prescription is very simple but it is powerful in its action. It is surprising how quickly it will fix up the liver.

You can get the ingredients at most any up-to-date drug store, and you can as well as not mix them at home yourself.

1 ounce Heptonic, 1½ ounces Simple Elixir, 1½ ounces Elixir Calisaya Bark. Dose for adults, 1 teaspoonful four times a day. For children proportionate doses according to their age.

INCENDIARY FIRE?

Building Said to Be Burned for Revenge—Storekeeper Missing—Oil Found on Floor.

A fire believed to have been of incendiary origin practically destroyed a grocery store at No. 631 College street last night, entailing a loss of $1500. The building, which was owned by A. E. Weiss of No. 627 College street, was gutted. He estimates his loss at $600. N. P. Kovasvich occupied the store and had a sleeping apartment in the rear. His entire stock, which was valued at $900, was destroyed.

The flames were discovered by Weiss about 10:15 o'clock. He rushed out of his house and turned in an alarm, and then ran to the rear of the building and found the door open. The bed had been occupied, but Kovasvich, who was seen there a short time before, could not be found. The police are looking for him.

The firemen found that oil had been spilled on the floor, and a can containing a small quantity was in the back room, near the door.

Weiss says that the building was burned for revenge. About a month ago he had two of Kovasvich's sons arrested on the charge of disturbing the peace. Since then he has tried to get the father to vacate the building. Kovasvich asked for a renewal of his lease, which will soon expire, and Weiss refused.

It is stated that Kovasvich was heavily insured. Weiss says he allowed his own insurance policy to expire about a month ago, as he intended to remodel the building and add another story to it.

MOFFITT IN LIMBO.

Alleged Forger Coming from Oakland With Another Accused of Similar Crime.

Charles M. Moffitt, wanted here for forgery, gave himself up to the Oakland police last night and will be brought back to Los Angeles by Detective Hosick, who left for the bay city to return with C. E. Adams, charged with a similar offense. A complaint was sworn out for Moffitt's arrest about two weeks ago by Rev. P. H. Bodkin of this city.

About two months ago Moffitt appeared in Los Angeles. He had a check for $125 drawn in his favor and signed by his brother-in-law, Fred Prince, agent at San Francisco for the Santa Fé. He asked Mr. Bodkin, a life-long friend of the family, to go to the First National Bank and identify him as the payee. Bodkin did so and gave his indorsement. The check was returned later, the name of Prince being declared a forgery. The bank demanded the money of Mr. Bodkin, who paid it.

Pressure was brought to bear on Moffitt's friends to reimburse Bodkin, but they declined. Prince said he had tired of paying checks to which his name had been forged by Moffitt. Mr. Bodkin then swore to a complaint, but Moffitt left Los Angeles before he could be apprehended.

Moffitt's mother lives in Oakland and is said to be broken hearted over the disgrace brought upon her by her son. She is a daughter of the late State Senator Charles Maclay.

MURPHY PUT OUT.

Cyclone Thompson Beats Murphy in Eight Rounds—Carroll Fights Attell a Draw.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

SAN FRANCISCO, March 14.—"Cyclone" Johnny Thompson of Illinois knocked out Johnny Murphy of this city in the eighth round of what was to have been a twenty-round glove contest, at Croffroth's Mission-street arena, this afternoon. Thompson was the favorite, at 10 to 7.

The men fought at 133 pounds. The preliminary fight between Jimmy Carroll and Monte Attell, at 115 pounds, went fifteen rounds, to a draw. Billy Roche was the referee in both events.

ATHLETE GETS MEDAL.

ANNAPOLIS, March 14.—The Navy Athletic Association has awarded a gold medal to Midshipman Harold A. Waddington of Bloomington, Ill., class of '09, for being the best all-around athlete at the naval academy this year. Midshipman Waddington won by one point from Midshipman Walter D. Lamont of Niagara Falls, N. Y. The decision was based on gymnastic work, and follows the recent competition held in the new gymnasium.

SEALS BEAT CHICAGO.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 14.—In a fast game of eleven innings here today, the San Franciscos won from the Chicago Americans by a score of 7 to 6. From the first the race was so even that both teams were compelled to use all the pitching talent available in an effort to gain a lead.

Prominent Prohibition Lawyer Praises the Elixir of Life.

MR. CHARLES D. AINGER.

Mr. Charles D. Ainger, a well-known lawyer of Andover, Ohio, who has just celebrated his 81st birthday and manages an extensive business, has been completely cured of acute dyspepsia and indigestion by Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey.

Mr. Ainger is a Prohibitionist and is opposed to the sale and use of intoxicants, but says he can conscientiously recommend Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey as a great medicine.

Mr. Ainger writes: I am 81 years old and am still attending to an extensive business without any assistance whatever. I have been all my life opposed to the sale and use of intoxicants. I have been a sufferer from acute dyspepsia and indigestion. I have recently commenced the use of Duffy's Malt Whiskey as a medicine. I know that it has been very beneficial to my health and firmly believe that it has prolonged my existence. I can conscientiously recommend its use as a medicine.

Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey

is an absolutely pure distillation of malted grain; great care being used to have every kernel thoroughly malted, thus destroying the germ and producing a predigested liquid food in the form of a malt essence, which is the most effective tonic stimulant and invigorator known to science; softened by warmth and moisture its palatability and freedom from injurious substances render it so that it can be retained by the most sensitive stomach.

If you wish to keep young, strong and vigorous and have on your cheeks the glow of perfect health, take Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey regularly, according to directions. It tones and strengthens the heart action and purifies the entire system. It is recognized as a family medicine everywhere.

CAUTION—When you ask your druggist, grocer or dealer for Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey be sure you get the genuine. It's the only absolutely pure medicinal malt whiskey and is sold in sealed bottles only—never in bulk. Look for the trade-mark the "Old Chemist" on the label, and make sure the seal over the cork is unbroken. Price $1. Write Dr. R. Curran, Consulting Physician, for a free illustrated medical booklet and free advice. Duffy Malt Whiskey Co., Rochester, N. Y.

of San Pedro
the government has planned transportation
and men.

He stated that Metcalf had wired to H. B. Ainsworth of Redondo saying: "The Atlantic fleet has been ordered to San Pedro owing to superior harbor and facilities for handling visitors in small boats. Owing to the large number of people expected to visit the ships the latter becomes a serious consideration."

Gen. Wankowski stated that in reply to that wire C. H. Burnett, president of the Redondo Chamber of Commerce, yesterday telegraphed Metcalf as follows:

> You wrote Ainsworth December 26, saying you intended to order Atlantic fleet to visit the various ports of Southern California. Our people relied on this assurance and have made extensive preparations for entertainment. There will be great disappointment and injustice if the plan is not carried out. Our facilities for small boats are fully equal to those at San Pedro. Dayton's squadron anchored here satisfactorily. Many thousands will be disappointed in visiting the ships unless it is divided among the Los Angeles ports, so as to use all the transportation lines and boat landings to accommodate the crowds coming from the entire Southwest.

The importance of Los Angeles taking up energetically the movement to follow out the plan for the distribution of the ships, after they have arrived at their destination in San Pedro harbor, was strongly urged by Mayor Harper, Gen. Wankowski, Joseph Scott, Col. J. B. Neville, Perry W. Weidner, F. J. Zeehandelaar and M. H. Flint. On motion it was ordered that a telegram be sent to the Secretary of the Navy, Rear-Admiral Evans and Senators Flint and Perkins, urging that Admiral Evans make San Pedro the official destination of his fleet, distributing the ships later at the four neighboring ports of San Pedro, Santa Monica Bay, Long Beach and Redondo, and that the ships remain here at least four full days.

E. P. Clark and C. H. Burnett thanked the committee for its prompt action, the former stating that Gov. Gillett had already telegraphed the authorities in Washington to the same effect.

Secretary Wiggins earlier in the day sent strong telegrams on behalf of the Chamber of Commerce, urging that Los Angeles be not slighted and that its plans be respected.

Secretary Zeehandelaar, on behalf of the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association, immediately after the meeting, secured action and sent a telegram in line with that of the Fleet Committee.

In discussing finances, Mayor Harper stated that $10,000 additional must be subscribed to carry out the programme arranged, and F. J. Zeehandelaar declared that considerably more than $10,000 will be needed. Less than a month remains to obtain this, and to secure quick action Chairman W. D. Woolwine was authorized to supplement the work of the volunteer solicitors by the employment of canvassers to cover certain difficult territory.

The committees of citizens who will undertake to raise more money for the Fleet Committee and their various branches of the work are as follows:

J. P. Burns and C. M. Staub, boot and shoe trade; C. C. Desmond and H. W. Frank, men's furnishings, hatters; John Luckenbach and S. Nordlinger, jewelers; J. M. Schneider and L. Isaacs, dry goods and clothing; John S. Mitchell, W. M. Garland and Harry Loomis, hotels; Clarence Drown and Oliver Morosco, theaters; W. F. Ball and A. Greenewald, cigars and billiard halls; Col. George M. Black, O. E. Farish, Mr. Andrews and Robert Marsh, real estate; George M. Munger, Jr. (to select his own committee,) laundries; J. F. Salyer and George Birkel, music dealers; Sherman Pease and E. J. Brent, furniture men; F. N. Drake and H. G. Dean, pharmacies; Louis M. Cole (to select his own committee,) produce and commission men.

The Committee on Entertainment of Officers met immediately after the adjournment of the conference at the Mayor's office. Gen. Adna R. Chaffee presided.

Joseph W. Scott urged that as the banquet will provide for the entertainment of sixty naval officers and the ball for 250 additional officers, this will still leave 200 officers receiving no attention. It was decided to arrange entertainment for these 200 officers, the feature of which probably will be a fine automobile excursion extending from the beach to the city out through Alhambra, with luncheon at Pasadena and views of Hollywood and the Soldiers' Home on the return trip.

Scott next moved that a committee go to San Diego and personally deliver the invitations to the banquet and ball to Admiral Evans and his officers.

This resulted in the assurance that Gen. Adna R. Chaffee will personally greet his friend, Rear-Admiral Evans, on behalf of Los Angeles. Gen. Chaffee was made chairman of a special committee to go to San Diego and present the invitations, the committee including also Col. J. B. Neville, who is a cousin of Mrs. Robley D. Evans, Lieut. Randolph H. Miner, Gen. Robert Wankowski and Joseph Scott.

FROM ALL PARTS OF EARTH.

Bewildering Array of World Attractions to Be Offered at Shriner Charity Circus.

Among the host of people who have volunteered their services for the Shriners' Charity Circus are a score of famous troupes, members of which are Shriners, from all parts of the earth.

There will be the Siegrist Neapolitans, credited with being the greatest midair gymnasts in the world; the Goldin troupe of ten Russian dancers; the Ishikawa troupe of acrobats; Ottokar Eartik, ballet master, and his peerless Austrian dancers; "Three Tybells," sensational aerialists; the Jeunesse Doree troupe of expert fencers and musicians from the Royal Circus, Munich; La Nole, Melnotte and La Nole, who perform upon a slender silver thread high in the air; the Ahern family, equilibrists; the Great Fowlers, gymnastic marvels; Vane and De Clairville, wire walkers; the Weydts, aerial artists; Paul Ackerman, equilibrist, and Mlle. Ethelea, dainty queen of the flying trapeze.

These are only a few of the attractions that the Shriners will offer at Praeger Park during the week beginning April 6.

ORPHEUS CLUB'S CHARITY.

Arrangements have been made whereby the Orpheus Club is to give a concert on the evening of the 24th inst., at the Auditorium for the benefit of the Associated Charities and Bethlehem Institution, both of which, it is reported, are urgently in need of funds. With the exception of possibly the rent, it is assured by those in charge of the affair that there will be no expenses and that the entire proceeds will go to the organizations named. The Orpheus Club, which is composed of about fifty men singers, gave a concert recently at Simpson Auditorium and won much praise.

VOICELESS FROM SURPRISE.

Mother Thinks She Sees Son, Long Missing, on Car, but Is Unable to Call to Him.

H. O. Potter, who disappeared from Salt Lake about two years ago, is being sought by the local police. Potter is 21 years old.

Several days ago, while coming to Los Angeles, his mother, Mrs. S. E. Dixon, of Lawndale, thought she saw him on a Redondo car. She was so startled that when she tried to call to him her voice failed her.

NEWS REPORTS FROM CORRESPONDENTS OF THE TIMES.

LIKE AN AUTO.

TROLLEY OFF, OFF TO STAY.

THAT IS PROJECT HATCHING IN PASADENA.

La Canyada Man Shows Models and Maps for a Railroad to Go By Way of the Devil's Gate on the Old La Canyada Grade—May Sutton in Defeated Team in Tennis Match.

Office of The Times, No. 26 S. Raymond Ave.

PASADENA, March 15.—According to plans now forming an attempt will be made to abandon the trolley as a means of street railway power here.

D. H. Potter of La Cañada has opened an office in the Chamber of Commerce of this city where he is showing models of cars and road plans for a road to go by way of Devil's Gate on the old La Cañada grade. The feature of interest is the adoption of two revolving discs in connection with a third rail laid in the middle of the track in order to gain power to climb steep grades.

These revolving discs are so set that they can act as a safety brake. They can be clamped to the middle rail so as to become rigid.

Prior to the recent money stringency Potter announced that he had sufficient funds to finance the undertaking, but now the promoters are attempting to carry the project through by selling stock. The mechanism of the car is similar to that used in automobiles.

HIGH SCHOOL DEFEATED.

With a wooden-legged pitcher in the box, South Pasadena defeated the local High School by a score of 6 to 5 at baseball yesterday afternoon at the Raymond grounds.

TENNIS TOURNAMENT.

In the mixed tennis doubles at the Country Club courts yesterday, B. O. Bruce and Thomas Bundy defeated Miss May Sutton and A. P. Way in the finals and received as prizes two cut-glass, silver-mounted decanters. In the preliminaries the two couples defeated Miss Florence Sutton and S. M. Sinsabaugh and Mrs. Elizabeth Farquhar and L. M. Freeman. The match was followed by a leap-year dinner and dance for sixty guests at the clubhouse.

CALLED TO EVANSTON.

Rev. Malcolm J. McLeod, pastor of the Presbyterian Church in this city, on Friday received an urgent call to take the church of his faith at Evanston, Ill., at a salary of $6000 per annum, the same as he is receiving here. Mr. McLeod was taken completely by surprise when he received this offer through a letter delivered by a committee of the church. He has taken the matter under advisement.

ANNANDALE BEATS REDLANDS.

In the return match with Redlands yesterday, the Annandale golf team won on its home ground by a score of 21 to 8. Fourteen players competed on each team.

The most extensive and exquisite private collection of real hand-made Swiss lace work ever displayed to public view in the United States or elsewhere will be on exhibition at 181 East Colorado St., Pasadena, for a week commencing Saturday morning, March 14, at nine o'clock. Admission 25c.

WHAT IS TRUE TUNA?

Avalon Sportsmen and College President Disagree—"Three Six" Is Born.

AVALON, March 14.—General satisfaction prevails here among the members of the Tuna and Light Tackle clubs, owing to the fact that the classification of Dr. David Starr Jordan conflicts with the regulations for this season's prizes. "Japanese tuna, so called," said a well-known member of the Light Tackle Club, "will be recognized as true tunas, but the albacore, which was named 'thunnus alalonge,' will only be considered as albacore and not 'longfin tuna.'"

NEW ANGLING CLUB.

Comprising six of the oldest anglers of the Tuna and Light Tackle clubs, a third organization has sprung into existence with ideals which far surpass those of any other angling body in Southern California. No buttons or other prizes will be given for catches. The movement is purely one of "conscientious piscatorial sportsmanship." The new club is known as the "Three Six," and has for its charter members, Thomas McD. Potter, Lafayette P. Streeter, Prof. Charles F. Holder, E. H. Brewster, Gilmore Sharp and Thomas S. Manning.

A six ounce rod and a six-strand line is prescribed by the new organization and only a catch of yellowtail will entitle an angler to membership. The club colors are green and gold and bear the monograms "C. C." At the end of the season Mr. Potter will present the club with a silver loving cup and the winner will be among those nominated for president if he desires that office. "More fish, less sport," is the motto of the Three Six.

EXIT "GAB PEDDLERS."

At a meeting of merchants, last evening, it was decided that it would be advisable to withdraw solicitors from Srescent avenue, in consideration for the efforts which have been made by the boatmen who desire to restore old-time conditions. No "gab peddlers" could be seen upon the waterfront today. The decision affects restaurants, hotels and rooming-houses.

A white sea-bass, weighing fifty-five pounds, was caught this morning by one of the seine men. This is the first fish of this species which has been captured here this season.

L. W. Hill and wife are guests at the Metropole for several days. Mr. Hill is president of the Northern Pacific Railroad, and both he and his wife have secured Light Tackle Club buttons for catches made while out with Capt. J. Gardner, in the launch Spread Eagle.

R. A. Smith and wife are also quartered at the Metropole. Mr. Smith is Mayor of St. Paul, Minn.

COVINA.

COVINA, March 14.—Former Gov. W. T. Thornton and wife of New Mexico, spent Friday at the home of J. W. Riggins.

Mr and Mrs. W. W. Nuzum are entertaining the latter's uncle, Capt. W. J. Eshenbaugh of Portland, Or.

Rev. Robert J. Burdette and wife were dinner guests of Mr. and Mrs. E. U. Smith recently.

There has been an active movement in orange groves here during the past week. The following sales are reported: Miller & Emery to F. D. Gaebke, five acres on Citrus and Rowland avenues; Aschenbrenner Brothers to A. R. Evans, five acres, corner of Hollenbeck and Workman avenues; George Covert, proprietor of Hotel Vendome, a five-acre grove, east of the city, to D. W. McDonald of Los Angeles; J. N. Banthrum, a five-acre grove on Orange avenue to Axel Muir of Los Angeles; E. W. Scott, a five-acre grove, near Glendora, to W. H. Whisler of this city.

Twenty-five thousand dollars was refused by J. M. Smith for his ten-acre orange grove on San Bernardino road.

MYSTERY OF HILLS.

GHASTLY FIND IN THE CANYON.

DECOMPOSED CORPSE DISCOVERED ABOVE MONROVIA.

Los Angeles Man and His Boys While on a Tramp Through the Mountains Come Across the Remains—City Marshal Will Start Early This Morning to Get Body.

MONROVIA, March 14.—Up in one of the reaches of Clamshell Cañon, northwest of this city, a much-decomposed corpse was found this afternoon. There can be no identification till tomorrow.

The discovery was made by H. E. P. Werdin and his two sons of Los Angeles. They were out here for the day, and made the find while on a tramp through the mountains.

It was reported to City Marshal Miller, who will start at 7 o'clock in the morning to get the remains. The body is described as clothed in very good raiment.

FOREST FOR HILLS.

Extensive Tree Planting Arranged for the Slopes Lying Back of Whittier.

WHITTIER, March 14.—What promises to be the beginning of the improvement of the foothills back of this city is under way. This is the extensive planting of eucalyptus trees on what are now the treeless sides of the hills. The land now being planted is owned by the Home Oil Company, and the work is being done under direction of the superintendent, Alva Starbuck. The novel feature of the work is that no water will be given the tiny trees, even when they are first planted in their new location. More than seven thousand blue gums have been planted by the Home Oil Company this season, and of this number the company expects fully 90 per cent. to grow. If this record, or one approaching it, is made the same company will next year duplicate this season's planting. Another concern to try the same experiment is the Whittier Crude Oil Company, which is now preparing its hillside land for similar planting.

Fire yesterday destroyed the Wagoner house in the Rincon district. The dwelling was a large one, only recently completed, and was a total loss, the tank and windmill burning first and shutting off all possibility of successfully fighting the flames. The home was not insured, and the loss is stated to have been about $4000.

VERY MUCH IN EARNEST.

Ocean Park's Prohibition Campaign Will Start Friday—Sunday Rest League Organizes.

OCEAN PARK, March 14.—The prohibition campaign will start at Carpenter Hall Friday evening, when Ellsworth Leonardson will deliver an address under the auspices of the W.C.T.U. The call has been issued for an election at which the liquor license question will be settled for the next few months at least, and there are evidences of a spirited campaign. The temperance people are very much in earnest and will put forth every effort to carry the election.

WANT SUNDAY OBSERVED.

The Sunday Rest League has completed its organization by the election of the following officers: Rev. W. M. Perry, president; W. A. Davis, secretary; Rev. L. H. Humphreys, treasurer, and W. H. Slack and W. A. Wright members of the Executive Committee. Three other members will be added to this committee. The organization will coöperate with the State League in attempting to secure the passage of laws for keeping Sunday holy.

SOLDIERS' HOME.

SOLDIERS' HOME, March 14.—Maj. J. W. Wadsworth, president of the Board of Managers, N.H.D.V.S., and Col. W. E. Elwell, inspector-general and medical director, arrived at this branch this morning. Without loss of time the latter proceeded to inspect the books of the adjutant's office. After luncheon members and clothing in barracks occupied their attention. At 3:30 o'clock inspection in full uniform in line took place. The latter action was regarded by members as very considerate, because veterans are restricted to the home grounds until this general inspection shall have taken place. Afterward they are at liberty to go and come, as usual.

The time of the visitors is limited, and the work in the treasurer's office and quartermaster's department and hospital will be rushed through between now and Monday evening, and on Wednesday they will leave. The president of the board, Maj. Wadsworth, is only visiting the home in order to become familiar with its affairs.

There have been 3000 Australian gum trees just set out by Farmer Gidley. The most of them have been planted on a bluff which extends from the bakery north to Sepulveda Cañon. Two thousand more will be added to these next fall.

Out of the limited post fund of the home an entertainment is promised for next Wednesday evening, by the Gordon minstrels. On Thursday evening the regular semi-monthly concert, by the Home Orchestra, will take place.

A schedule of 400 new books, the latest in fiction and miscellaneous works, has been prepared for purchase for the coming quarter.

VENICE.

VENICE, March 14.—The Abbot Kinney company has let the contract for the construction of an aquarium. The structure, which is to be located behind the breakwater, will be 50x150 feet. It will be supplied with both salt and fresh water, hot and cold, and will afford every opportunity for the study of sea life. Nowhere on the Pacific Coast has provision been made for carrying on such study, and there is a prospect that either State or nation will aid the enterprise.

FOR FOREIGNERS.

GREATER SKILL URGENT NEED.

VOCATIONAL TRAINING FAVORED BY Y.M.C.A. SPEAKER.

Sacramento Invites State Convention to Meet There Next Year. Choice Left to the State Committee. Assignments to Various Churches in Long Beach Today.

LONG BEACH, March 14.—At the business session of the Y.M.C.A. State convention this morning, Sacramento invited the body to that city next year. It was the only invitation extended and the selection was left in the hands of the State Committee. Subscriptions for the State work were taken up by Secretary H. J. McCoy of San Francisco. By associations $1515 was subscribed and $1414.10 by individuals. There were $10.66 in cash and $90 subscriptions given to wipe out the 1907 deficit, making a grand total of $3033.91.

Assignments of general secretaries to the various churches Sunday were made, including two beach services in the early afternoon. On recommendation of the Nominating Committee the following Executive Committee and State incorporation trustees were chosen: Executive Committee, W. H. Waste, Berkeley; J. Q. Anderson, Fresno; Dr. W. W. Roblee, Riverside; Dr. C. N. Cooper, Campbell; W. G. Alexander, San José; J. D. Radford, Los Angeles; Chauncey H. Dunn, Sacramento; A. L. Adams, Oakland; Silas Mack, Monterey; C. C. Chapman, Fullerton. Trustees of State incorporation, C. E. Rumsey, Riverside; A. B. Cass, Los Angeles; H. J. McCoy, San Francisco; G. W. Marston, San Diego; J. Q. Anderson, Fresno; C. M. Campbell, Sacramento; W. G. Alexander, San José; J. L. Barker, Berkeley; George T. Hayley, Oakland.

At a meeting of the State Executive Committee this afternoon at Hotel Virginia, the following State officers were elected: Chairman of State Committee, George W. Marston, San Diego; recording secretary, H. J. McCoy, San Francisco; treasurer, W. H. Wallace, Long Beach.

J. B. Springer, general secretary at Long Beach, was the speaker this morning his subject being the industrial problem. He brought out the point that one of the greatest needs of the present day is for training for skilled labor. Seventy per cent. of immigrants are unskilled laborers, emphasizing the necessity of the Y.M.C.A. taking steps toward the establishment of some method of vocational training for these foreigners. This talk brought on a discussion of the immigration question itself, led by Lloyd B. Austin of Los Angeles, an educational director of the association.

This afternoon was a half holiday and guests were given sight-seeing trips and a boat ride over the inner harbor.

Tonight there were addresses by F. A. McCarl, on the "Enlisted Men of Our Army and Navy," and Dr. George J. Fisher, on "The Physical Department."

The convention will close Sunday evening. In the morning the pulpits of the several churches will be occupied by various secretaries. In the afternoon, Dr. George J. Fisher will address a mass meeting for boys, and Rev. J. Q. A. Henry a mass meeting for men. Sunday evening, at the Auditorium, a farewell service will be held, with an address by Rev. William MacCormick of Pasadena, on "Each Man's Life a Plan of God."

SEASHORE NEWS NOTES.

A private dispatch received here late this evening from San Diego announces that the cruisers Washington, Tennessee, California, South Dakota and Albany will visit Long Beach, arriving here on Tuesday, March 17. Steps will be taken at once by the Chamber of Commerce for their entertainment.

The grocery of Reed & Vetter, at Fourth and Alamitos, was entered by burglars last night by means of a pass key and the cash register was robbed of several dollars in small change. Nothing else was missed. Reports were made also to the police of the theft of three bicycles, but the thieves were seen, and one of the wheels recovered, after a hard chase across vacant lots, the thieves escaping.

The Asbestos company is jubilant tonight over the prospects shown in the fifteen-inch well being sunk on the company's property to develop oil or gas. The well is down 242 feet, and is passing through a strata of gravel, the drills bringing up chunks of asphaltum. The other well still continues to flow about 3000 feet of gas each day, together with an artesian flow of pure water.

Mrs. W. P. Morey today received a letter from her husband, who left home four weeks ago, and whose continued silence alarmed the family. Morey is in Portland, Or., in business, and his health has greatly improved.

An order was served today on Dr. J. M. Holden, guardian of the Wade sisters, citing him to produce his wards in Judge Rives's court, Tuesday, March 24, and show cause why they should not be restored to competency.

James Buchanan, a fourteen-year-old boy who ran away from his home in Los Angeles, was picked up on the beach last night by Officer Barker, and returned to his parents today.

The ostrich farm troubles still occupy the attention of the stockholders. The latest move is the resignation of W. H. Huff, Duke Miles and Paul Ussher as directors and the election of W. H. Barker, W. S. Bonly and E. S. Brice in their stead.

The many new accounts being opened in the First National Bank, the chief bank of Long Beach, indicates that the city's population is still going ahead.

TRY-OUT FOR ORATORS.

CLAREMONT, March 14.—The annual home oratorical contest will be held here Monday evening in Holmes Hall auditorium. Six men of college grade are entered for it, in which first place means $10 and second place $5. The winner will also earn the privilege of representing the college in the intercollegiate oratorical contest, which is to be held at the University of Southern California in April. Prof. M. G. Frampton has been giving the aspirants careful coaching, and a close contest is expected. The speakers are to be: William B. Himrod, '08; Ellwood Munger, '08; Howard Bissell, '08; Richard Seaver, '08; W. C. Fankhauser, '09; and Raymond McConnell, '10.

The Pomona College Debating Society is planning to hold a pseudo-Republican National Convention March 18, at which the young orators will imitate the doings of the big convention. Taft, Hughes, Cannon and Fairbanks are to be nominated, while at the end an attempt will be made to stampede the convention for Roosevelt.

URGING FOR FUTURE.

BUILDINGS HANG ON THE BONDS.

INTEREST IN WILMINGTON KEEN OVER RESULT.

Proposition to Incur Debt of Hundred Thousand Dollars for the Dredging of a Ship Canal Is to Be Voted on by the Electors of the Municipality Wednesday.

WILMINGTON, March 14.—There is keen interest here in the result of the special election of next Wednesday, when the electors of this city will vote on a proposition to incur a bonded indebtedness of $100,000 to dredge a ship canal from Wilmington's water front to the government turning basin. The main channel is to be 100 feet in width. A smaller turning basin, 400 feet wide and 500 feet in length, is to be constructed on the Wilmington side, between Canal and C streets. On the west end of this basin, 500 feet of wharves are to be built, for which an appropriation of $35,000 is provided in the amount of bonds to be issued. A fill of thirty acres is to be made, along the line of the channel which will be leased for industrial sites.

The future value of all this to Wilmington is one of the arguments which is influencing votes in favor of the bonds. The thirty acres of made land is estimated to be worth for commercial and factory purposes $300,000, while wharfage rentals, based on prices charged by the Southern Pacific for wharfage room at San Pedro, would yield an income to the city sufficient to pay the accrued interest on the bonds and the installment for each year and then leave a balance sufficient to meet the entire expenses of the city for the year. This is the estimate given by prominent business men who are interested in harbor improvement.

It is considered a foregone conclusion here that that bonds will carry, as apparently no opposition has developed in sufficient strength to make the issue doubtful.

On the result of the election on Wednesday will depend the erection of several buildings at once, among them being two business blocks on Rebecca street. One of these will be a seven-story storeroom building and another of four rooms. The promoters of these improvements are George W. Van Sycle of Los Angeles and Harry Barndollar of Long Beach. They report that already several different lines of business have spoken for room. Mr. Blinn of the Blinn-Rehrian Co. was here a few days ago to look over sites for yard and mill, and practically settled upon a location dependent on the dredging of the harbor.

Municipal politics have been made to keep a subordinate place in the attention of the people until after the bond election. This has been by mutual agreement of the opposing factions, but each has its war equipments burnished and ready for a charge as soon as the results of the election are announced.

On the Citizens ticket are nominees for trustees, thus: Dan Mulherron, a contractor; P. Connell, manager of the Sea Side Water Company at this point; H. Kolkhoest, a rancher living in the German settlement, and E. Schedin, incumbent. For City Clerk, Postmaster Gammarcy has been nominated and for City Treasurer, the present treasurer, John Thomas, proprietor of the Wilmington saloon, and for marshal, Ed Breen, merchant.

The Progressive party is an entirely new organization. The nominees for trustees are J. M. Brennan, proprietor of the Anti-Rubber Tire Company, and president of the Wilmington Dock Company; E. Opp, a rancher and director in the dock company; N. F. Breen, rancher and contractor, and J. A. Silver, carpenter. For treasurer, Dan A. Fohl, clerk in the Wilmington Bank, and for city marshal, Ed Breen.

Two independent candidates have been announced, P. C. Peterson for Treasurer and D. R. Words for City Clerk, and the incumbent. In the line-up of the factions there seems to be no real issue, only to get the offices. Neither party can be designated as Banning or Southern Pacific men, as has been the case with previous line-ups. It will be simply a choice of the men who are to handle the hundred thousand dollars and push the city on.

ACCIDENTAL DROWNING.

Verdict of Coroner's Jury at Santa Monica at Inquest Over Remains of Alaska Mining Man.

SANTA MONICA, March 14.—Death from accidental drowning was the verdict rendered by the Coroner's jury at the inquest over Eugene Sperry of Nome, Alaska, whose body was found on the beach near the foot of Montana avenue, last evening. There was nothing to indicate foul play, an examination of the wound in the eye showing that it resulted from contact with gravel on the beach while the body was being tossed by the waves. The death may have been suicidal, but there was no evidence to this effect. The generally accepted belief is that Sperry came to the beach for a change and rest, fully expecting to use his return-trip ticket to Los Angeles.

Members of the Los Angeles Aerie of Eagles, who came here to identify the body, distinctly remembered the man as having been an occasional visitor to the lodge sessions, but knew nothing as to his place of residence or family connections. They had understood that he had at one time been one of Nome's richest business men. That he was a sufferer from insomnia was proven by a prescription found in his pocket. This was that of a mild sleep-producing potion, and had come from a Hayes Valley pharmacy in San Francisco. The body will be taken to Los Angeles tomorrow, where the Eagles will conduct the funeral.

STILL NEGOTIATING.

Manager Richmond of the Santa Monica baseball team of the Winter League is still conducting negotiations with the Abbot Kinney Company with a view to transferring the local games to the Venice cricket ground, where it is planned to arrange a fine diamond, fence the court and built a commodious grand stand. The change contemplates a series of games with semi-professional teams of the Southern California cities throughout the entire summer season.

Prospecting is in progress in the vicinity of the smoking hill near Pulga Cañon, and the indications are that active operations will soon be commenced there in an endeavor to develop the oil vein that is believed to underlie the mountain. Robert F. Jones, owner of the property, has gone over it with S. J. Eginton, field superintendent of the Clark Oil Company, and the conclusion reached was that oil would be struck at no great depth.

SANTA MONICA NOTES.

The Associated Charities has entered upon a campaign to raise $1000 for the relief of the needy during the ensuing year. A canvass of the city is to be made for subscriptions.

An interesting programme is being arranged for St. Patrick's evening at Columbia Hall. The oration will be delivered by Rev. Philip Williams of Kansas City.

The Santa Monica High School baseball team defeated the Hollywood High School nine here this afternoon. The score was 9 to 3.

Catcher Lewis has left the Santa Monica team of the Winter League and is now playing with Oakland.

H. Waterson is a seaside visitor from Frederick, Okla.

Mrs. J. H. Hutsel of Corcoran is the guest of seaside relatives.

Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Hartman, who have been spending the winter here, have departed for their home in Muskegon, Mich.

NAVAL TIE.

BROTHER EAGER TO SEE CAPTAIN.

EXPECTANT THRILL HAS LABORER IN SAN PEDRO.

Workman on the Harbor City Docks and Commanding Officer of the Battleship Connecticut Both Sons of the Same Parents—Cordial Relations Maintained Between Them.

SAN PEDRO, March 14.—In San Pedro there is one man who is looking forward to the coming visit of the battleship squadron of Rear-Admiral Evans with more than usual interest and expectancy. He is Alex Osterhaus, a longshoreman, and a brother of Capt. Hugo Osterhaus, commanding the magnificent flagship Connecticut.

While his distinguished brother treads the bridge of the flagship, resplendent in gold braid, and directs the movements of the flower of Uncle Sam's navy, Alex Osterhaus, a plain, blunt, reserved man, daily earns a livelihood for himself and family by handling lumber on the water front at San Pedro.

Although their stations in life are widely divergent, the two brothers are most cordial and considerate, one to another. Alex Osterhaus and his family receive letters regularly from their distinguished relative, and are very proud that the honor of heading the great fleet on its remarkable voyage has fallen to the lot of Capt. Osterhous. Alex Osterhaus, the day laborer, is looking forward to pleasant visits to the Connecticut as the guest of his brother during the stay of the squadron in these waters.

HARBOR CITY DRIFT.

A joint meeting of the Wilmington and San Pedro Chambers of Commerce was held here last night, which was largely attended by citizens and officials of the two municipalities. Improvements that would tend to the mutual growth and advancement of both cities were extensively discussed. Plans were formulated for the improvement of streets and roads between Wilmington and San Pedro before the arrival of Rear-Admiral Evans's fleet. The matter of the consolidation of Wilmington and San Pedro was taken up, and received unanimous approval. It is probable that the preliminary steps for consolidation will be taken in a few weeks.

The Citizens' Committee recently appointed for the reception and entertainment of Rear-Admiral Evans's fleet are rapidly perfecting plans through sub-committees. Preparations for elaborate decorations have been completed, and other details for handling the large number of visitors that will come are being worked out. Competitive contests for valuable prizes on the waters of the inner harbor, to be contested for by men, from the various battleships, are being arranged.

Frank Garbutt and family, with a party of friends, left here today on the handsome power launch Skidbaldnir for San Diego. The party will later visit the fleet at Magdalena Bay.

Sixty-five boys, members of the Long Beach Baptist Church Sunday-school, in charge of E. C. Barker, their teacher, arrived here this morning and spent the day picnicking on the rocks at Point Firmin.

MOTORMAN SAVES CHILD.

Prompt Action in Stopping Sierra Madre Car Averts Killing of Infant.

SIERRA MADRE, March 14.—The prompt action of Motorman Mulholland, on the 8:10 o'clock city-bound car, averted what might have proved a serious accident this morning. After rounding the curve near the Covina Junction on the Pasadena short cut-off, the car came upon a little Mexican child who had crawled out on the tracks. The child looked like a bundle of old rags, and the car was almost upon it before the motorman discovered what the object was and brought the car to a quick stop, and picking up the child carried it to an adjoining yard, from which it had evidently crawled. The motorman was highly commended by the passengers for his prompt action, as the car was going at considerable speed on its private right of way.

OPPOSES SHADE TREES.

Forester Harper, in an address here some time ago, mapped out a plan for the beautifying of the city streets. Several organizations have taken the matter up, purchasing shade trees and arranging for parkways. On Grand View avenue, between Mountain Trail avenue and Cañon streets arrangements were made for the planting of Catalina cherry trees along this beautiful driveway, but one of the City Trustees, a property owner here, is opposing the improvement on the ground that it cuts off the view of the valley. It was this same attitude that caused the destruction of the beautiful trees that lined Baldwin avenue. As the majority are in favor of these shade trees, they will insist upon their rights to plant suitable trees in front of their premises.

FOOTHILL SLOPE ITEMS.

E. W. Camp, counsel for the Santa Fé Railway Company, has resigned as City Trustee. Many petitions are out by applicants desirous of filling the vacancy. The Civic League has taken the matter up and wishes to name a candidate.

It is now a misdemeanor to cut down, dig up, molest or interfere with any ornamental tree, plant or shrubbery on the city streets.

A delegation from here was entertained by J. H. Wright at the opening of the Republican League of Los Angeles County. Mr. Wright, who is now secretary of the Republican committee of Los Angeles, was one of the first secretaries of the league.

SOUTH PASADENA.

SOUTH PASADENA, March 14.—The South Pasadena First National Bank held a reception in its new bank building on the corner of Mission street and Diamond avenue, this afternoon. The South Pasadena Savings Bank also entertained its patrons in the new quarters in the same building on the Diamond-avenue frontage. These rooms are elegantly finished and furnished.

Tomorrow evening there will be a union meeting of the South Pasadena churches in the Methodist Episcopal church to protest against any letting down on the question of prohibition. Rev. C. J. Hall will be the principal speaker.

The home of Mr. Vestal, on Synden street, is under quarantine. Physicians are not agreed as to the disease afflicting one of his children, but it is supposed to be scarlet fever or measles.

MONTEBELLO.

MONTEBELLO, March 14.—The Friends of Montebello will dedicate their recently completed church here on Sunday. The service will be held at 3 o'clock p.m., under direction of the pastor, Rev. B. F. Farquhar. Rev. Andrew Mitchell of Long Beach will deliver the dedicatory sermon, among the other ministers who will be present being Thomas Armstrong of Whittier, President Thomas Newlin of Whittier College, and Miss Percy Richards, pastor of the Rivera church. Mrs. Dilwin C. Andrews of Whittier will also take part in the programme.

OPPOSED TO WAR.

Peace Society of Southern California Permanently Organized in This City Yesterday.

The Southern California Peace Society met yesterday afternoon in this city and formed a permanent organization, the following officers being elected: President, W. V. Coffin, Whittier; vice-president, T. H. White, Pomona; secretary, Robert C. Root, Huntington Beach; Executive Committee, Rev. A. S. Phelps, Los Angeles; Andrew Mitchell, Long Beach; Rev. Hugh K. Walker, Los Angeles.

Dr. Coffin presided at yesterday's meeting, and in one of his short talks said:

"We are fast becoming ashamed of taking human life. It is no new thing to us (the Friends.) In our little church it has been our distinctive doctrine all along, but I'm glad we can't claim it now."

The principal address was made by Dr. George A. Gates, president of Pomona College. Dr. Gates advocated "beating our swords into plowshares" and erecting great monuments out of our ponderous guns, but his admiration for the brawn of "de champ" prize fighter seemed to indicate that an invincible front was yet a good peace argument. War, he said, was but preliminary to a settlement of disputes, and was therefore useless, as the settlement could easily be arrived at first. "Fold your arms across your breast," said Dr. Gates, "and say: 'I am helpless,' and no nation on earth would touch you."

The meeting was very slimly attended, probably fifty people being present during the delivery of Dr. Gates's address, and these were largely from among the Friends of this city, Pasadena and Whittier. Less than half the number remained for the election of officers.

NOVEL SUGAR MAKING.

Local Concern Turns Out Product From Charcoal and Water—No Northern Factory.

The fact that sugar in 200 and 300-pound lots has been manufactured from charcoal and water, and may result in the establishment of a new industry, is the gist of a statement made last night by Dr. D. F. McGraw of San Francisco, who is at the Westminster. Dr. McGraw is a member of the firm of Wayne & McGraw, brokers, who are fiscal agents for the National Sugar Company. The concern has a small factory at Twenty-ninth and Hooper streets, and C. P. Stewart, president of the company and inventor of the process, has been conducting the successful experiments.

McGraw denied the rumor that his concern has erected or plans to erect a factory in San José. He explained the process by the statement that the chemical analysis of cane sugar showed twenty-two parts of hydrogen, twelve parts of carbon and eleven parts of water. To make sugar from charcoal and water, Dr. McGraw explained, requires but the addition of water raised to the eleventh "degree," or hydrogen twenty-two parts and oxygen eleven parts, to which is added twelve parts of carbon. The method by which this is accomplished is the secret held by the company.

class condition, and is shipping well, but if the warm weather continues it will be necessary to ice the cars.

The Women's Christian Temperance Union yesterday elected the following officers: President, Mrs. I. W. Bradshaw; vice-president, Mrs. Carrie M. Hersey; recording secretary, Mrs. J. W. Montigel; corresponding secretary, Mrs. B. H. Jacobs; treasurer, Mrs. J. H. Allen.

Articles of incorporation were filed today for the Kingsbury Fruits Company, a concern devoted to the growing and preserving of fruits in Redlands. The capital stock is placed at $100,000 and $500 has been subscribed. The incorporators are H. P. D. Kingsbury, J. H. Fisher, E. S. Graham, C. S. McWhorter and C. M. Brown. The company will specialize upon orange marmalade, and will also preserve strawberries and other small fruits.

A number of Redlands people are anticipating spring vacations in the Hawaiian Islands. Mr. and Mrs. W. N. Moore left for Honolulu more than a week ago. About ten days ago Miss Mary Denison left for a trip through the South Sea Islands and Hawaii. Tomorrow Miss Ruth Lyon of this city and Miss Marion Kinney will leave for a two months' visit with a former Wellesley College friend.

La Casa Loma guests: Mr. and Mrs. Walter S. Hill, San Diego; Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Willey, Plainsburg, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Bigelow, Miss Elizabeth Bigelow, Cleveland; Mr. and Mrs. William C. Baker, Mrs. Thomas Chester, Miss Lydia Rumsey, Mrs. Frederick Paine, Santa Barbara; Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. M. B. Smith, Pittsburgh; Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Henely, Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Henely, Cincinnati; Mr. and Mrs. F. Rogers, New York; Mr. and Mrs. D. S. Glidden, Miss Coughran, Sioux Falls.

NOTABLE CONVENTION.

Prominent Men to Address Fruit Growers at Riverside—Preservation of Forests Assured.

RIVERSIDE, March 14.—Keen interest has been aroused in the State Fruit Growers' Convention, which is to be held here from April 29 to May 4. A number of notable men will be present and it is the purpose of the committee in charge to make this the best gathering of the kind ever held.

Dr. Milton Whitney, chief of the Bureau of Soils, Department of Agriculture, has been invited. If he finds it impossible to come, his chief assistant, Mr. Schreiner, may be sent in his stead. Luther Burbank has also been invited and may deliver an address.

J. H. Reed, Riverside Tree Warden, will read a paper on "The Proper Handling of Citrus Fruit," which will give the principal results of the experiments of G. Harold Powell, the government expert who is spending the winter here. Mr. Powell will lead in the discussion. C. C. Teague will lecture on "The Lemon."

"The Modern Citrus Packing-house, Its Construction and Operation," is a topic which has not yet been assigned.

"Date Culture in Southern California and Arizona" will be discussed by Prof. S. C. Mason of the United States Plant Industry; "The Diseases of Citrus Trees, the Prevention and Cure," will be the subject of a paper by Prof. R. E. Smith of the Whittier Pathological Laboratory; Frank Palmer of Pomona will lead the discussion on "Fertilizers and Fertilizing Citrus Orchards;" Arthur R. Briggs, president of the San Francisco Board of Trade, will read a paper on "The Use of Sulphur in Improving Our Fruit;" Dr. W. H. Wiley, chemist of the National Department of Agriculture, will talk on "Fruit Sulphuring from the Standpoint of the Department," and Prof. Jaffa, of the University of California, will lead the discussion.

An interesting feature of the convention will be a stereopticon lecture by State Horticultural Commissioner Jeffries, showing the fight waged on the white fly at Oroville and Marysville.

"The State Farm School" will be the subject of an address by Prof. George P. J. Shields; Prof. Mackey of Sacramento will give an analysis of soil; George C. Roedering of Fresno, who has had twenty-five years' experience, will tell about "Table Grapes;" R. M. Teague of San Dimas will discuss "Selection of Buds and Stocks and the Methods of Handling;" B. C. Jones of San Dimas, "Tree Pruning," and E. K. Carnes, "The State Insectary Building and the Plans for Building It."

FORESTS WILL BE PRESERVED.

Francis Cuttle, president of the Tri-Counties Reforestation Committee, returned yesterday from Washington, bringing the welcome news that the forests of Southern California will be preserved and the work of reforestation, already commenced, will be continued.

Mr. Cuttle went to the capital to urge the necessity of an appropriation to carry on reforestation. United States Forester Pinchot agreed to use his best efforts toward getting an adequate sum for the purpose, and Senator Flint, Senator Perkins and Congressman Smith promised to give the matter their indorsement.

NOT IDENTIFIED.

Man Found on Santa Barbara Wharf Died from "Natural Causes." Noted Woman Passes.

SANTA BARBARA, March 14.—A Coroner's jury, last night, returned a verdict to the effect that the man found dead yesterday on Stearns wharf "came to his death by natural causes." The body was lying near the stringpiece, with a small pile of sacks for a pillow. The arms were folded peacefully across the breast. Near by was a bottle containing the dregs of a colorless liquid which, according to the Coroner, it would not be worth expense to analyze. So far there has been no identification, although the man was recognized as one who had taken meals at a local hotel. He was between 65 and 70 years old. Only 15 cents were found in his pockets. Unless some one comes to claim the body, it will be interred in the potter's field.

PROMINENT WOMAN DEAD.

Mrs. Sarah P. Cooper, wife of Ellwood Cooper, a woman noted for her botanical research, and her deep interest in things educational, died at her home in Ellwood, yesterday afternoon, from heart disease. The funeral was held today at Ellwood. Mrs. Cooper was born in Pennsylvania, and was married there. She and her husband were members of the Society of Friends of the Quaker City. They were for a time in the West Indies, where Mr. Cooper amassed a fortune. Then returning to the States, they lived in Brooklyn, N. Y., for five years, coming to Santa Barbara in 1870. It was Mrs. Cooper who started the first college in this city. Besides the widower, she leaves two daughters, Fanny and Helen, and a son, Harry.

CAN'T EJECT HER.

A woman of the "red light" district, suffering from a nervous disease, several days ago took a cottage on West De La Guerra street. Her advent was not relished by her neighbors and they attempted to have her ousted, but her landlady refused to take action. Then the neighbors went to court about it and again were defeated. It was shown in court that the protestants, in their attempt to dislodge the not-wanted one, had even invaded her home without permission.

BASEBALL NEWS.

Oscar Chaves, manager of the Santa Barbara Baseball club and holder of a lease on Athletic Park, this city, where the locals play, and where the Portland Beavers are in training, yesterday sold his interest in the team, its franchise in the Winter League, and his lease on the park, to George E. Potter and Halsey G. Smith, both local newspaper men. Smith has played shortstop for the locals all this season. The league games are to be continued. Tomorrow afternoon they will play a double-header, the first game with the Santa Monica team, with Charlie Hall pitching; and the second with the Portlanders, with Sam Ferrias in the box.

SWIFT SHIPS FOR COAST SERVICE.

SAN FRANCISCO TO SAN DIEGO IN EIGHTEEN HOURS.

Line Will Be in Operation, It Is Said, by Time Arizona Railroad Is Completed—Liquor Licenses Refused Mining Camp—No Confetti When Fleet Comes.

SAN DIEGO, March 14.—J. D. Farrell, former president of the Pacific Coast Steamship Company, who is now at Coronado, says that the company is to run between San Francisco and this city modern boats which in speed and equipment will equal the best coastwise vessels on either this or the Atlantic Coast. He also says that the running time between the ports named will be cut to eighteen hours, and that the new service will be in operation by the time the San Diego and Arizona Railroad is completed.

A Lincoln-Roosevelt Club rally in the old Methodist Church auditorium, last evening, was addressed by M. Lissner of Los Angeles and State Senator Bell of Pasadena.

SAILORS' MINSTREL SHOW.

The minstrel troupe of the cruiser Tennessee gave a very creditable show at the Garrick, last evening, which was attended by Admiral Sebree and many of the officers and men of the warships now in port.

The police and the Council have declared that no confetti shall be used on the streets during the celebration incident to the arrival of the battleship fleet.

The Supervisors have turned down the applications of thirteen men who asked for licenses to sell liquor at the Dulzura mining camp.

VENTURA.

VENTURA, March 14.—Miss Ruth Hildreth, aged 17 years, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Hildreth of Santa Paula, died yesterday at the Bard Hospital, after an operation for appendicitis. She was brought to the hospital on Thursday. Miss Hildreth was very popular. The remains will be taken to Santa Paula for interment.

The Ventura County Central Committee met today to take preliminary steps for the campaign. Nothing further was done than to fill a vacancy or two. The suggestion to fix May 5 as the date for holding the primaries and to hold a convention May 9, to nominate a full county and legislative ticket, met with no favor, the opinion being that it would make too long a campaign. The next meeting is scheduled for April.

The will of the late Mrs. Ella Orr has been admitted to probate and Orestes Orr named as executor. It disposes of property of the value of $1000 and names the executor as sole devisee.

Sim Myers has been appointed administrator of the will of the late Cornelius Cobb, with bond at $2500. The estate is valued at $1200.

HUNTINGTON BEACH.

HUNTINGTON BEACH, March 14.—Robert C. Root, teacher in the High School, has been appointed Pacific Coast representative of the American Peace Society of Boston and will tour California, Oregon and Washington this summer in its interest. Prof. Root is secretary of the Southern California Peace Society which held its second annual meeting at Temple Auditorium, Los Angeles, yesterday.

At the meeting of Seaside Chapter No. 359, Order of the Eastern Star, this week the members enjoyed a surprise. Five grand lodge officers made an official visit when only one was expected. The visitors were: Emma Reihl, Grand Matron; Gen B. Cartwright, Grand Patron; Kate J. Willats, Grand Secretary; Alice M. Pierce and Phoebe C. Hickman, Deputy Grand Matrons.

A. L. Reed, local manager for the Huntington Beach Company has been awarded the third prize of $15 offered for the best written advertisement for State citrus fruits by the California Fruit Growers' Exchange. The competition was open to all members of the exchange.

BURN CHIEF'S IMAGE.

Indians of the Martinez Reservation Celebrate Feast of the Dead.

THERMAL, March 14.—The Feast of the Dead has just been celebrated by the Indians of the Martinez Reservation, and has been attended by Indians from the Tores and Coachella reservations. The ceremonies continued for a full week, and the climax occurred when a life-sized effigy of a deceased chieftain was burned in a huge bonfire, while the squaws shrieked out their lamentations and the bucks danced in circles around the blaze.

A carload of Thompson seedless rooted grape vines has been sent to Coachella for planting on the 200-acre ranch recently secured by the American Vineyard Company, of Fresno. The vineyard will adjoin Coachella on the east, and will lie alongside the Southern Pacific Railroad, where it will be a constant advertisement of the fertility of the Coachella Valley.

Several tracts in the Coral Reef neighborhood, on the west side of Coachella Valley, are to be set to oranges and grape fruit. D. F. Nofziger of Los Angeles, who owns a 320-acre tract in West Thermal, is having his holdings improved.

Land seekers continue to flock into the Coachella Valley, and in all the towns the hotels are taxed to accommodate the newcomers. It is estimated that at least 100 new families have settled in the valley since the first of the year. At Thermal, Coachella and Indio there has been considerable activity in the sale of town lots, while farm lands in all these localities have been changing hands at increased prices. Many new wells have been put down, and hundreds of acres of new land comes under cultivation this season.

Thayer Brothers are shipping out the first asparagus from this part of the Coachella Valley. They are making shipments to Boston, and it is bringing from 75 cents to $1.25 per pound.

People of Indio are to vote on the proposition to issue $3900 bonds for the erection of a new school building. As the railroad pays most of the tax, it it as easy guess how the election will result.

Plans are being perfected by the Thermal Chamber of Commerce to secure H. C. Everett, an artist who has been spending several months here, to paint on a large canvas a general view of the Coachella Valley, for display at the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce.

A new townsite has been opened at Durbrow, a side track about three miles below Thermal. A store building is being erected and twenty acres have been subdivided into residence lots.

Martyn B. Lehman, formerly of Pomona, has purchased a five-acre tract on the Nelson property, adjoining the town of Indio on the north, paying therefor $150 per acre, which is said to be the highest price yet paid for unimproved Coachella Valley property. Frank R. Lehman, his father, has purchased a forty-acre tract south of Indio, and will develop water and build a residence immediately.

DIFFER ON CHILES.

Canners and Growers Do not Agree on the Matter of Price for Green Hot Ones.

SANTA ANA, March 14.—The canneries are reported to be offering to contract for the present year's crop at $20 per ton for choice green chiles. The canneries require the cream of the crop only, straight, smooth and of good length. Some of the growers are holding out for $25 a ton.

At the meeting of the Central Committee of the Thirty-ninth Assembly District at Orange on March 24, Riverside and Orange counties may have some difficulty in getting together as to the basis of representation. Riverside wants the basis to be the vote cast in the last election for Senator, four years ago, which would give Riverside and Orange each eleven votes. Orange wants it to be on the basis of the vote cast at the election for Governor, which would give Riverside ten and Orange thirteen. The meeting on the 24th will set a time and place for the Senatorial convention.

The sufficiency of a complaint issued in the City Recorder's court and on which J. J. Keith, a prescription clerk, was arrested on a charge of selling whisky illegally, will be tested in the Superior Court on April 6. Today a writ of prohibition was issued to City Recorder J. A. Willson, ordering him to refrain from further proceedings in the Keith case until the Superior Court gives its order. The complaint against Keith charges that he sold whisky unlawfully, "on or before March 3, 1908." The defendant avers that the time is not specific, also that the name of the person to whom it is sold is not given. The petition for a writ of prohibition alleges that the city ordinance is unconstitutional and invalid.

J. W. Morrison, an orange rancher from Orange, has been appointed deputy State fish commissioner, with a salary of $100 a month. Morrison is a member of the Republican State Central Committee from this county.

Mrs. Emily Squires, wife of S. B. Squires, died this morning at her home at Olive. She had resided in this county for thirty-five years. The funeral will be held tomorrow afternoon at Orange.

ONTARIO NOMINATIONS.

ONTARIO, March 14.—Nominations of candidates for the various city offices closed this evening. The following have been named for Trustees: George B. Harding, F. B. McCroskey, J. T. Morris, J. V. Caldwell, T. B. Cannon, George Chaffin, Rev. Charles Seccombe, George Freeman and C. G. Bennink.

The business of the postoffice having passed the $10,000 a year mark, this city is in line for free delivery of mail.

F. T. De Arman of Pasadena has purchased part of the stock and fixtures of A. G. Perham's jewelry store on West A street.

The local union of the W.C.T.U. has reëlected these officers: Mrs. Clara Sheldon, president; rMs. D. B. Lee, treasurer, and Mrs. Oliver Morse, secretary.

NORMAL SCHOOL GUESTS.

BALBOA, March 14.—Fifty young women of the State Normal School were entertained this afternoon at the Chula Vista by Miss Marjorie Prior. There were dancing and boat rides. Mrs. F. E. Prior and Mrs. C. C. Davis chaperoned the party. At 6 o'clock a seashore dinner was served.

PASSING OF OHIOAN.

Retired Business Man of Cleveland Dies at Good Samaritan Hospital. Daughter Coming.

Edward L. Day, a retired business man of Cleveland, O., died at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon at the Good Samaritan Hospital, in his seventy-third year.

He came to Los Angeles in January with his wife, Mrs. Laura A. W. Day, and his sister-in-law, Mrs. M. P. Williams, who were with him at the end. He was apparently in good health until Friday morning, when he was suddenly taken ill at the Hotel Pepper, where the party were guests, and soon became unconscious. He was removed in the evening to the hospital and died without regaining consciousness.

Mr. Day leaves one daughter, Mrs. James H. Andrews, whose husband is the head of the Akron branch of the Quaker Oats Company. Mr. and Mrs. Andrews leave Chicago tonight for this city. Until their arrival no plans for the funeral will be made.

Mr. Day retired from active business many years ago. It had been his custom to spend a portion of each year in traveling. The body will be taken to Cleveland for burial.

WOMAN WANDERER.

While distributing religious pamphlets last evening, Mrs. Anna Sherwood, aged 41 years, walked into a residence on East Fifth street in the absence of the family. She was arrested by a patrolman, who said she was helping herself to bread and butter and fruit. Physicians at the Receiving Hospital said she appeared to be mentally unbalanced. Mrs. Sherwood says she stays at the Arcade Hotel on East Fifth street, and that she has been engaged in religious work for a number of years.

How to Stop Pimples.

In Five Days You Can Get Rid of All Skin Eruptions by the New Calcium Sulphide Wafers.

Trial Package to Prove It Sent Free.

Any man or woman gets awfully tired going around with a pimply face day after day. And other people get awfully tired, too, seeing them go around with their faces full of disgusting pimples.

If you are one of the unfortunates who can't get away from your pimples, and you have tried almost everything under heaven to get rid of them, take a few of Stuart's Calcium Wafers every day. Do that steadily for a few days, and in less than a week look at yourself in the mirror.

You will then say that Stuart's Calcium Wafers are a wonder in getting rid of skin eruptions.

These wonderful little workers contain the most effective blood purifier ever discovered, calcium sulphide.

No matter what your trouble is whether pimples, blotches, blackheads, rash, tetter, eczema or scabby crusts, you can solemnly depend upon Stuart's Calcium Wafers as never-failing.

Stuart's Calcium Wafers have cured boils in three days and the worst cases of skin diseases in a week. Every particle of impurity is driven out of your system completely, never to return, and it is done without deranging your system in the slightest.

Most treatments for the blood and for skin eruptions are miserably slow in their results, and, besides, many of them are poisonous. Stuart's Calcium Wafers contain no poison or drug of any kind; they are absolutely harmless, and yet do work which cannot fail to surprise you.

Don't go around with a humiliating, disgusting mass of pimples and blackheads on your face. A face covered over with these disgusting things makes people turn away from you, and breeds failure in your life work. Stop it. Read what an Iowa man said when he woke up one morning and found he had a new face:

"By George, I never saw anything like it. There I've been for three years trying to get rid of pimples and blackheads, and guess I've used everything under the sun. I used your Calcium Wafers for just seven days. This morning every blessed pimple is gone and I can't find a blackhead. I could write you a volume of thanks. I am so grateful to you."

Just send us your name and address in full, today, and we will send you a trial package of Stuart's Calcium Wafers, free to test. After you have tried the sample and been convinced that all we say is true, you will go to your nearest druggist and get a 50c box and be cured of your facial trouble. They are in tablet form, and no trouble whatever to take. You go about your work as usual, and there you are—cured and happy.

Send us your name and address today and we will at once send you by mail a sample package free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 175 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

THE MARKETS.

LOCAL PRODUCE MARKET.

Mexico again furnished the local market with a novel fruit yesterday. This time it was the sapedas, a fibrous, milky ball, with rough outer skin, which is cooked for a few hours before serving. Two baskets were shipped from Guadalajara and the little bulbs will sell for $4 a dozen. Alligator pears are moving freely and the demand for loquats is excellent. The price on the latter fruit has dropped to 6 cents a pound.

Although on the exchange fresh candled eggs are quoted at from 14 to 20 cents a dozen, they are generally sold at from 15 to 17 cents. Receipts yesterday were 547 cases. Declines have been steady, but dealers declare that prices have gone down as far as they will go this season. Retailers are selling fresh ranch eggs at 18 cents a dozen and on exchange 70 cases were sold.

Butter receipts were 16484 pounds. There was little demand and prices remained weak. The trend for some days had been downward and the outlook for the next is for still lower figures.

The cheese market has been active during the past week and receipts have been above the average. Yesterday 2572 pounds were brought in. A total of 45 cases of Martin's eastern singles was sold. Northern fresh was active in the offering.

Early White Rose potatoes were among the best sellers, but Oregon Burbanks also had a good call, as did Highland and Watsonville spuds. The offerings were heavy. Receipts registered 2449 sacks.

Onion arrivals were 300 sacks, nearly all red ones. The few offerings made consisted of Colorado, Minnesota and Nevada globes. There was active demand on the street.

Sixteen sacks of beans were reported in. Offerings were pinks and small whites. Only 11 sacks of sweet potatoes arrived and there was little demand for these.

Local tomatoes are selling at $1.25 to $1.50, while Mexican stock is worth a dollar more a basket. Asparagus remains steady at 20 to 30 cents. Brussels sprouts are firm at 10 cents. Cauliflower is cleaning up well. Cabbage is higher and peas and beans are all firm.

The demand for peanuts is good and 16 sacks were sold on exchange. Walnuts are weak and offerings plentiful. Tangerines were good sellers yesterday. Strawberries went slowly at 10 to 12 cents a basket and a few raspberries were sold at 25 cents.

LOS ANGELES STOCK EXCHANGE.

SURPRISE FOR SHARE BROKERS.

SATURDAY TRADING MAKES UP FOR DULL FRIDAY.

Good Demand for Home Preferred, Hundred and Ten Shares Selling. Associated Oil Advances on Light Business—Johnnie Consolidated Gets Drubbing on Mining Call.

To the surprise of brokers, the local stock market opened strong yesterday. The fact that it was Saturday, combined with the absence of business on "Friday, the thirteenth," caused the expectation that there would be little doing. However, trading was quite active, especially on the early call, prices were well maintained as a rule, and the few changes were for the better.

Home Telephone preferred was the leader at the early session, when 110 shares changed hands. Cash sales were made at one price level, 48.00, and totaled 70 shares of stock. The remaining forty shares changed hands at 48.25@48.00 on buyer sixty contracts. The closing quotations were at 47.50@49.00, showing a gain of ½ for the bid and a decline of 1-4 for the asked price, compared with the close at the preceding session.

Ten shares of Santa Monica Bay Home Telephone preferred stock also were sold. The price was 31.00 cash, with the close unchanged at 25.00@32.00. The asked price on Edison preferred was higher, closing at 74.00@79.00, a gain for the latter quotation of one point. Los Angeles Brewing Company showed an advance of 2 points in the bid, closing at 96.00, with none offered. The remainder of the industrial list was inactive.

Oil stocks engaged the attention of most brokers. Sales were recorded in three issues. Associated Oil was in demand, closing with a gain of 1-4, showing in the bid after sales of ten shares at 29.50. The close was at 29.37½@30.00, the offered price being 1-4 higher also.

Olinda Land Company was another trader, 2000 shares changing hands at 11 cash, with the close at 11@11½, up 3-4 on the bid, and down a like amount on the asked price of the previous close. One thousand shares of Piru Oil Company were sold at 6, with the close without a bid, but with the stock offered at 14.

Union Oil showed a slight gain in the bidding, closing at 206.50@212.00 up 1½ and down 1 point, respectively, but none was sold. Western Union showed stronger with a bid at 76 and an offered price at 100, gains of one and fourteen points respectively. Amalgamated Oil was better on the asked price also, being one point higher at 62 with the bid firm at 54.25.

Changes in bond quotations and bank stock were immaterial, no sales being recorded.

Johnnie Consolidated came in for a drubbing on the mining call, the stock selling down to 11 1-4 cash and to 12 on buyer sixty contracts, on sales of 13,000 shares. The cash sales amounted to 7000 shares with the remainder under the buyer's contracts. The stock was quoted at 11 1-8@11 1-4, at the close, showing a decline of 7-8 and 1 point, respectively on the bid and asked of the previous close. There seemed to be plenty of stock in the market, it being offered quite freely at 11 1-4 at the close. Buyers also were numerous.

LOS ANGELES-NEVADA EXCHANGE.

WEEK CLOSES IN QUIETNESS.

YESTERDAY'S MARKET WITHOUT ANY FEATURE OF NOTE.

Daisy Loses Seven Points on Perennial Manipulation—Fraction Two Points Weaker on News That Consolidated Has not Acquired Control. Johnnie Sliding.

Yesterday's single session of the Los Angeles-Nevada Stock Exchange was devoid of any overshadowing feature and trading was of a perfunctory and listless character.

Of the Goldfield favorites, Daisy still held premier position with total sales of 1800 shares, at prices lower than those pertaining on the previous day. Sales opened at 1.33—two points down, and went through the intervening points to 1.28 at the close. There appears to be no more reason for the day's loss of seven points than there was for the previous bulge, and the whole course of the market can only be layed to clever manipulation. Trading is still confined to professional interests and there appears to be no disposition on the part of the public to take a hand in the game.

Combination Fraction opened one point down from the previous day and closed with a total loss of two points at 77, with sales of 1300 shares. The definite announcement that Consolidated has not taken over the control of the issue appears to have had a depressing effect. Jumbo Extension gained one point on sales of 500 shares. Consolidated remained stationary with a sale of one board lot at 5.22½. Florence was easy with one sale at 4.25 and there was slight trading in Goldfield Bank, Milltown Fraction and a few scattering cheaper issues.

Johnnie led the sales with transfers of 12,000 shares, but it is very evident that the effect of the first product of the new mill had been thoroughly discounted in advance. Trading opened at 11¾ and went through the intervening fractions to 11, at which price it closed with a net loss of ¾ point from the previous day.

Last week's trading on the Exchange totaled 231,600 shares at $65,480.50, as against 215,000 shares at $70,545.25 for the preceding week. Daisy again held the lead with 24,700 shares of a value of $29,920, Combination Fraction was second with 36,600 shares at $28,273, Johnnie third with 52,500 shares at $6383.75, Bonnie Claire fourth with 36,500 shares at $6365 and Florence fifth with 1500 shares at $6327.

Daisy showed a range of from 1.08 to 1.41 and closed with a net gain of twenty points for the week. Combination Fraction at one time in the week's trading showed a gain of nineteen points, but fell back in the last few days and showed a net gain of six points at the close. Johnnie reached 13¾, but closed at 11—the low point. The features of the week were the spectacular antics of Daisy, due to manipulation, and the advance of Bonnie Claire, from 13 to 19, on confirmation of the news that the debts of the concern are to be retired and the receiver dismissed.

NEVADA STOCKS. SAN FRANCISCO LIST.

[Exclusive service to The Times by the Los Angeles Stock Brokerage Company, ground floor of the Citizens' National Bank Building.]

SAN FRANCISCO, March 14.—Goldfield Consolidated moved up a little on the opening session, and Florence followed. A slight pause was registered in the case of Goldfield Daisy, the price being shaded to $1.25 bid on the opening. In the Tonopah district, Tonopah Mining showed a good deal of strength, the rise in price of this issue being steady, the stock being bid $5.87½, with no offering. Tonopah North Star broke badly, due to heavy profit taking. On the whole, the week's business is encouraging, and increased activity is looked for.

The ore shipments over the Tonopah and Goldfield Railroad consisted of 130 tons from the MacNamara, 145 tons from the Midway, 244 tons from the Tonopah Extension, and forty-three tons from the West End. The Tonopah Company sent 4850 tons, the Belmont Company 650 tons and the Montana-Tonopah 1000 tons, the Jim Butler 371 tons and the North Star 150 tons to the mills, making the total shipments for the week 7466 tons. The total output of the Tonopah mines was 7466 tons, of an estimated value (the shipping ore being valued at $80 a ton and the milling ore at $20 a ton) of $167,000.

On account of labor troubles at Goldfield, the production of its mines continues to be nominal. The Combination Mill reduced during the week 600 tons and the Kinkead mill 175 tons of ore of an aggregated value of about $31,000. The Silver Peak Valcalde mill is crushing about 350 tons of ore a week, of an average value of $50 a ton. Following are the closing quotations of the San Francisco Stock and Exchange Board, together with the regular call sales:

SHARES AND MONEY.

STOCK MARKET SHOWS STRENGTH.

EVIDENCE OF SUBSTANTIAL SPECULATIVE REVIVAL.

Convincing Signs of Growing Confidence Expressed and Broadening Participation in Number Concerned in Operations—Washington Conference Excites Street.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

NEW YORK, March 14.—The stock market made a striking demonstration of strength today during the short Saturday session and gave convincing evidence of a substantial speculative revival with growing confidence in its expression and broadening participation in the number concerned in the operations.

The market showed greater digestive power than at any previous period of the week and was sharply tested in that respect as the selling to take profits from time to time was heavy. This selling was absorbed with a readiness and slight influence that was impressive of the power of the forces back of the market.

The demonstration was the more remarkable coming after the uncertain action of the week's market which have given an impression of skillful fostering and cautious profit taking such as not infrequently is followed by abandonment and relapse after all available advantage has been squeezed out of the situation.

The stimulating influence on the speculation clearly looked to Washington for its origin or to the persistent reports of proceedings at Washington which circulate in the financial district. The presence in consultation with the government authorities of several men regarded as most responsible representatives of the great property interests of the country has been followed with intense interest in the financial district.

The belief is that this consultation seeks means to bring about increased return for the transportation traffic of the country and an assurance of a share in the increase on the part of the labor which would obviate the costly disputes over wages which, it is feared, would be necessary in seeking a settlement.

Surmises over the scope of the plans being discussed in Washington broadened today to include supposed steps to do away with the present rigid prohibition of the Sherman law of all agreements in restraint of trade, so as to qualify the restriction and to allow railroad traffic agreements and such others as may be deemed fair and reasonable. Reports of the shaping of these projects have been followed with growing excitement in the stock market and were the dominant features in today's active rise.

The movement showed variety and considerable uniformity although some stocks which have advanced most during the week did not share fully in the advance. The profit taking which was the cause of this was in evidence again when the market closed and made the tone slightly unsettled, but most of the gains were well maintained to the last.

Bonds were strong. Total sales, $1,948,000. United States 4's registered have declined ½ per cent. on call during the week.

New York Money Market.

NEW YORK, March 14.—Money on call nominal. Time loans easier; 30 days, 3½; 90 days, 3 3-4@4 per cent.; 6 months, 4@4½ per cent. Prime mercantile paper, 4½@6 per cent. Sterling exchange steady with actual business in bankers' bills. Commercial bills, 4.83@4.82 1-8. Bar silver, 55¼. Mexican dollars, 47. Bonds, government steady; railroads, strong.

New York Bank Statement.

NEW YORK, March 14.—The statement of clearinghouse banks for the week shows that the banks hold $30,665,075 more than the requirements of the reserve rule. This is an increase of $529,300 in the proportionate cash reserve as compared with last week. The statement follows:

Loans, $1,160,719,300; decrease, $3,629,700. Deposits, $1,171,528,300; decrease, $3,871,300. Circulation, $61,408,200; decrease, $714,100. Legal tenders, $59,128,600; increase, $352,600; specie, $264,446,400; decrease, $792,300; reserve, $323,622,400; decrease, $439,700. Reserve required, $292,957,225; decrease, $967,800. Surplus, $30,665,075; increase, $529,300. Ex-U. S. deposits, $49,280,300; decrease, $774,300.

The percentage of actual reserve of the clearinghouse banks at the close of business yesterday was 27.61 per cent. The statement of banks and trust companies of Greater New York not members of the clearinghouse shows that these institutions have aggregated deposits of $740,352,200; total cash on hand, $83,419,900, and loans amounting to $772,948,900.

Boston Copper Market.

[BY PRIVATE WIRE TO FRED DORR.]

BOSTON, March 14.—Copper shares opened strong and active this morning, and while the general advances were only moderate, the market was decidedly broader and more confidence was shown in the upward movement. The medium-priced stocks were more prominent in the trading, and it looked as though they were being put in shape for a sharp upturn next week. In this class, Boston Consolidated, Butte Coalition, Lasalle and Shannon stood out from the rest. The market quieted down at the end, but closed within a fraction of the highest, at the following prices:

GENERAL EASTERN.

WHEAT MARKET VERY BULLISH.

CLOSE STRONG WITH PRICES AT THE HIGHEST POINT.

Sharp Advance Due to Unusually Heavy Buying by Shorts Who Were Forced to Cover by Congested Condition of May Delivery—Record Mark for Corn Crop.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

CHICAGO, March 14.—The wheat market was strong the entire session and toward the end of the day sentiment in the pit became very bullish. The close was strong with prices at the highest point.

The sharp advance was due to unusually sharp buying by shorts who were forced to cover by the congested condition of the May delivery. Several of the leading bulls were active bidders for May and this caused a stampede among shorts who continued active buyers right up to the close.

There was little in the day's trading to stimulate demand, although some fresh reports regarding the inroads of the green bug in the wheat fields of Oklahoma were received.

Demand for cash wheat was active and had a strengthening effect. Foreign influence was bearish but it was apparently totally ignored. May opened ⅛ lower to ⅛ higher at 94⅝@95¼, advanced to 96⅝ and closed at 96¼@96⅜.

A new high record mark for the crop on May corn was reached today when that delivery sold at 66¼. The market was strong throughout the entire session owing to vigorous demand from shorts and some of the leading bulls. The close was strong at almost the highest price. May opened ⅛ to ⅜ higher at 65½@65⅝, sold up to 66¼, and closed at 66⅛.

Oats were strong all day, chiefly on account of the strength of wheat and corn. The volume of trade was small. May opened unchanged to ⅛ higher at 54⅛ to 54¼, advanced to 54⅞ and closed at 54⅝@54¾.

Provisions were strong and scored a sharp advance owing to the buying said to be for leading local packers. At the close, which was almost at the high point of the day, May pork was up 25@27½; lard was 12½@15c higher, and ribs were 10c higher.

Cash quotations were as follows: Flour was quiet and steady; winter patents, 4.40@4.90; straights, 4.20@4.60; spring patents, 5.30@5.60; straights, 4.30@4.90; bakers, 3.30@4.25; No. 2 spring wheat, 1.08@1.10; No. 3, 98@1.08; No. 2 red, 94¾@96¾; No. 2 corn, 64@64½; No. 2 yellow, 65½@66¼; No. 2 oats, 54¼@54¾; No. 2 white, 54½; No. 3 white, 52@54; No. 2 rye, 80; fair to choice malting barley, 80@90; No. 1 northwestern flaxseed, 1.20; prime timothy seed, 4.75; clover, contract grades, 20.85; short ribs, sides (loose,) 6.60@6.70; mess pork, per bbl., 12.00@12.00¼; lard, per 100 lbs., 7.70; short clear sides (boxed,) 6.50@6.75; whisky, basis of high wines, 1.35.

New York Cotton Market.

[BY PRIVATE WIRE TO FRED DORR.]

NEW YORK, March 14.—Liverpool failed to fully meet our decline of yesterday, and some fresh liquidation appeared in Wall-street houses and the market made a new level this morning. On the decline, local traders bought for a reaction, and there was also some scattered buying for New England mills. The stock market already reflects the improvement now to be noted in general business, and as this slowly spreads, it should be reflected in good markets, and in turn a better demand from our domestic mills, which hold a small stock.

Following is the range of prices today:

BIG BOW WINS.

Horse Recently Purchased by Thomas Williams Captures Thornton Stakes at Emeryville.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

SAN FRANCISCO, March 14.—A great crowd turned out at Emeryville today to witness the running of the four-mile race for the Thornton Stakes. The weather was clear and the track fast.

Big Bow, recently purchased by President Thomas Williams of the California Jockey Club, was the favorite. He won the race, at the same time breaking the track record by one-fifth of a second. Livius, on his Los Angeles reputation, was made second choice. Byronerdale made the running for two and a half miles, with Big Bow always at his heels. Under a masterly ride Butwell made his move at the right time and took the lead when ready, and held his field safe to the wire, winning by three lengths. Livius came from the last position in the final mile, and, although he made up some ground, his spurt proved unavailing and the best he could do was to finish an easy second.

The Glenwood Handicap was won by Cloyne, though Judge Nelson only lost in the last jump. Results:

Mile and twenty yards, selling: Wuerzburger, 92 (Buxton,) 3 to 1, won; Tonie, 102 (Walsh,) 2 to 1, second; Huerfano, 102 (J. Butler,) 6 to 1, third; time, 1:43. De Grammont, Henry O., Salpearl, John H. Talamund, Adele Brooks, Haber, St. Orloff and Astoria Belle finished as named.

Six furlongs, selling: Andrew B. Cook, 115, (Knapp,) 5 to 2, won; Belle of Iroquois, 108 (W. Kelly,) 6 to 1, second; Nagazam, 116 (Scoville,) 8 to 1, third; time, 1:14. Lord Nelson, Capt. Burnett, Dick Wilson, El Cazador, Zelina, Governor Orman, Tawasentha and Peggy O'Neal finished as named.

Mile and a sixteenth, Glenwood Handicap: Cloyne, 88, (Charboneau,) 18 to 5, won; Judge Nelson, 105 (Lycurgus,) 15 to 1, second; Peter Sterling, 116 (W. Kelly,) 13 to 5, third; time, 1:46 1-5. Northwest, Massa, J. C. Clem, and Wing Ting finished as named.

Four miles, Thornton Stakes: Big Bow, 112 (Butwell,) 7 to 10, won; Livius, 107 (Gilbert,) 2 to 1, second; Benvolio, 115 (Knapp,) 8 to 1, third; time, 7:16. Byronerdale also ran.

Mile and twenty yards: Silver Line, 97 (Gilbert,) 13 to 1, won; Gargantua, 110 (Lycurgus,) 8 to 5, second; Mike Jordan, 107 (Butwell,) 10 to 1, third; time, 1:42. Phil Igoe, Maxtress, Follie L., Miss Officious and Mill Song finished as named.

Six furlongs: Fire Ball, 104 (Lycurgus,) 6 to 1, won; Gemmell, 124 (Knapp,) 3 to 1, second; Johnny Lyons, 102 (Hayes,) 7 to 1, third; time, 1:12 3-5. The Mist, Burning Bush, Bucolic, Silver Stocking, and Cloud Light finished as named.

LION IS CONFIDENT.

Russian Wrestler not in the Best Condition, but Hopes to Beat the Shifty American.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

NEW YORK, March 14.—George Hackenschmidt, the champion wrestler of the world, who will meet Frank Gotch, the American champion, in Chicago, on April 3, arrived in this city yesterday, on board the steamer Lusitania, and said he was in good health and confident of his ability to defeat the American champion.

The "Russion lion" says he does not want to be misunderstood by the American public.

"I would like to have it understood," he said, "that whatever may be the outcome of the match between Gotch and myself, it will be absolutely square, in which the best man will win."

While Hackenschmidt feels fine, he is not quite in the best wrestling condition.

"I have been working for the past year, and have had little time in which to train, but I know that with two weeks' training I will be in perfect shape."

To keep himself in shape on the way over, the giant competed in potato races on deck, and amused the passengers by the swiftness which he could carry his giant size from one bucket to another.

When he was told that Gotch was a great wrestler, he said: "I'm glad to hear it. If he is as good as reports say, our bout should prove a good one."

SPORTS OVERFLOW.

GOOD AUTO SHOW.

Big Valley City Shows Its Interest in the Many Fine Exhibits by Large Attendance.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

FRESNO, March 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The first automobile show closed tonight, after having scored a big success. That Fresno believes in the automobile and its future was evidenced by the large attendance. Motorists from Los Angeles added to the general interest taken in the exhibit. Apart from the many makes of cars exhibited, the Arthur Koppel Company showed a fine display of railway material and mining machinery, which was a feature, and the tire men took advantage of the situation to keep their goods before the public.

Interest was added by the efforts of the southerners to break the road records between Los Angeles and Fresno. P. A. Rentin arrived here on Thursday in a Great Smith, after a run of 16 hours and 15 minutes, and this was the incentive for Harrison to make the run in the Oldsmobile. Now A. J. Smith is planning to make the journey in an Elmore, in an effort to lower the mark made by the Olds.

Americans Lead.

NEW YORK, March 14.—Play in the international cable chess match between America and Great Britain was resumed today at the Brooklyn Chess Club. Only one board showed a disadvantage for the Americans. A crowd of spectators gathered in front of a giant chess board, on which the movements on all boards are repeated as soon as they are made on the original boards. When the luncheon adjournment was taken the score stood: America, 1½; Great Britain, ½. Walbrecht won his game against Mitchell.

Schoolmasters Win.

COMPTON, March 14.—Schoolmasters' baseball team of Los Angeles defeated Compton High School by the score of 12 to 10, in a good game here

To Owners of Bad Breath--

Foul Odor of Indigestion, Smoking, Eating or Drinking Stopped at Once With Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges.

Trial Package to Prove It Sent Free.

Billous breathers, onion eaters, indigestion victims, cabbage consumers, smokers, drinkers and those with gas on the stomach are in a class all by themselves, distinguished by a powerful bad breath.

They all breathe, and as they breathe, they whiff out odor which makes those standing near turn their heads away in disgust. The pitiable part of it is that these victims do not realize what a sickening thing a bad, offensive breath is to others.

Charcoal is a wonderful absorber of gases and odors. It absorbs 100 times its own volume of gas.

Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges will put a stop to your bad, offensive breath, and to your belchings, whatever the cause or source, because the charcoal quickly absorbs all noxious, unnatural odors and gases.

If you suffer from indigestion and belch gas as a result, Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges will absorb all the gas and make you stop belching.

If on getting up in the morning you have such a bad, bilious breath that you can almost smell it yourself, Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges will get rid of it for you quickly.

If you have been smoking or chewing, or have been eating onions or other odorous things, Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges will make your breath pure and sweet.

Charcoal is also the best laxative known. You can take a whole boxful and no harm will result. It is a wonderfully easy regulator.

And then, too, it filters your blood—every particle of poison and impurity in your blood is destroyed, and you begin to notice the difference in your face first thing—your clear complexion.

Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges are made from pure willow charcoal, and just a little honey is put in to make them palatable, but not too sweet.

They will work wonders in your stomach and make you feel fine and fresh. Your blood and breath will be purified. You will feel clean inside.

We want to prove all this to you, so just send for a free sampe today. Then after you get it and use it, you will like them so well that you will go to your druggist and get a 25c box of these Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges.

Send us your name and address today and we will at once send you by mail a sample package free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 200 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

BREVITIES.

Meyer Soeurs, Avenue de l'Opera, Paris, hats and waists, have the honor to inform that they placed for sale a small but exquisite sample line of their Parisian hand-made waists with Mrs. Kruseman, milliner, 1302 Pico street, corner Rich. It is well known that Mrs. Kruseman has an exclusive millinery business, she making only to order either for general wear or to match gowns and dresses. Her long time European experience on order work, makes that this particular line, is so familiar for her, that she takes all responsibility, so that ladies ordering do not run any risk whatever, but have nothing but advantages. Her direct Parisian connections is the reason that she is always thoroughly posted about the latest and last, but not least; as Mrs. Kruseman has no display to make, she avoids consequently the heavy direct and indirect downtown expenses, and logically can be and is always reasonable, charging only according to quality and quantity of materials used and always but only first-class work done. Order work includes entirely new hats, work of your own materials and retrimming.

Important shoe event: 1000 pairs of sample shoes at $1 a pair. My space is limited and having just bought a big stock of sample shoes, I am compelled to make room on my shelves. Hence I have taken from my three shops, 1000 pairs shoes, all sizes, styles and leathers (ladies and gentlemen's lasts,) which I will sell at the uniform price of $1 a pair. Remember these are sample shoes, $2.50 to $6 values, which I have been selling at $2 and $2.50. On sale beginning Monday at my No. 3 shop only, 414½ S. Broadway, upstairs; take elevator. M. Streicher, sample shoe man. When you see the shoes you will say it is the biggest shoe sale event in Los Angeles.

Sunday Real Estate Liners. Classified real estate advertisements for insertion in THE SUNDAY TIMES must be in the office not later than 10:30 o'clock Saturday night. Other "want" advertisements for Sunday insertion taken over the counter until 11:30 p.m. The great volume of liners printed in The Sunday Times, numbering regularly over 5000 separate announcements, makes this regulation absolutely necessary in order to get the big Sunday issue out on time.

Rain and Auto Coats—In order to keep busy when the fur season is over, I have secured the agency of the New York Auto and Rubberized Coat Company. It is celebrated for its silk and cravenette coats. FRILLS FOR FLEET FEAST.

Miles of Silver and Mountain of Glittering Glassware Are Needed.

Twelve miles of china, a mountain of glassware, a chorus girl's ransom in silver and enough knives and forks to supply a brigade will be used at the supper on the night of the ball to the officers of the battleship fleet, not to mention the Falstaffian amount of "provender" under which the tables will do the time honored act of "groaning."

The Hotel Alexandria will do the catering. Yesterday Joseph Reichl of the hotel company, closed a lease with the Parmelee-Dohrmann Company for the largest amount of china, silver and glassware ever secured for one function on the Pacific Coast. The demands of the hotel upon the supplying company were so great that they practically exhausted the latter's complete stock in both the San Francisco and Los Angeles warehouses.

Mr. Reichl says 32,300 pieces of china will be required to serve the 2000 guests. Placed end to end these pieces would extend from Los Angeles to Pasadena. The glassware will total 10,100 pieces. If these were placed end to end their summit would tower half as high again as the top of the highest building in the city.

Four thousand four hundred knives, the same number of forks, 2200 bouillon spoons and 6600 teaspoons, will form the major part of the silverware necessary for this supper.

When the 180 hogsheads of china and an equal number containing the glassware and silverware were delivered at the Alexandria yesterday it took practically all the employés of the hotel and a number of assistants to place the deluge of tableware in the storerooms.

DIPLOMAT COMES AND GOES.

Charge d'Affaires of Chinese Legation at Mexico City Tells of Conditions There.

Liang Hsun, chargé d'affaires at the Chinese Legation at Mexico City, arrived in Los Angeles yesterday, and remained at the Alexandria until evening, when he and his party left for San Francisco. He was accompanied by his wife, two children, his private secretary, K. C. Lo, and a maid.

Mr. Liang, who has been in Mexico City for four years, has been granted leave of absence for a year.

"We will sail from San Francisco on Tuesday for Canton," he said. "Yes, there are a great many Chinamen in Mexico—about 30,000. They are professional men and merchants, and have established many excellent schools. They are good citizens. The conditions in Mexico are good at this time. It is a prosperous year.

The visitor said he was not alarmed by reports of trouble in China.

Mr. Liang and his family attracted a great deal of attention as they moved about the lobby of the Alexandria. All were dressed in Chinese costume.

BRIDE AND GROOM VICTIMS.

Friends Decorate Their Cottages With Shoes, Signs, Cribs and Other Things.

When Roy Raymond and his bride arrived, yesterday, at their cosy little bungalow on Seneca street, they found that their friends had been there before them and supplied a variety of decorations which people from miles around came to see. There were signs of every size, color and shade, bearing information, wise sayings and sayings which were otherwise. Bold letters on the sidewalks gave the information to passers by that the people who lived in the cottage had just begun their wedded life, and contributions were called for, particularly rice.

Shoes, which grandfather had worn, those of the tiny tot, the spiked footwear of the athlete and the dainty slipper of the debutante, were strung in motly array upon a wire entirely across the front of the cottage. Then, too, there were wash tubs, cribs, pans and kettles gathered in heaps in vari-

M'COMAS TO JAIL.

Slayer of Mrs. Noyes to Leave County Hospital Today for City Prison.

William P. McComas, the slayer of Mrs. Charlotta L. Noyes, will be taken to the City Jail today from the County Hospital, where he has been under treatment for acid burns since the shooting. It is probable he will be placed in a cell until after his arraignment, but his friends are fighting to have him placed in the Receiving Hospital and guarded by an officer.

McComas has practically recovered from his burns. The acid did not injure the sight of his left eye. His hearing has been set for tomorrow, when he will be arraigned on the charge of murder.

GASOLINE STOVE EXPLODES.

Home Destroyed by Fire and Three Others Damaged—Total Loss Five Thousand Dollars.

Through the explosion of a gasoline stove in the home of Mrs. J. A. Langdon at No. 2838 Downey avenue, yesterday morning, the house was completely destroyed, and the home of W. T. Bates, adjoining, and two other buildings were damaged.

The houses were some distance from the nearest fire plug and considerable difficulty was experienced in getting water on the flames.

The total damage amounted to $5000.

DOCTORS AT DINNER.

S. Kutnow, a wealthy medical man and scientist of New York City, tendered a dinner of elaborate appointments at the Alexandria last evening, to a dozen prominent Los Angeles physicians. The private dining-room was used and the table was beautifully laid. A huge Japanese umbrella was suspended above the circular board. Festoons of asparagus fern and sweet peas were arranged about the umbrella and massed in the center of the table. Covers were laid for Drs. Bicknell, Cole, Thorpe, Ellis, Hitchcock, Haynes, Beckett, Taggart, Smith, Moore, Davidson, Kurtz and the host.

New York Sends Her Richest Fashions To The Unique

The style conjurers of New York and Newport are never idle. They are originating some new creation most every day.

The very latest of these creations are at The Unique—now—just came within the last few days.

The display is charming—it is not approached in Los Angeles.

Here are meager hints of what's new:

¶ New rajah tailor-made coat suits, 26, 30 and 36 inch lengths, in apricot, leather, blondine, brown, natural, black and navies, and in the new stripe effects, ¶ Smart new tailored suits in all the new spring materials, in plain colors, stripes, checks and fancies.

¶ Very special values in suits at $35.00, $37.50, $40.00, $45.00, $50.00 and $55.00.

¶ Stylish new skirts, rajah auto coats, linen suits and dresses, lingerie dresses and waists, lace, silk and net waists, evening gowns and capes. A host of interesting new garments—welcome to see them.

GOULD AND GOLD.

RAILROAD TO HARBOR FOR WESTERN PACIFIC.

Two Companies, Backed by Millions, Propose Development of West Basin and the Independence of Los Angeles Commerce.

LOS ANGELES and the West Basin of San Pedro Harbor at Wilmington will be connected by a new railroad by a company incorporated here yesterday, as soon as its plans can be carried out. The secretary concedes that Gould's Western Pacific may enter this city over the proposed tracks. A. C. Bird, the president, was formerly general traffic manager of the Gould lines in the East. He is also head of a new company for the development of the West Basin.

President A. C. Bird, of the Los Angeles Harbor Company and the Los Angeles Harbor Railroad Company, new corporations, with a capitalization of $2,500,000 each. Mr. Bird was formerly vice-president of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad and later had supervision of traffic over all of the Gould lines. The stated purpose of the new companies is to build an independent railroad between this city and Wilmington, and to develop West Basin and construct docks.

The problem of how Gould's Western Pacific Railroad will have an entrance to Los Angeles has apparently been solved by the organization of the Los Angeles Harbor Railroad Company, which filed articles of incorporation yesterday.

At the same time was filed the articles of incorporation of the Los Angeles Harbor Company, which aims to develop the West Basin at Wilmington.

While each company is independent of the other, both have the same directors, and will coöperate. Each company is capitalized at $2,500,000, with $25,000 subscribed. The Harbor company will have $500,000 in preferred stock, and provision is made for a bonded indebtedness of $1,000,000, while the Harbor Railroad Company has a provision for $2,000,000 bonded indebtedness.

The rights of way between Wilmington and Slauson avenues, Los Angeles, have already been secured, and it was stated last evening that as soon as possible work will be commenced on construction of the line, as well as on the improvements to the inner harbor, or that part known as the West Basin.

BIRD THE LEADING SPIRIT.

A. C. Bird, formerly traffic manager of the Gould lines in the East, but now a resident of Compton, has been elected president of both the new companies. Mr. Bird was also at one time vice-president of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad. He is the leading spirit in the new enterprises, which may mean much to Los Angeles.

F. C. Wintrode is secretary of both companies, and J. W. Oakley is treasurer. The other directors are Jacob Baruch, N. W. Myrick, Lee C. Gates, Fielding J. Stilson, A. P. Maginnis and H. C. Oakley of Los Angeles; F. S. Cary, Wilmington, and W. J. Arkell, New York. The headquarters is in the Security building, this city.

In the articles of incorporation it is stated that the purposes of the railroad company are to "build, buy, lease, own and operate railroads and railways to be operated by electricity, steam or other motive power, over, on and along the following route and from and to the following places, and over and along the following branches: "From a point to be hereafter selected in the city of Los Angeles to the city of San Pedro. That the estimated length of said railroad is twenty-five miles."

The papers also provided for the ownership and operation of steamships and other vessels for freight and passenger traffic, and for the building and operation of telegraph and telephone lines. An express business is also expressly provided for.

In addition to these extended powers the companies will "own and acquire under the laws of eminent domain," docks, wharves, piers, slips, warehouses, stations, yards, machine shops, etc. This will mean the employment of a great number of men including skilled mechanics.

INDEPENDENT, THEY SAY.

It was stated yesterday by members of the directorate and by Messrs. Allen and Vandyke, of the firm of Lawler, Allen, VanDyke & Jutten, who with Lloyd W. Moultrie are attorneys for the promoters, that the proposed new line connecting this city with its harbor will be built with independent capital, and that so far as any other corporation is concerned each company is absolutely independent.

This capital, it is asserted, has been secured, and as soon as some further necessary preliminaries are completed, work will be commenced on the railroad and the harbor.

Secretary Wintrode and other directors state that the building of this line between the harbor and Los Angeles will open a gateway to this city for any other road which desires to enter by way of the new tracks, thus assuring competition between the various lines operating out of Los Angeles.

But apparently the Southern Pacific is barred. Secretary Wintrode last evening said:

ESPEE BARRED?

"By the formation of this company we are enabled to hold open for other roads a right of way to the sea from Los Angeles. If Gould's Western Pacific desires to enter the city by our tracks it will be given the privilege. So will the Santa Fé, or any other line. I do not think there will be any hitch.

"This development of the West Basin and the building of this line will mean the development of Wilmington; a development which could never have ob-

FOURTH-STREET TUNNEL.

Promoters Busy on Plan to Serve Pedestrians Only, and the Estimate is Low.

A project to tunnel Fourth street from Hill to Flower has been set in motion, and property owners on both sides of the hill appear in favor of such an improvement. The tunnel is proposed for pedestrians, only, and, according to plans, will be about 1300 feet long and have a bore of sixteen feet.

First plans and estimates, by a private engineering firm place the cost at less than $40,000—small compared with the $100,000 expended on the Third-street tunnel.

According to present plans less than half of Fourth street will be occupied by the tunnel. Entrance would be at one side of the street.

A prime mover in the enterprise is Arthur G. Newton, who is assisted by George Mason, Charles M. Stimson, Z. L. Parmalee and the firm of Wright & Callender. A subscription list has been started and enough money has been obtained to have the assistant city engineer draw up accurate plans and make an exact estimate of the total cost. When this is done, the plan will be submitted to the Board of Public Works. If approved by this body and the Council, the project could be completed, it is said, within a year and a half.

WAR MAYOR DEAD.

Benair C. Sawyer, Who Headed Pittsburgh City Government During Civil Strife, Passes Here.

Benair C. Sawyer, 86 years old, former Mayor of Pittsburgh, and for the last fifteen years a resident of Los Angeles, died early yesterday morning at the home of his son-inlaw, Thomas McKee, manager of the Ville de Paris, at No. 670 South Alvarado street. Six years ago, Mr. Sawyer and his wife, who is his survivor, celebrated their golden wedding anniversary.

Mr. Sawyer served the city of Pittsburgh as Mayor during a part of the troublous period of the Civil War—from 1861 to 1863. He was prominent in the politics of the time, and was one of the largest realty holders in the Smoky City. For a few years, prior to coming to this city, he was engaged as a mining promoter in Denver. One of the oldest Odd Fellows in the country, he was a charter member of the Pittsburgh organization.

In addition to his wife and daughter, Mrs. Thomas McKee, two other daughters and a son are left. They are Mrs. R. Prettyman of Lawton, Okla.; Mrs. Sarah S. Hooper, Denver, and W. B. Sawyer of Ogden, Utah. His funeral will be held at 2 o'clock tomorrow at the undertaking parlors of Orr & Edwards. Rev. Mr. Thomson of the Independent Church of Christ will officiate.

HIS CHANCE.

NEW REPUBLIC'S ODD RECRUIT.

YOUTHFUL BURGLAR TO BE THE CHIEF OF POLICE.

Hollywood Boy With Ambitions and Experience First Citizen of the Institution of Southern California. In Training for Promotion from Woodpile to Office.

The main recruit for the George Junior Republic at San Fernando is a Hollywood boy, Merrill McReynolds, who has a record behind him and a record to make. He is a bright boy with a taste for literature of a certain kind and more experience with crime and criminals than most boys of his age.

The new George Junior Republic will make him Chief of Police. He has a record of twenty-five burglaries, has read 500 dime novels, and is the proud owner of a pair of handcuffs and a rifle.

"That's just the kind of boy we want," remarked Mr. George to Judge Wilbur, when the record of the youth of 16 years was set before him.

Upon the strength of this willingness to make a man and a chief of this would-be detective or Indian slayer, Judge Wilbur yesterday banished Merrill to the new Republic, in the San Fernando Valley, where the Indians are nearly all killed off, and the most desperate robbers needing detection are the coyotes and jack rabbits.

Merrill is a Hollywood boy and ever since he was able to read of the thrilling adventures of "Daring Dick, or the Diamond Driller's Dastardly Deed," and other similar wild stories, he has been convinced that Providence brought him into the world purposedly to accomplish thrilling deeds and capture desperate robbers. He determined first to be a burglar and later become a detective. Somewhere he had seen the phrase that "It takes a thief to catch a thief."

It was all in the line of business, but he hoped to graduate.

Thus it was the youngster started out in a life of crime with the best intentions in the world. Soon he rose to be chief of the "gang" of bad boys who made Hollywood sit up nights. His last burglary netted the youthful bandit $80.

This was all he needed and the indications are that he swore off being a burglar and determined to become a detective and practice upon his former confederates. He expended the results of his burglary on weapons, and was arrested.

Mr. George thinks that under the circumstances Merrill will make an ideal chief of police for the new Republic in time. At first, however, he will have to prove himself amenable to discipline, and will be given a chance to increase his muscular powers. He will be put in training for his future high position sawing wood.

If he "saws wood and says nothing" Merrill will probably get there. Meanwhile he is keeping those handcuffs polished up in great shape.

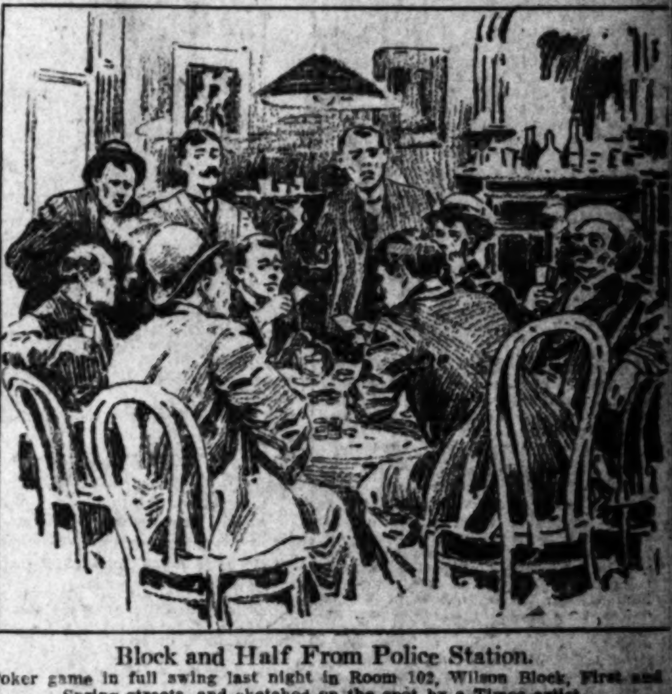
RANK.

HOTBED OF GAMBLING FLOURISHING HERE.

Score of Dens Running Full Blast in City's Heart Under the Noses of Police, and Word of a "Wide Open Town" Passed Out.

GAMBLING is flourishing practically unmolested in Los Angeles. Under the eyes and noses of the police, and with their full knowledge, games are running full blast night and day in the heart of the city. The proprietors of many places are known, but are not arrested. Occasionally half-hearted raids are made at hours pleasing to the gamblers to exhibit official vigilance. Usually the offenders slip away. The word has been passed out that this will be a "wide open town" by the time the fleet arrives. The police say there is little, if any, gambling going on.

GAMBLING ROOM TYPES



Block and Half From Police Station.

Poker game in full swing last night in Room 102, Wilson Block, First and Spring streets, and sketched on the spot by a Times artist.

The following large joints were in operation last night, fully equipped and unafraid, not to mention any number of poker games in the back rooms of saloons and pool halls, to which "rounders" enticed "suckers:"

No. 213 1-2 South Main street, second floor.

No. 416 1-2 South Main street, third floor.

Rooms 101 and 102, Wilson block, No. 102 South Spring street.

Rooms 114 and 115, Wilson block, No. 102 South Spring street.

No. 326 South Spring street, Jeffries's Stag Rooming-house.

No. 319 West Fifth street, second floor.

No. 535 South Broadway, Metropolitan Club, fourth floor.

No. 705 East Third street, entrance in the rear.

No. 221 West Third street, third floor, over Del Monte bar.

Some of these places are notoriously public by reason of long operation without the slightest police hindrance, nothwithstanding repeated "bluffs" at exterminating every game in the business district.

Not long ago a number of patrolmen were specially detailed to find—or was it not to find?—these places. The result of all this investigating was four mild raids. In two of the places raided within ten days games are still running briskly. Two of the places were raided, for unknown reasons, after the games had closed and the players gone. Only their property was confiscated. Special officers were in other gambling houses, but no arrests were made.

The gamblers say the city will be "wide open" by the time the fleet arrives. The word, they assert, has been passed out, and they are still sending it along. In anticipation of "entertaining" the bluejackets and the other visitors, three gambling concerns in Las Vegas pulled up their stakes and shipped their faro layouts, roulette wheels and "crap" tables to Los Angeles. They are now stored away pending the arrival of the operators, who intend to secure quarters. There is enough paraphernalia to equip half a dozen houses, according to an expert.

PATROLMEN REPORT IN VAIN.

The patrolmen on the downtown beats know where the gambling-houses are located. In their daily reports they are supposed to give the numbers of gambling-houses on their beats. "I have reported two gambling 'joints' every day for two months," one patrolman said yesterday, "and they are still running. I have never attempted to get into the place, however, because I am in uniform, and stand no show of even getting up to the door without being detected."

It is difficult to get into some of the places without a card properly signed by a "booster" or "capper." There are two places running in the Wilson Block. Competition is keen, and the formality of presenting cards is dispensed with. When you mount the stairs a "booster" asks your business and if you look "ripe enough to pick" you are hustled into the "dive."

IN THE WILSON BLOCK.

Last night there were two games in operation in rooms 101 and 102. J. Clark appears to be the proprietor. He deals at the poker table, and a game of "black jack" is run in another room. The windows are boarded up on the inside, and the blinds are raised to display the lace curtains and ward off any suspicion. The glass door is glazed, and a shaded electric light is placed above it so that anybody who enters the hall can be seen from the peep-hole.

Across the hallway and farther back are two rooms occupied by C. E. McCoy. Two poker games are run there. Patrons of the place say a faro game can always be arranged if there is enough money in sight. These games are both well patronized, and the play is heavy. Men are seen coming and going from the building until 1 and 2 o'clock in the morning. A blind policeman with good ears would learn in one night what is going on there.

THIS "JOINT" EXCLUSIVE.

The "joint" on the third floor of the Jeffries Stag Rooming-house, No. 326 South Spring street, is somewhat exclusive. The patrons of Jeffries' barroom and Morley's poolroom play there. Unless you are known or have a card you are refused admittance. The house has a number of "outside" men who "steer" players into the game. They are sure, however, that you have money, and are not liable to "squeal" if you get trimmed. A man who has been there says the players have no difficulty in getting liquor by means of a "dumb waiter." Jim Jeffries's saloon is right under it. The "club" occupies commodious quarters and does a prosperous business—nearly all profit.

The most exclusive games are run on the third floor over the Del Monte saloon, No. 221 West Third street. There the race-horse men play at faro and roulette for high stakes. Those who are allowed to play there are furnished with keys and are not bothered by "boosters" and "cappers." This is a well-known place.

At No. 213½ South Main street, on the second floor, is a poker game, and a "black jack" game. The place is run by Bilderrain, who formerly had a game at No. 412½ North Main street. His play became so heavy that he had to move to more spacious and convenient quarters. He carried his trade with him and is a notorious sharper.

STILL AT IT.

In Louis Lowenstein's place, No. 319 West Fifth street, which was raided on March 10, there was a poker game last night. Whether Lowenstein runs it could not be learned. He has a lease on the third floor, and his employés furnished quarters there. The police broke down the door after the games were closed, about 3 o'clock in the morning, and took his roulette wheel, faro bank and poker tables, with a dress suit case full of chips, to the Police Station, where they are still held. Lowenstein saved his faro box, however, and the police officers searched everybody in the building, but were unable to find it. The game has a few patrons who played faro there before the raid.

In the Metropolitan Club, No. 535 South Broadway, a poker game was in progress last night, despite the fact that the police hauled about $2000 worth of gambling paraphernalia out of the rooms recently. J. W. Tilford, who owns the layout, says he simply had it stored there. He had shipped it from Goldfield, and one of his friends says he will attempt to recover it through the courts.

BLACK DIVE.

In the rear of No. 507 East Third street is a gambling house patronized by negroes. Besides "crap" games, "coon-can" and poker are played in the dive. It has a heavy play, and is the source of much trouble to the police; yet it has never been raided.

A small poker game is run in a suite of rooms at No. 416½ South Main street. It has been in operation only a short time. "Boosters" have cards out, however, and the proprietors are doing business.

PROFESSOR MISSING.

When Prof. T. S. C. Lowe failed to appear before Justice Pierce, yesterday morning, in supplementary proceedings instituted against him by the Dyer Collection Company, the attorney for the plaintiff asked why the professor had failed a second time to heed the process of court. Mrs. Foltz, who represented Lowe, stated that her client is ill, but that he intends to meet his obligations. To a skeptical retort Mrs. Foltz replied by appealing to her "brother in the law" to give credence to the statement of "his sister attorney." Justice Pierce poured oil on the troubled waters by postponing proceedings until next Saturday, when, Mrs. Foltz promised, Prof. Lowe will appear.

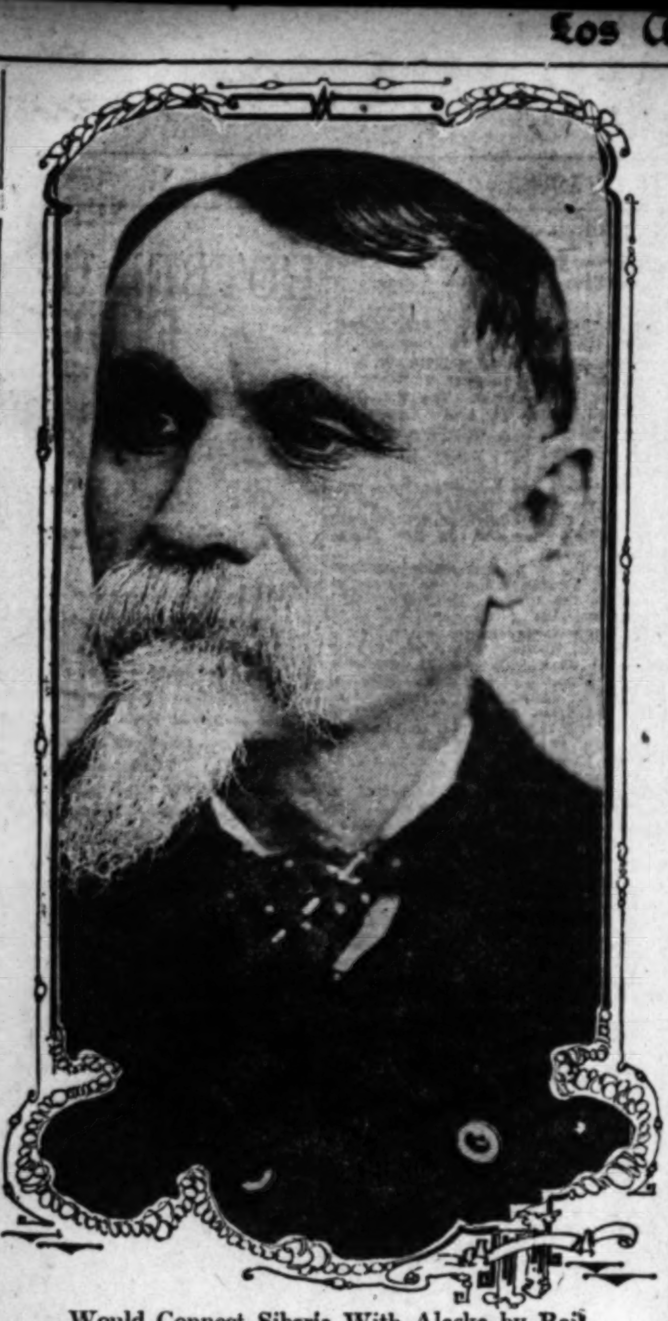
WORKER.

HE MAY BORE BENEATH SEA.

Man With Ambitious Scheme Now in City.

Plans Alaska-Siberia Railroad Tunnel.

History-maker of Northwest Is Capt. Healy.



Would Connect Siberia With Alaska by Rail.

Capt. John J. Healy, picturesque history-maker of the Northwest, now here, who plans a thirty-mile tunnel under Bering Strait. He figured last night at the most unique dinner ever given in Los Angeles.

Capt. John J. Healy, maker of history in Idaho, Montana, the Canadian Northwest, and in Alaska, where he established the North American Trading and Transportation Company, is in the city visiting his daughter, Mrs. L. H. Heron, No. 376 Bonnie Brae street.

In his time "Johnnie" Healy—as his friends call him—has been a soldier, miner, Indian trader, thrice Sheriff of a Montana county nearly as large as New York State, and more recently a promoter of Alaskan industries. He is at present interested in the promotion of the French-American project of the Trans-Alaskan-Siberian Railway, for which the Czar's ukase has just been obtained.

English and German capitalists have long sought this concession, but as Russia is no friend of either, their efforts have been fruitless. This recently-formed company of Frenchmen and Americans will now proceed to open and develop the resources of Southeastern Siberia, a country larger than the western United States. A part of it is credited with a climate and soil like the State of Illinois, and the rest like our Dakotas and Montana—a fine stock country. It is only in the last few years that the Russian government has encouraged emigration to that part of Siberia, but already 120,000 allotments of land have been made, and the population is more than 600,000 engaged in farming, stock raising, and mining. The mountains of the country are believed rich in minerals of all kinds.

It is the aim of Capt. Healy and his associates to bring these people and their products in touch with Alaska by rail. While at first a line of boats will be used in Bering Straits ultimately a thirty-mile railway tunnel under the sea is intended to connect the two countries.

COOKING AFTER BLACKFEET.

The United States engineers engaged in the construction of the Sun River (Mont.) storage reservoir and canal recently requested Capt. Healy and J. W. Schultz to give them some Blackfeet Indian names for the towns and streets they are surveying along the route of the project. Last night at the home of Mrs. Heron, during the most unique dinner ever given in Los Angeles, the two old-timers made up a list of seventy-five names, each that of some noted chief or warrior of the buffalo days. Eagle Shoe, Lou Horn, Last Bull, Bull's Back-fat, Sees Far, Sun Calf and Bull-Turns-Around are representative of the names the settlements and streets will be given—in the original language, of course.

The dinner was the joint effort of Mrs. Heron and the two old plainsmen, the latter furnishing and cooking the pieces de resistance in true Blackfeet stiye. Chief of these was a dish they called Is-sap-woi-sists. It was really a large sausage of strips of the choicest tenderloin of beef, beef only, flavored with salt and broiled to a turn over live coals. By this method all the rich juices of the meat were confined in the casing, and those who partook of it were enthusiastic, declaring that it was the most perfect and savory method of flesh cooking they had ever tasted. Then there were stewed "manifold," and fried "marrow" casing, parts of the animals' interior economy certainly delicious. Truly, the Indians of the plains know some things about meats and meat cooking.

LIFE'S ADVENTURES.

The dinner, of course, brought up many memories of the past and Capt. Healy, usually a rather reticent man, told interesting stories of his adventurous life. He was a member of the Second United States Dragoons and received his discharge at Fort Hall, Idaho, in 1860, and there began to make fame and fortune. One of his most interesting experiences was the building of Fort Whoopup, north of Fort Benton, in Canada, where he wrested a large fur trade away from the Hudsons Bay Company, and, strange to say, caused the opening of the Canadian northwest to settlement.

"I was one of the discoverers of the famous Salmon River diggings in Florence, Idaho, in 1861," said Capt. Healy. "I cleaned up about $20,000 there, and went to Fort Benton, where I became a 'free trader' with the Indians, in opposition to the American Fur Company. My trade was mainly with the three tribes of the Blackfeet, the Piegans, Bloods, and Blackfeet proper, who claimed as their hunting ground the vast extent of plains and mountains lying between the Saskatchewan and Yellowstone Rivers.

"In 1863 a Blood Indian gave me a piece of silver quartz which I had assayed in Helena; its value was $11,327 to the ton. The Indian told me that he had got it from a Stony, one of a tribe of mountain Sioux. There is a lot of it somewhere up in the Rockies, the Blood told me, and they chop out hunks of it with their hatchets and melt it into bullets.

"You can well believe that I was interested.

UNDISCOVERED GOLD.

"In the spring of 1867, en route from St. Louis to Fort Burton on the steamer Yellowstone, I was so fortunate as to meet that greatest of all missionaries, Father De Smet, who was going to Dakota with Gen. Sherman to make a treaty of peace with Red Cloud. We became friends. 'My son,' the father said to me, one day, 'when you discovered the Salmon River diggings, you did not find the richest ground in that country. In 1843, traveling with the Nez Perces there, I rode one day in the rear of a horse dragging lodge poles. We crossed a wide shallow stream, where the bedrock was rough slate covered with a thin layer of sand; the lodge pole ends stirred up the sand, and the swift current carried it away, exposing many a shining nugget of gold.

"'Father,' said I, 'tell me where that place is; make me a map of it.'

"'Ah, my son,' he replied, 'that I may not do. The Nez Perces are under the protection of us Jesuits. I cannot be responsible for a stampede of whites that will not only rob them of their country, but demoralize them by contact with civilization.'

"The rich placer he told of has not been discovered to this day.

"I then told him about the piece of silver ore. 'In 1847,' he said, 'traveling with the Stony Indians from the headwaters of the Columbia across the Rockies to the eastern slope, we came through the Bow River pass. There, near the summit'—and he described the place as accurately as he could—'I saw the cropping from which your sample was undoubtedly cut. My companions took quantities of it.'

"'Father,' said I, 'why do you tell me the location of this ledge—and refuse to give me a map of the river placer?'

"'Because the former place is not within the jurisdiction of the Jesuits,' he replied. 'The Oberites, a Canadian order, claim that territory.'

"After some further talk, he said: 'My son, after concluding this treaty of peace, I must go to Rome, whence the Pope has called me, and I fear that I may not be allowed to return to these Indians, to this beautiful land of plains, of mountains I so dearly love. Now, do this for me. You are a friend of Gen. Maugher and others of great influence in this country; get them to write the Holy Father, asking that I may be allowed to return here.'

"I agreed to do this, and before we parted he wrote a little note to the Jesuits of Coeur d'Alene mission, which he advised me to take to them without delay. 'Dear Brothers,' it read, 'give the bearer the information you have regarding certain rocks.'

"For one reason and another, I never delivered the note. Had I done so, I would probably be today owner of many of the richest mines in the Coeur d'Alenes district!

"'And why do you give me this?' I asked, 'and still refuse to tell me where the rich placer is located?'

"'Because,' he replied, 'no Indians live where these certain rocks are. My son, if I return, we will ride together in the Bow River country, and you, keeping your eyes open, shall behold great things.'

"He died in Rome.

BUILDING A FORT.

"In the latter part of the '60's, there were too many traders in Fort Benton, and I decided to make an attempt to corral the trade of the Bloods and Blackfeet, who, up to that time, had mostly dealt with the Hudson's Bay Company, at their mountain fort post. Above all, I wanted to get North and hunt for the location of the rich silver lead. The Indians were bad at that time, and it would have been impossible for me to go North, had not Calf Shirt, the really ferocious chief of the Bloods, come to me and made friends. 'I like you,' he said, 'and want you to come to my country and trade with us.'

"Looking back at it now, I wonder how we succeeded in building that fort. In the fall of 1869 I went North with only six men and a number of wagons of trade goods, and located at the junction of the St. Mary's and Billy rivers. That first winter we built, and traded, and fought. The next winter I had more men, and in 1872 finished the fort. It was 140 feet square, with two bastions, in which I placed two six-pound smooth-bore cannon and one four-pound rifled piece. Then, for the first time, I felt that I could defy all the Indians in the Northwest, if necessary.

LOST AGAIN.

"In the meantime I had been making inquiries of the Indians about the trip of Father De Smet into the country and at last I found a Stony, old and blind, who had accompanied him. The old fellow said that he knew where the ledge of 'bullet' rock was. I had his wife lead him out to our corral: 'Inside of that fence,' I told him, 'are 100 horses. Think of it; 100 good, big horses. If you will show us where the bullet rock is they are yours, all yours.'

"The old fellow became excited at once, and was for starting that very day. I could not go at the time, but sent my brother and three other men with him. They went up Bow River. Each night the Stony would ask his wife to describe the looks of the country, and then he would say how many more sleeps it would be before they arrived at the lead. One evening he said that in three more days his white brothers should see the place. While they were eating supper a Wesleyan missionary named McDougal came into camp. He had long been with the Stonies, had learned their language and converted many of them to his faith. He had a long talk with the old man. In the morning the Indian calmly told my brother that he would go no farther. Entreaties, threats—the offer of 200 horses, all failed to shake his determination. I learned afterward what had caused his change of heart; the missionary told him that if he showed the location of the valuable rock, white men would over-run the country, kill off all the game in the mountains, and that the Stonies would starve to death.

"The preacher man afterward tried to get the Indian to tell him where the lead was. 'Oh, no,' said the old fellow, 'I have not forgotten your words; your wise and timely counsel. Sooner than have my people robbed of their game and country, I will die. I will not tell you where the stuff is.'

RIDING A BUFFALO BULL.

"Unwillingly, I once rode a buffalo bull, but I'm proud to say that I stayed with him to the finish.

"At Whoopup, early one morning, I saw five bulls climbing up the slope from the valley, and thinking that they would be down on top of the ridge, with an Indian boy, a lame protégé of mine, I started after them afoot. They were lying down when we arrived, and I killed four of them before they could get up. The fifth, slightly wounded, ran into a snow-filled coulie and got stuck in the drift. We walked leisurely over to him, and I was about to gve the finishing shot when I determined to know how it would feel to sit astride the animal. More than belly deep in the snow the bull did not seem to notice our approach, but when I handed my rifle to the boy and jumped onto him, a quiver ran through his frame. Then, with a prodigious gathering of strength, he bounded through the snow and down the hill, I gripping the thick hair for dear life, and the boy hanging onto its tail—for a ways. He soon lost his hold.

"Arrived at the foot of the hill, I furnished amusement aplenty for the people of the fort, and a hundred or two Indians, and none would come to my assistance. The animal did not run straight away, but bucked and jumped and snorted around and around in frantic effort to dislodge me from its back. I did not dare jump off for fear the big fellow would run me down and gore or trample me, and I stayed on only by the exertion of all my strength. My lame little companion, meanwhile, had followed after us as fast as he could, and after what seemed hours to me he finally managed to shoot the bull without risk to my legs. When it dropped I was willing to slide off and tarry right there for a while to regain my breath.

OPENING THE WAY.

"From the time I built Fort Whoopup, the Hudson's Bay Company became my bitter enemy. I took practically all its trade. The factor at Mountain Fort, Hardestie by name, sent his brother-in-law, McDougal—the missionary who had blocked my mining scheme—east to Ottawa to protest against our presence in the country, 'their country,' they called it. We were represented as 500 strong, a military organization of the most desperate criminals, wading in the blood of the defenseless Indians of the country, whom we slaughtered for the fun of seeing them die.

"A good way to get rid of us, it was suggested, was to prohibit the sale of liquor in the Northwest Territory, and enforce the regulation with soldiery. The Hudson's Bay Company would be glad to surrender their rum-selling privilege, if by that means we could be compelled to leave the country.

"An act of Parliament was straightway passed prohibiting the sale or possession of liquor in the Territory after March 18, 1873, and the Northwest Mounted Police were organized to come west and annihilate us, if necessary. I was obliged to pass that summer in Fort Benton, but before leaving Whoopup I learned what was going on, and gave my men their instructions. On May 18 they rolled all our whisky into the river, but a few miles farther down they fished the barrels out and buried them in the sand bars. For several years afterward it was sold by the man I let have it, at 50 cents the drink. And, by the way, there was far more drunkenness in Alberta under prohibition than there is now with liquor selling under license at 10 cents a drink.

"The police, under the command of Col. Macleod, had a hard trip westward from Winnipeg, without a guide or suitable equipment, nearly perishing from hunger and thirst, and that in a country teaming with game. They came prepared to battle desperately against a superior force, and they found—three men within the gates of Whoopup, and realized that they had been sold!

"In the wake of the police came ranchmen and settlers of every class, and in 1877 the buffalo moved south into Montana, never to return to the Saskatchewan plains. I went with them.

Alaska is a pretty wild country yet, and still full of opportunities; its resources haven't begun to be appreciated yet. I'm going back there in a week or two.

FOR THE MEN HIS CHECK.

Former British Sailor Become Patriotic American, Is Fund Helper.

George Cooley of Colton, described as "an old English sailor and one of the best Americans alive," has donated $20 to the fleet reception fund, stipulating that it shall be for the entertainment of the enlisted men of Admiral Evans's "circumnavigating fleet."

There's an example to the men of Los Angeles who are lagging behind in sending in their checks.

Mr. Cooley is an old-timer of the San Bernardino Valley. His memory goes back to the "hearts of oak" and the "wooden walls" days of Britain's naval men and Britain's navy. But this old salt has been a good American these many years, and the navy of his adopted country is the pride of his life.

His contribution comes to The Times through Clerk C. B. Hamilton of the Colton Board of School Trustees, who rightly thinks that honor is due the old sailor for his contribution, which has been mailed to W. D. Woolwine, chairman of the finance sub-committee of the Fleet Committee.

There is that about this old mariner's subscription which calls for particular commendation. Originally of a nation which depends upon its sea power for its very existence, and having followed the sea in his earlier days, he realizes that the visit of the United States battleship fleet to the Pacific Coast is one of the important events of the century. He feels that the gallant seamen who are with the big fleet deserve the best that is going in the way of entertainment, and he backs that opinion up with financial action.

Salle avenues. Trees are being set out at twenty-five-foot intervals, allowing two to each fifty-foot lot. Trees have already been planted on Cordova, Twentieth, Twenty-first, Twenty-second, Congress, Bonita and Leota streets.

The plan adopted by the association is to purchase the trees from nurserymen at wholesale. They are then retailed to property owners. The profits accruing from the transactions are placed in a fund out of which trees are bought for property which owners decline to have planted at their own expense.

The black acacia only is planted in the district. The members of the Tree Committee say that these trees are the most suitable for the purpose, that they grow rapidly, are cleanly, and do not tear up curbs and sidewalks.

The association is now working for the passage of an ordinance which will guarantee protection to the young trees. Considerable trouble has been experienced on account of people who hitch horses near the young trees. Vandals have also done more or less damage.

The Rosedale District Improvement Association has announced its desire to confer with other improvement associations regarding the planting of shade trees. The Tree Committee is composed of Messrs. Smiley, Baptiste, O. H. Slaght, W. F. Bryant, Butcher and Folsom.

IN FINAL RESTING PLACE.

With simple services the remains of James H. Harris were laid to rest in their final resting-place in the family lot at Forest Lawn Cemetery yesterday afternoon. Mr. Harris, who for twenty years was a prominent and respected resident of this city, died very suddenly at the Jonathan Club on January 20 last. The remains were temporarily interred at Rosedale, pending the preparation of the family lot at Forest Lawn. The remains of Mrs. Elizabeth B. Roberts were moved from Rosedale to Forest Lawn at the same time.

The Cape Cod Canal.

The construction of the Cape Cod Canal will end a struggle extending through three centuries, the success of a plan three times defeated by war, and once by the assassination of a President of the United States.

While marine interests of New York, New England, and elsewhere watch the development of the project with keen interest, Cape Cod is fairly shaken to its center by the promised culmination of the task first suggested in 1630. Sandwich, the northern terminus of the canal, may be said to have been born and brought up with the canal plan. Its founders, who organized the village in 1639, were among the first in their day to look upon the canal with favor. As for the section of the cape that lies away from the canal, westward, the mention of the idea to almost any one reveals a disapproval that dates from the seventeenth century.—[Appleton's Magazine.

Grand Opening Monday and Tuesday
FEATURING NEW SPRING MILLINERY AND SUITS

Millinery

THE season's most distinctive Millinery models will be on exhibition Monday and Tuesday. The cleverest adaptations of New York and Paris styles are here. Originality and exclusiveness is the keynote of this matchless showing. Everything from a "Merry Widow" or "Gibson Girl" sailor to most elaborate pattern hats. You are invited to inspect the new styles tomorrow and Tuesday.

The New Silks

Popular Pongee weaves, including Tussah, Robespierre, Shantung, Bengaline and real Rajah, in natural shades, at 75c to $2.00 a yard.

Pongees in plaids and Persian effects, to be used in combination with the plain Pongee silks.

New Foulard silks, French and domestic—in great variety, exclusive styles, controlled by us—$1.00 to $1.50 a yard.

New Dress Goods

Tailor suitings—Serge, Panama and Novelty weaves—48 to 56 inches wide, light and dark colors; extra value at $1.75 a yard.

Sil mixed English voiles—corded, hemstitched and lace effects; street and evening shades, 42 inches wide. Special value at $1.25 a yard.

Splendid New Laces
Novelty Dress Trimmings

A magnificent showing of the new laces--including Filet, Craquelet, Rag Filet, Fiber, Cluny and Venise--in bands, galloons and medallions--White, Cream, Shantung, Arab and Black.

All-over laces to match the above in great variety. The Filet nets are very popular, both in white and colors, from $1.00 a yard upward.

THE NEW BRAIDS were never handsomer than they are this season. Bands are in popular favor---shown in Filet, Persian and Antique, in every late color combination.

Tinsel and ball fringes are also in sharp demand. We are showing them all---in the very latest novelty effects.

New Suits

The new tailored suits are here—in exclusive styles. Also silk voile reception gowns. Mirage silk suits are shown in the latest colorings.

One of the handsomest lace dresses is a Princess gown of Cream Valenciennes and Irish Crochet, over chiffon and taffeta. Price $137.50.

Another is of hand painted chiffon over a taffeta drop, trimmed with Valenciennes lace and chiffon folds. Price $125.00.

The New Waists

One of the most effective styles in waists that we are showing this season is of satin foulard silk; blue and brown stripes on white ground—tailored effect—stiff white collar, with turnover cuffs. The price of this waist is $8.50.

Another exquisite model is a plaid silk taffeta waist—shown in blue and white and brown and white dotted effect, finished with stiff collar and ruffled jabot. The price of this waist is $13.50.

THREE GOOD PURPOSES.

It is good news for us that a large appropriation is to be made for Pacific Coast defenses. The sum will be many millions. It will be enough to erect and equip proper defenses at strategic points.

This will serve three good purposes. The first, the greatest, is to put the Coast in proper condition to confront an enemy—a wise, indeed a necessary step to take in view of possible difficulties in the future. The contingencies may be far, and may be not so far off as we dream. But the country most ready for war is the country which has to fight last of all.

Then this work will put much money in circulation in comparatively dull times and make them less dull. In days when idle men are to be found, anything that promises honest employment is a thing to be glad of.

In this connection will our Democratic friends and their allies, the few so-called Republicans who clamor for lower tariff rates, reflect that if their plan were in effect (as it was in the disastrous days of the Wilson act,) there would be no money to do this work with! There may be a few schedules in the Dingley act to revise, but it is quite possible that when the work comes to be done by a Republican Congress they will find a few places where higher duties must be imposed—perhaps as many items of this kind as of those wherein lower duties are desirable. A Congress of true Republicans will see that American wage-earners, stock raisers and fruit growers are not placed where they must compete with ten-cents-a-day wages in foreign countries, and they will see, too, that the government shall have enough revenue coming to carry on such work as coast defenses.

The third good purpose to be subserved by this coast defense programme will be to give our young citizens an opportunity to form an artillery reserve and learn to handle the big guns and defy a foreign foe.

It will be a holiday to young men from the farms and shops to spend a few weeks annually in the forts learning to make as good records with the guns as the sailor men are making down at Magdalena Bay.

ALL UNDER ONE BANNER.

Three cheers and a tiger for the Army and Navy Republican League! When these stalwarts marched last night in a solid body to the opening of the Republican League of Los Angeles county they showed they were true Republicans, in politics for the good of the country through party success, and not soreheads, would-be bosses or office seekers. There is room here for one Republican organization for one purpose, and anything in the shape of a side issue is entirely out of place.

True Republicans who recognize the propriety of majority rule, who are not in politics to boss the job, or to get into office, see clearly the issue before us and the duty of the hour. So far as any most prescient eye can discern, there are no large party differences at stake. The party in California is almost all for Secretary Taft. If there are any who are not so minded the number is so small and of so little influence as to be of no concern.

To carry this State in the November election for Taft is what we are concerned about—and the election of a United States Senator through the Legislature to be chosen at the general election. There are few State issues, none vital to the national party or to the nation at large. Whatever differences there may be about local affairs may well be fought out when a State election comes on and these issues should not becloud national success.

The Times has no candidate for any office from top to bottom of the ticket and will have none with a single exception, and that is to head the ticket. This paper is heart and soul with the party for W. H. Taft for the Presidency. Beyond this, it will only ask that all the men who are to stand and represent the party be honest, fit, capable, loyal Republicans who know what they are standing for when they say they are of the Republican faith. It is no time to let traitors carry the flag or lead the fight. We want Republicans, not Populists. We want men who know what the party has stood for in the past, who will try to hold the party in the old paths; and wanting such we want no masquerading Republicans whose connection with the party is in an effort to boss it, to dictate its policies, to name its ticket, to change its principles, replacing them with vagaries of the populism which we have been fighting since time out of mind.

The electoral vote of California is likely to be vital to party success. The party in New York is torn to pieces. How serious the situation is may be seen in New York's Democratic papers, which fill their editorial pages day after day with savage attacks on the President and on Mr. Taft. These papers would not devote such exclusive attention to this subject if the feeling was not strong in the East. One of these, the Sun, is on record with a prophecy which it challenges any one who disputes its soundness to preserve, that Bryan or even Hearst is sure to carry the Empire State against Taft. Does any Republican in touch with the situation not see the fight ahead of the party in Indiana? Do we not see the awful price the unscrupulous, bargain-driving followers of Bryan are willing to pay in Illinois to secure the electoral vote of the State, in proposing to make John Mitchell Governor?

Do not let our party be caught asleep or divided when the battle comes. In this State we stand to lose thousands of old-line Democrats who have been acting with us in the last three Presidential elections. They are frank about it. The issue on which they split is dead, viz., silver, and they look to see two platforms this year so nearly alike that they will be able to return to the old political fold.

We are putting known facts, which have been duly considered, before our readers. The purpose is to awaken party interest and to appeal to party fealty. And this is all to make sure that the State will give Taft its electoral vote, a thing on which the Presidency may turn. With these facts before us it seems altogether clear that concentration of party effort is the wise thing, and that the fostering of any policy which will divide and scatter the party strength is the unwise thing. With united, earnest effort, the State will go Republican by a handsome majority. Splitting and pulling in opposite directions or settling back in the breeching is as dangerous as it is useless.

The army and navy men know what a fight is and how it is won. To close up the ranks and keep them closed is the tactics that win. The bugle call of the party to all its members is to close up and not permit a weak point to develop until the sun goes down on election day and the State is carried for W. H. Taft.

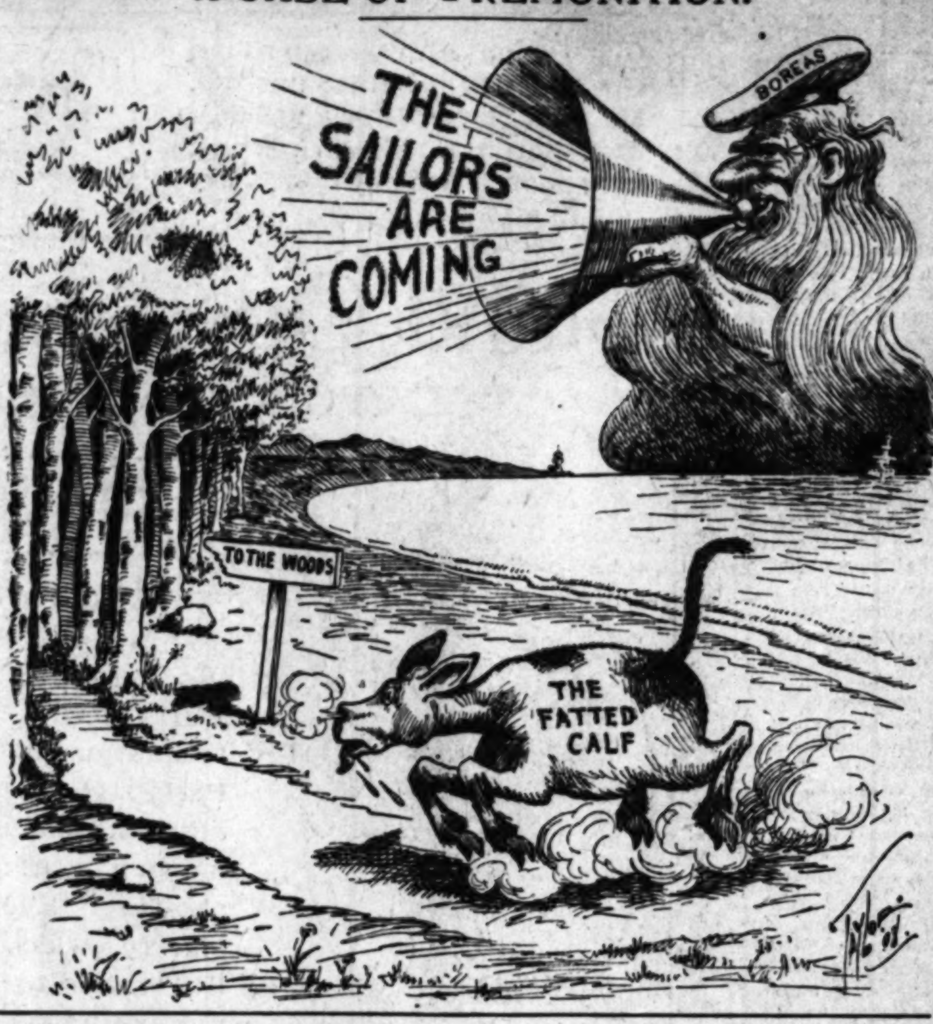
AN ACCOMMODATING MONARCH.

Our British cousins are friendly. Realizing that New York, Boston and those other little places on the Atlantic side are jealous of Los Angeles because Admiral Evans's battleship fleet is coming here, King Edward has decided to send six battleships and three cruisers across the pond. Their presence will help the easterners to remember what a warship looks like.

This British fleet is to be the escort of the Prince of Wales, who will visit Canada in July to attend the tercentenary celebration of the founding of Quebec. At least that is the excuse that has been put forward, but it is whispered that some of the King's millionaire American friends have got cold feet since the United States Atlantic fleet left their shores exposed to the mercy of any squadron that might bob up suddenly from nobody knows where and so they induced the British monarch to announce that his son will have an escort of fighting sea-dogs just as ready for a frolic or a fight as the great vessels now anchored in Magdalena Bay.

Edward VII always was accommodating. The last time the Prince of Wales visited Canada, a single ship was enough escort, but on this occasion nine of the line will accompany His Royal Highness. And Boston breathes freely again.

A CASE OF PREMONITION.



EASY FOR GRAFTERS.

Dispatches from Pennsylvania carry the information that the convicted Capitol grafters in that State can be punished with not more than two years' imprisonment and $1000 fine each. These men were among the most shameless thieves known to the history of the country. They robbed the public treasury of the commonwealth of which they are citizens of $9,000,000, and did it in a way to make a hen-roost robber ashamed of himself. They charged the State $900 for $90 tables, $4000 for $400 chandeliers, and so on all the way through from the cellar to the garret in the job of furnishing the new Capitol building at Harrisburg.

These unspeakable robbers were men of parts in Pennsylvania. They were among the prominent people in social life and politics. They cut a wide swath wherever they went and lived on luxurious fare. No doubt they were held up as examples to the rising generation in the good land of Penn. They were so "hefty," in fact, that when they asked for the contract of furnishing the Capitol building it was turned over to them without quibble, and their bills were not even audited. As a consequence, they made a haul on Pennsylvania's fat coffers that would have caused Capt. Kidd and Sir Henry Morgan to turn green with envy in the palmiest days of the Spanish Main.

And now that they have been "caught with the goods" what does the law of Pennsylvania do to them? It merely sends them to jail for two years and compels them to surrender a miserable $1000 each from the gigantic sack which they loaded with their thefts. It is ridiculous. Two years will pass quickly and then these men will emerge from a confinement made pleasant for them, and with the money they stole still in their pockets. Pennsylvania is a good mother—to thieves.

TAKE IN JAPAN, TOO.

If the battleship fleet is to go around the world, by all means take in Japan, yes, and China, on the way. It will be but a detour to go up from Manila Bay to Shanghai and Tokio and let the orientals see what our fleet is.

The Japanese government has invited the fleet to touch at the islands; and to meet this invitation in a friendly spirit would make for good feeling between the two countries.

The war talk in Japan among the common people was strong some months ago. It was based for the most part on ignorance as to our strength on the sea. A display of our sea power in oriental waters would raise our prestige 1000 per cent. and would silence Japanese talk of war with this country.

It is quite probable that the Mikado has this in mind, in sending an invitation to our fleet to visit his ports.

We say if the fleet returns by way of Suez, let it visit Japan and China ports. It will do good.

THE PENALTY OF PREMIERSHIP.

Near death's door is Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, the man who never really expected to be British Premier and who has paid the usual penalty of ill-health for the greatness that was thrust upon him. It is an old tradition at Downing street, where is the dingy residence of the first Minister of Great Britain, that health must be exchanged for the honor and glory of that exalted office.

Mr. Balfour, the immediate predecessor of Campbell-Bannerman, grew perceptibly older and graver while the burden was upon his stooping shoulders and he turned to golf as a life-saving device. As soon as he left office he was obliged to take a long rest cure.

Gladstone chopped down trees at Hawarden to save himself from collapse and it is an undoubted fact that this exercise, coupled with the heroic devotion of his unselfish wife, kept him alive for many years.

Lord Salisbury had a wonderful constitution which had been strengthened by an open-air life in Australia during his impecunious days. Moreover, he had a scientific hobby to which he turned for relief when the cares of state pressed unduly upon him. It is a fact, however, that his years were shortened on account of his labors in behalf of the nation.

The strain of office proved too much even for that man of prodigious energy, Lord Palmerston, who never knew what it was to enjoy the eight-hour day. William Pitt, first Earl of Chatham, was the only Prime Minister who fell while actually in Parliament, but many of the others left St. Stephen's on the point of exhaustion night after night.

The United States is blessed with a strenuous President, but, without detracting from Mr. Roosevelt's record in any way, it may be said that his exertions do not compare with those forced upon the British Premier. Americans who go to London appreciate this after they are afforded a glimpse at a day in the life of a Cabinet Minister. The British Prime Minister is the real ruler of the empire. He must have a seat in either the hereditary chamber or the House of Commons. There he must be on hand for hours every day while Parliament is sitting, must answer questions, repel attacks and lead government business. In the course of the sitting he may make half a dozen speeches. He must send a nightly report to the King, must wait on the monarch whenever summoned, whether it be to Windsor, Sandringham, Buckingham Palace or a Scottish retreat, must preside at frequent Cabinet councils, receive innumerable deputations, open public buildings, attend banquets, and always and everywhere make a speech suitable to the place, the occasion and the hour.

It must be remembered also that the average Premier has reached or is close to the span of life allotted by the psalmist. Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman is 71 years old and for years has been subjected to a life of terrific pressure. Courage has kept him alive, courage is enabling him still to stave off death. He has performed his duty to his country nobly and well, and if his life is spared, he owes it to himself to take things more easily and to allow another to inherit the heavy burden that goes with the highest office in the gift of the British nation.

LAYING BROAD FOUNDATIONS.

The Southern Pacific for two weeks has been bringing into the State about 350 new settlers a day. All the roads swell this figure to nearly 1000. If the number is not so great today, it will be twice as large later on when the rush comes under the low settlers' fares now in force. Well, if there is an average of 1000 a day for sixty days, there is a prospect of 60,000 new population for the spring campaign.

These newcomers are mostly farmers. They are going into the country and securing farms for which they pay in whole or in part. This is solid building for the future. California produces few things that grow out of the earth in sufficient quantity to meet the home demand, except fruits. The State is capable of producing almost every food product we need here. We should supply the whole arid district where mining is the principal occupation in the adjacent Territories.

This new population, going now into the country, is laying a sure foundation for further urban growth. With a larger farming population will come an increased demand for factory products. There is inevitable increase in merchandising.

Meantime, the city advances all the time. The Pullman sleepers all days of the year roll in with families who come to make this their home.

The prospects are bright for an interweaving of interests which means more farms and farm products, larger revenues from export products, and smaller outgo for import products, a call for more implements and machinery from the home market, with increase in factory activity, all creating more business for all classes of merchants, and work for the mechanic in building new homes for the everlasting stream of immigrants.

COSTLY EXTRAVAGANCE, SLOW RECOVERY.

We should highly appreciate our comparatively happy condition in Southern California in these days of slow recovery from depleted industrial strength in nearly all parts of the world.

We read of a score of millionaires about New York forced to sell their yachts. Last October, in the early days of the panic, when the banks were closed, Broadway, and even Wall street (that nightmare of the Populists,) were jammed with big touring cars offered for sale to get money to pay a month's current bills. From far away Antwerp we are told of the diamond cutters out of employment because American tourists are not buying necklaces and finger rings. From St. Louis comes news of car shops closed because the railroads have 300,000 idle freight cars on the side-tracks.

The commercial world overreached, as The Times often said, in extending business at a pace too rapid for capital to sustain. It was this well understood fact which enabled Rockefeller, Hill, Morgan, Ripley and others to warn the world that a crisis was on the way. They saw business men straining their credit too much, and at the same time putting too much capital into investments which were tying up more capital than the industrial world could well spare. The greatest captains of industry were the greatest plungers in speculation. The result is yachts and automobiles for sale like remnants on a bargain counter.

Meantime, the first thing to be done is to liquidate, to get out of debt. The whole business world is at this with all its might and main. The business man is no longer scolding his banker because the latter will not extend credit. The business man is busy scooping up a little ready cash to discharge some obligation long since overdue. This process is reflected in the bank deposits, which generally show a shrinkage while the available cash in the banks in its ratio to the deposits rises. This liquidation and the sale of superfluous luxuries must go on before there will be a general revival in business.

But here in Southern California we are not engaged in heavy manufacturing enterprises. Our products are finding an unusually good market. The steady increase in population calls for activity in almost all lines. New capital is coming in. Our mining enterprises are swelling bank accounts. Scores of new enterprises are on foot. Our surplus supply of rough laborers was fortunately of such a nature that it disappeared automatically and will return as easily when needed. Thus we felt the shock of checked industries

ciety from now until March 26, when at high noon the ceremony will take place at the bride's home on Massachusetts avenue. This first bride of the spring season is being feted as few brides are—and yet there is a conspicuous tinge of sadness about it all, since, two days after her marriage, she will leave the land of her birth and the home of her family for generations on a wedding journey that will end at the Persian capital, to which post Mr. Havenith has lately been accredited. A stop en route will be made in Belgium for a visit to her new relatives and for her presentation at court.

Representative and Mrs. Bourke Cockran of New York, the latter née Miss Ide of California, are entertaining the first distinguished guest of the Penetential season, the Duchess of Sutherland, for whom they closed the week with a brilliant evening reception. Invited to the dinner which preceded the reception were Vice-President Fairbanks, the Ambassador of Italy and Baroness Mayor des Planches, Senator and Mrs. Beveridge, the latter one of the attractive brides of the winter; Representative and Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, who have just returned from a visit to their home in Cincinnati, and whose marriage, like that of their hosts, was the culmination of a romance begun on the Taft trip to the Orient; Esme Howard and Lady Isabella Howard of the British Embassy, Senator Aldrich of Rhode Island, Mrs. Scott Townsend, and Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Guinness of London, who accompanied the Duchess to Washington.

Finding the meeting at teas and reception during the brief winter season is not conducive to the formation of friendships with their kind, the daughters of Senators and Representatives in Congress have organized themselves into a society, the membership of which is well-nigh regulated by the Constitution of the United States. Miss Julia Williams, daughter of the minority leader of the House, and Miss Bessie Lamb, daughter of Representative Lamb of Virginia, who originated the idea, and put it into action, left the choice of a name to the officers of the organization. The christening is to take place at the second meeting next Friday.

Miss Helen Cannon, the Speaker's daughter, was made honorary president; Miss Lamb, president; Miss Julia Williams of Mississippi, first vice-president; Miss Tillman, daughter of the Senator of South Carolina, second vice-president; Miss Mabel Madden of Illinois, third vice-president; Miss Gregg of Texas, fourth vice-president; Miss Stevens of Minnesota, treasurer; Miss Chapman of Illinois, recording secretary, and Miss Wilson of Pennsylvania, corresponding secretary. The need of such an organization has long been felt by the buds and belles of the Congressional circle from all over the United States, who come for the winter months in Washington, and who not infrequently stay at home the next season, because they have made few acquaintances at the capital whose friendship is close enough to compensate for the loss of companionsihp with the true and tried associates at home.

H. K. Wheeler and Mrs. A. W. Rhodes of Los Angeles, and Messrs. Milt Hamilton of Oakland, W. G. Emerson and W. M. Gibson of San Francisco were among the Californians visiting here during the week.

Mrs. A. E. Bowles of San Francisco is also here, the house guest of Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Metcalf, and is being extensively entertained.

Mrs. Frank Vrooman, formerly of California, but now living in Washington, gave a large tea on Tuesday, when her guests were asked to meet Miss Genevieve Wright of Danville, Ill. Assisting Mrs. Vrooman were Miss Pansy Perkins, daughter of Senator Perkins, who brewed tea over a fascinating Chinese tea stove; Mrs. George Wales and Miss Edith Willis of Illinois, who is the house guest of Representative McKinley, and the latter's niece, Miss Mattis.

Gen. Black was also present to assist his daughter.

"Historic Landmarks of California" were finely illustrated and interestingly described by Representative J. R. Knowland of Alameda at a recent meeting of the National Geographical Society, and again before a large audience in the public library. On the latter occasion, Mrs. Katherine Englebright, wife of Representative Englebright of Nevada City, recited "Lasca" in splendid style.

GRACE PORTER HOPKINS.

COMEDY OF ERRORS.

Mistakes of Angular Person from North of Tehachepi Worrk Clerks at Big Hotel.

An angular person carrying a neat handbag walked into the lobby of the Alexandria last night just after the Coaster had arrived; a few minutes later he departed with a cigar and a grouch.

He entered from the Spring-street side where is a cigar stand which resembles the clerk's desk.

The gentleman was evidently from north of the Tehachepi.

"What are your prices?" he asked the tobacconist's clerk.

"From 15 cents to as high as the ceiling," glibly returned the young man, thinking he meant the cigars.

"Gee! is that all?" the stranger asked, as he gazed with rapture at a bevy of gorgeously gowned ladies just leaving for the Paderewski concert.

A fat man with an eastern-tourist appearance, standing near the stand, showed signs of apoplexy and bit off the end of his big, fat cigar in an effort to check a sudden outburst.

The clerk, who had been bending below the counter, produced several boxes of cigars which he offered with a masterful attempt at cordiality.

"Much obliged," said the stranger as he selected a fat Havana. "Is it customary to set up good cigars to the guests?"

The youthful clerk, thinking this a mere pleasantry, chirped: "Oh, yes; we always do."

"Well," said the stranger, "where is the register?"

"Right here," came from the clerk as he pointed toward the cash-receipt box.

The stranger thought this a good joke and laughed heartily. By this time several gentlemen, who had been lounging in the lobby, edged up to enjoy the fun.

The traveler was all intent upon the clerk and asked beamingly: "But where is the book, you know; I want to put my name down so that you will know who I am."

"You don't have to register when you buy a cigar," replied the clerk, growing a trifle pale as he began to realize that he was a Havana short.

"Look here, young fellow," said the stranger, "I want a room, and please don't joke with me, for I'm not in the mood," and he puffed at the cigar furiously.

"Oh!" came feebly from the clerk as he realized his mistake. "There is the desk over there," and he dropped limply onto a stool back of his glass cases.

The stranger seized his handbag and marched with wrathful mien toward the hotel desk.

In two minutes Clerk Sibbald came tearing around the corner toward the cigar stand and exclaimed:

"Say, what made you tell that man that we had rooms here from 15 cents up? He said he was no cheap guy and would be willing to go as high as 25 cents, and when I told him our prices he declared that we were endeavoring to kill our own business and did not want his trade."

"That is not the worst of it," wailed the clerk. "He has gone away with one of our 15-cent cigars also."

WATER CURE.

MANGLED BUT NOT INJURED.

Up-to-Date Rendering of "Song of Shirt."

Modern Laundry Filled With Novel Machinery.

Employees Have Short Hours and Good Wages.

When a man sends his shirt to the laundry he has little conception of the many hands it will pass through before he again receives it. When a wagon brings to the washing establishment a quantity of bundles, these are placed on a large table, opened and the contents sorted. Then follows the marking, after which the clothes go to the sorting room, where deft fingers pick out the cotton, silk, linen and woolen goods, and sort these according to color and size.

Fine net waists, handkerchiefs of delicate fabric, laces and expensive lingerie are put in net bags before they touch the water. This is done that in passing through the machines, they may not be harmed. The washing machines are large rotary drums revolving within wooden cases, in which the water is held. The rotation is alternated in order to scatter the clothing so that the suds may seep through it thoroughly. A steam pipe helps to keep the water hot in the drums. The dirty exhaust water is run into grooves in the cement floor and then to the sewer.

When articles are cleaned, they are taken from the cylinders and placed in an extractor. This is a large enclosed steel tub, with holes in the side walls and fastened to a shaft. When this has been filled, the electric power is turned on and the tub is turned at the rate of 1600 revolutions a minute. The clothing is forced against the outer walls, and all the water pressed out. This process completed, the tube's contents are pressed through a wringer, which is supposed never to tear anything or rip off buttons.

LOTS OF SORTING.

Another sorting then takes place. Collars and cuffs are sent to one department, where they are first straightened and then passed through a starching machine, which is composed of a series of rubber rollers which force the starch well into the cloth. Each collar is then "gone over" by a girl, and after wrinkles and creases are removed, is hung on a hook on a chain conveyor. It takes twenty-seven minutes for a collar to pass through a drying room on this belt. Steam coils furnish the heat, and a large blower aids in removing the dampness.

Once perfectly dried, collars and cuffs are again moistened, and then allowed to sweat for several hours before they are put in the ironing machine. This is composed of two steel rollers, steam heated, and a large felt roller. They revolve slowly and when the collar comes out it has the proper dull finish. Should a high gloss finish be demanded, the same machine is used, but the rollers are made to revolve more rapidly.

Turnover collars are ironed flat, and a girl runs them through a machine which w[illegible] the crease, and then bends them. They are then placed over a form and a specially prepared iron curves the edges and gives them the same finish as the other portions of the collar.

Stand-up collars and cuffs are run through a machine which removes the "saw edge," so common in the olden days of hand laundering. This machine was invented by one of the pioneer laundrymen of Los Angeles, Fred E. Fay. It is used in nearly every washing establishment of any size in the United States. The wing collars go through a tipping machine, which turns the points and gives the proper finish. All varieties of collars are finally placed in a steam dryer, before being sent to the assembly room.

HANDLING FLAT ARTICLES.

Sheets, bed spreads, tablecloths, napkins and all flat articles are sent from the extractor to the mangle. This machine consists of a number of rollers, of various sizes, which are covered with felt and canvas and heated on the inside with steam. They revolve very slowly and when an article comes forth, it has been dried, smoothed and ironed.

The latest innovation is the conveyor dryer for men's shirts. Heretofore, they were placed in the draw dry kilns, which are like huge drawers filled with wooden rungs, for hanging the clothes on while hot air is forced through them. Now a shirt is placed on a coat hanger and run through in the same manner as the collars. After the dampening comes the ironing process, which is very interesting. The machines are various shaped presses. About a dozen girls handle each shirt. One iron presses the cuffs, another the neck band, a third the yokes, a fourth the sleeves and, finally, a rotary iron finishes the body. The machines have on the bottom side heavy felt matting. The top is smooth, flat heated steel. A girl with a hand iron goes over the shirt when the machines have finished their work. She accentuates necessary creases and blots out small wrinkles. Another girl places a cardboard in the center of the shirt and folds the ends and sleeves together, fastening them with pins.

Several local laundries have started a new practice, that of wrapping each white shirt in tissue paper and placing a band around it. This prevents soiling in the final handling.

With ladies' lingerie and shirt waists great care is taken in the starching. One man handles each piece and starches the proper portions, after which they are placed in the drying kilns. When they come out, they are turned over to women, who iron them by hand. On the big flat pieces a large electric iron is used, but on the finer ones the old hand system is still employed.

THOSE MISSING BUTTONS.

When a girl has gone over the various pieces and replaced missing buttons they are tied in the proper way and sent to the assembly room.

It is in this room that the greatest caution is necessary to get all the articles belonging to one person together. Various methods are used, but one of the most popular is the "shift" system. They have from six to fifteen shifts a week. Clothing started at a certain time, belongs to a particular shift, is all finished at the same time and arrives in the assembly room at about the same time. Large shelves are arranged along the walls and through the room and marked with laundry hieroglyphics. Men do all the sorting, and having received the drivers' bills from the office, check over the items, which are then placed in bundles or boxes for delivery.

THE PUBLIC SERVICE.

SUMMARY OF THE DAY.

Mayor Harper notified the administration Councilmen yesterday that he will veto the ordinance cutting the hill district out of the fire limits; a compromise has been suggested, dividing the present zone into two districts.

The Afro-American League has passed strong resolutions denouncing the Civil Service Commission and the Chief of Police for "unjust discrimination" between white and colored citizens.

Jesse Cook, an ex-convict, begged Judge Smith to be lenient yesterday, after pleading guilty to a charge of burglary, but was sentenced to eight years in prison. His companion was given five years.

A. Merrill, white, and L. Bankhead, colored, were placed on two years' probation each by Judge Smith yesterday. They pleaded guilty to a charge of burglary, with extenuating circumstances.

With the understanding that Prof. T. S. C. Lowe will be present in court next Saturday, Justice Pierce yesterday continued the supplemental proceedings in a judgment case.

AT THE CITY HALL.

WILL PROTECT FIRE LIMITS.

MAYOR TELLS COUNCIL THAT VETO IS COMING.

Says Fire and Building Departments Protest Against Letting Down Bars for the Admission of Fire Traps on the Hills—District Plan Proposed as Compromise.

The Mayor called a number of administration Councilmen to his office yesterday morning, and told them that he cannot stand for the ordinance passed last Monday, cutting away a portion of the fire limits.

"The Fire Chief and the chief inspector of buildings have reported against the ordinance," said the Mayor. "They call it letting down the bars. I am sorry to disappoint Clampitt, who is my friend, but I cannot permit that ordinance to become a law."

Clampitt told the Mayor that he will work and vote to pass the ordinance over the executive veto. But after the conference he said that he is doubtful whether he can muster a sufficient number of votes. "Two hundred of my constituents signed a petition to have the part of the district north of First and west of Hill eliminated, temporarily," he said; "they have built houses there, buildings that were passed on by the building department. Now they are told that they cannot even add a porch or cut through a window without fireproofing the whole building. To me that looks like confiscation of property."

But the Fire Chief and the Building Inspector say that the amended ordinance would permit the erection of wooden fire traps in the district. The ordinance does not make a limit as to repairs, but throws down the bars.

Chief Inspector Porter of the Pacific Board of Fire Inspection told the Mayor that Los Angeles has become a byword all along the Coast by reason of its many alterations of its building ordinances, including the fire limits. In all the other big cities of the Coast the fire limits are fixed by the charters, and can be changed only by a vote of the people.

After their conference with the Mayor yesterday the Councilmen who attended formulated a plan for classifying the present fire zone into districts No. 1 and No. 2. Clampitt favors this plan, as it is intended that in district No. 2 owners of buildings may be permitted to make repairs and alterations not exceeding 10 per cent. of the first cost of the building.

This will give the relief that Clampitt's constituents are asking without opening the way for building of new firetraps. Fire Chief Lips and Building Inspector Backus attended this conference. They are reported as saying that they will not oppose the classification of the district, provided certain territory now on the outside is made a portion of district No. -2.

Monday this recommendation will go to the Council. A committee will probably be appointed then to decide where the line between districts Nos. 1 and 2 shall be drawn.

COLORED POLITICS.

ADMINISTRATION ROASTED.

The Afro-American League has turned its back on the Democratic administration at the City Hall; it is passing resolutions denouncing every one from the Mayor to the night janitor. The trouble seems to be that the administration has kept the colored employés that the league desired to see dropped, and has dismissed those men whom the league desired to remain.

The league has passed a resolution officially condemning the Civil Service Commission for rejecting colored applicants who have passed their civil-service examination successfully, only to be marked out by the commission. This section of the resolution is as follows:

"Whereas, The Civil Service Commission have turned down members of our race, who we know have passed the mental and physical examination, but not the bias and prejudice of the examiners. Dr. Edelman says it is the prerogative of the commission to do as they see fit in such matters. Pray tell us what is the duty of a civil-service commission? The present system is a municipal fiasco."

The league condemns the Mayor because "he admits his inability to protect us against his police and civil service commissions."

Chief of Police Kern gets the following stinging reminder of wha tthe leaguers consider to be base ingratitude:

"The Chief of Police by words and actions has shown his hatred for the very ones that have rendered him assistance on more than one occasion and rendered it possible for him to obtain the heights of fame. He has caused to be dismissed from our police force two of our members that we know are innocent of the charges made against them."

Police Commissioner Woodill is roasted for presenting a petition asking that separate quarters be reserved at the Police Station for white and colored prisoners awaiting trial. Then comes the final sweeping resolve:

"That such a régime is un-American and we the Afro-American Council declare against such treatment, and that we petition the Republican members of the City Council for protection of our civil and political rights.

"Resolved that every ward and precinct manager be apprised of the hatred and treatment displayed by the present Democratic régime, and that every negro in California see to it that his brother registers in order to protect his privileges."

AT THE COURTHOUSE.

PLEADS VAINLY FOR LENIENCY.

CONFESSED BURGLAR'S RECORD AGAINST HIM.

Gets Eight Years in Prison for Breaking Open Woman's Trunk in Hotel, While His Companion Is Given Only Five Years—Tells Judge He Tried to Be Honest.

Jesse Cook was a special pleader before Judge Smith in the Superior Court, yesterday, after pleading guilty to a charge of burglary. William Sullivan also pleaded guilty to the same charge. Policeman Murray reported the circumstances of the robbery and stated that once before Cook had been sentenced for a similar crime.

"It is true, Your Honor," said Cook, "that I was sent to Folsom for three years for burglary, but when I got out I determined to lead an honest life and went to work in a hotel in San Francisco in a menial capacity and rose to be manager. After the fire I went East, but my record followed me and I was never able to hold a job. Then I came back here, but it was just the same and, in despair, I committed this burglary. If Your Honor will be lenient, I will try again to be an honest citizen."

But Judge Smith did not see things in the same light as did Cook and sentenced him to eight years in San Quentin. Sullivan escaped with a sentence of five years.

On February 24, the young men broke into the room of Mrs. E. F. Brown in the Hotel Willoughby, pried open her trunk and stole $325 worth of clothes and jewelry. The crime Cook was sentenced for previously was the robbery of the Hotel Westlake.

HARNESS THIEVES.

TWO YOUTHS PAROLED.

Egged on by a man who wished to get part of a set of harnesses cheap, according to their story, two nineteen-year-old youths, A. Merrill, white, and L. Bankhead, colored, admitted their offense before Judge Smith yesterday and were placed on probation for two years each.

"We went through a hole in E. E. Scott's barn February 26," they said, "and took part of his harnesses, as a man named Gross wanted us to get them for him." The officer who arrested the lads said that their previous records had been good.

Merrill's father appeared in court and stated that he has lived in this city since 1869. "My boy has always been a good son until this time," he said. "We are both teamsters. About two years ago, he began running with a gang of boys whom I don't like, but this is the first time he has got into trouble."

The son testified that Bankhead and he had been school chums, and that they renewed their acquaintance a week before the theft.

The court lectured both lads severely.

WIDOW BENEFITED.

BUT PETITION DENIED.

Judge Rives yesterday denied the petition of Mrs. Sai Yamaguchi that the entire estate of her husband, Nisrigro Yamaguchi be assigned to her under the provision of the code that permits small estates to be set aside entirely for a widow's benefit. It was stated that Mrs. Yamaguchi had made an agreement with the Japanese American Bank, should she get the estate, by which she would receive $300 cash. After discussion, counsel for the administrator and for the widow agreed that her interests would be better conserved by the denial of the petition.

Yamaguchi, who was a broker and promoter, died on January 2, leaving a widow and two children. His estate is involved and probably will not amount to more than $2000. Among his creditors is the Japanese-American Bank, which has a preferred claim.

The court ordered that the widow be allowed $50 monthly until further notice.

COURTHOUSE NOTES.

BREVITIES MISCELLANEOUS.

WOMAN WINS. A jury in Judge Bordwell's court yesterday brought in a verdict for the defendant in Mrs. Mabel H. McFarland's $5409 damage suit against the Los Angeles Interurban Railway Company, for injuries received by her in July, when a controller exploded on the car on which she was riding.

LONG MISSING. Mrs. Antonia Bree, sister of Lawson Moreno, a Mexican laborer, who disappeared on December 24, 1899, and has not since been heard from, filed yesterday in the Superior Court a petition that letters of administration on his $900 estate be granted to Attorney W. T. Blakely.

HOTEL THE ISSUE. Asserting that they were unlawfully ejected from the Bay View Hotel at Bay City on December 24, Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Relfe yesterday filed suit in the Superior Court against the Bay Side Land Company and others to recover possession of the property, with $2100 damages.

BROOKS' COMPLAINT. Attorney J. Marion Brooks yesterday filed in the Superior Court his first amended complaint in his $25,000 damage suit against Judge B. N. Smith for alleged false remarks about him during the litigation over the Nicholaus Priester estate.

REALTY DEAL. Mr. and Mrs. T. Pfeiffer yesterday filed suit in the Superior Court against the McCarthy Company to collect $4480, alleged due on a $16,500 purchase of real estate.

INFORMATIONS FILED. Dist.-Atty. Fredericks yesterday filed in Judge Smith's court the following informations: W. P. Galbreth, W. Pawgett, R. Murray and R. G. Smith, burglary.

TRIAL SET. Frank Carlson, charged with the embezzlement of $500 from newspaper publishers, yesterday pleaded not guilty in Judge Smith's court, and his trial was set for next Friday.

LUNCHEON SERVED. By permission of the Supervisors, luncheon was served on the Courthouse grounds yesterday at noon to 300 children who were attending the rally of the Loyal Temperance Legion of Los Angeles county.

COURT ENDS IT. Holding that Mrs. Eva Dickhoff has no right to sue Attorney Milton K. Young for abrogation of Jacob Heberle's agreement with him in the Heberle contest, Judge Monroe yesterday ordered struck from the files the suit. As F. R. Willis had been appointed by Judge Rives in December as guardian ad litem for Jacob Heberle, the court held that he only could institute such an action. Jacob Heberle retained Young in the Heberle litigation, in 1906, under a contingent agreement by which the attorney will receive about $5000 should the Supreme Court break George Heberle's will.

INCORPORATIONS. Articles of incorporation were filed yesterday by the American Bran Gold Company, with capital stock of $100,000, of which $3000 is subscribed, and the People's Real Estate Company, with capital stock of $10,000, of which $3 is subscribed.

NO BABY IN JAIL. Judge Wilbur has refused to allow Mrs. Marie Scott to have her fifteen-months-old baby with her in the City Jail. The woman is held on a vagrancy charge. The court directed that the child be kept by the family which has the infant in charge, and that Roy Scott, the father, pay $17.50 monthly for maintenance until the mother is released.

IN THE POLICE COURTS.

Jury Disagrees in Woman Socialist Case—New Trial Ordered—Dog Thief Fined.

After deliberating over the case of Mrs. Cora Decker, a socialist, charged with violating the ordinance which forbids speechmaking on the streets without a permit, a jury in Justice Chambers's Court yesterday announced its failure to agree.

The jurors had been closeted for four hours, when Justice Chambers sent for them. In reply to a question, the foreman said:

"We have reached no agreement, and there is no prospect of reaching any."

The justice discharged them, but ordered the case to be set for retrial at the earliest possible date.

The socialists hoped, it is said, that Mrs. Decker, as a woman, would have the sympathy of the jury, but it is understood that the disagreement was due to doubt as to whether she was actually on a public street at the time of her arrest.

The trial of Mrs. Decker occupied two days. More than 100 business men were examined before a jury was selected.

The defense offered no testimony, and contented itself with an argument on the constitutional right of free speech.

There are thirty more cases to be tried.

Steals Pet Dog.

Frank H. Jones, a carpenter, yesterday pleaded guilty to the theft of a small dog from the yard of Frank La Voy, on South Evergreen street. He said that he liked the dog very much, and that the dog seemed to like him, and so he took it home with him. He was fined $10, and his sentence suspended on his promise of future good behavior.

LUMBER NOTES.

BY WALTER J. BALLARD.

Japan's lumber exports are increasing very rapidly. Their value in 1907 was $7,500,000.

American exports of wood and its manufactures in 1907 calendar year reached a value of $86,032,614, by far the largest of any previous year. The increase over 1906 was $8,800,000, and over 1905 it was $26,200,000. The shipments were chiefly to Great Britain, Belgium, France, Germany, Italy, Netherlands, Canada, Central America, Mexico, Cuba, West Indies, Bermuda, Argentina, British Australasia, Philippine Islands, British Africa, Chile, Hongkong, Japan, Chinese Empire, Colombia, Venezuela and British East Indies. The 1907 increase was chiefly in lumber, $7,000,000, and the other $1,000,000 was in furniture.

According to the West Coast Lumberman, the State of Washington has 195,237,000,000 feet B. M. of uncut timber, spread over 16,554 square miles.

Alaska and Hawaii each purchase about $750,000 worth a year of American woods.

Millmen in the Revelstoke district of British Columbia are indignant because the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway has placed a second order for 125,000 ties and 150,000 fence posts in Minnesota, while just that kind of timber is plentiful in the Columbia River Valley.

Northern Pine mills (Upper Mississippi River) shipped 266,932,067 feet of hemlock in 1907, a decrease of only 2,782,668 feet, or 1.03 per cent. The total shipments of all kinds of lumber were 1,578,661,426 feet, a decrease of 190,042,700, or 10.7 per cent.

The report for 1907 of the Pacific Lumber Inspection Bureau of Seattle shows that Washington and Oregon shipped that year by water to domestic ports the following:

Kind.	Feet.
Lumber	1,055,810,401
Lath	35,685,133
Pickets	45,383
Shingles, pieces	147,875,750

California received 1,006,000,000 feet of the lumber, 34,500,000 feet of the lath, 31,800 feet of the pickets, and 141,500,000 of the shingles. The foreign cargo shipments were:

	Feet.
Lumber	459,701,659
Lath	4,614,621
Pickets	475,679
Shingles, pieces	175,000

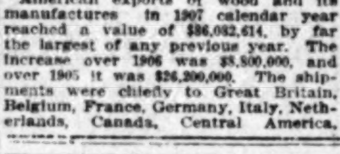
The principal foreign shipments were to (in order of importance as named) South America, Australia, China, Mexico, Great Britain and Europe, Japan, India, South Africa, Panama, Fiji Islands, Samoa, and New Zealand and Tasmania.

The Yellow Pine Manufacturers' Association put the entire 1907 output as 8,854,017,784 feet by 1520 mills in the States of Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, Alabama, Missouri, Georgia, Florida and Oklahoma.

F. F. Finlay, statistician of the Redwood Manufacturers' Association, gives in the West Coast Lumberman, the output of redwood each year for seven years, as follows:

Year.	Feet.
1901	244,386,075
1902	262,597,015
1903	301,343,953
1904	324,676,960
1905	347,679,159
1906	409,702,576
1907	437,515,653

In 1907 Pacific Coast mills shipped lumber cargoes (several to most of the foreign ports named) to Valparaiso, Mexico, Talara, Hamburg, China, Australia, Callao, Guaymas, Hilo, Honolulu, Sydney, West Coast, Guatemala, Hawaii, Delgoa Bay, Panama, Iquique, Nitrate Port, Hongkong, Glasgow, Leith, Arica, Salina Cruz, Santa Rosalia, Port Pirie, Africa, Autofogasta, Kahului, Tocapilla, Tien-tsin, Tsingtau, Taku, Taltal, Mollendo, Fremantle, Chile, Suva Fiji, Manila, Japan, Yokohama, Shanghai, Eleele, Manzanillo, Alaska, Mazatlan, Liverpool, North China, Kobe, Adelaide, Melbourne, Port Elizabeth, England, Mahukona, Apia, Topolobampo, Port Matalla, Bombay, Port Natal, Newcastle, N. S. W.; Nagasaki, La Boca and Osaka—in all sixty-three ports in other countries received American lumber from Pacific ports.



Gold Crowns

I have always heretofore shared with most people the dread of a dentist's chair. But now am sure I shall not dread the ordeal again, for at your office I can truthfully say, "I was not hurt at all." Even the bridge work which I had dreaded was painless and most satisfactory.
MRS. EARL ROGERS.

TAKE ADVANTAGE OF THIS OPPORTUNITY. Our Guarantee is Good, as we are responsible. We refer you to the Merchants' National Bank and our patrons.

IN CROWN WORK we cannot be excelled, and not even equaled. Twenty-five years experience and constant practice in this branch is the basis of our assertion. No boys or students to practice on you. With us you are not experimenting. We have stood a 15 years' test in Los Angeles.

Dr. Schiffman extracted twenty teeth for me, and did it absolutely without pain. I have had a great deal of experience with other dentists, and can truthfully say that Dr. Schiffman's method is best of all. I highly recommend him to everyone.
T. B. ROSECRANS,
Soldiers' Home.

For all the past fourteen years Dr. Schiffman has been doing my dental work. In all they extracted and replaced by means of crown and bridgework some twenty odd teeth. The work is very satisfactory and I highly recommend him.
H. A. WITTICK,
81 Mary st., Pasadena, Cal.

Have had molar tooth extracted by Dr. Schiffman. It was a complicated task, but work was done very successfully and I heartily recommend Dr. Schiffman to any needing dental work.
REV. W. E. BLAIR,
District Supt. Children's Home Society of California, 224 Daisy ave., Long Beach, Cal.

Have had several teeth extracted by Dr. Schiffman without any pain.
M. E. MASON,
With Fairbanks Morse & Co., 124 S. Los Angeles st.

Dr. Schiffman did some crown work for me, four years ago, which proved satisfactory. I came in today and had my teeth examined and found that everything was just like new.
MRS. A. SCHILLING,
564 W. 32nd st.

I have had crown work and bridge work of twelve teeth done by Dr. Schiffman and three extracted without the least bit of pain, and can recommend him to everyone.
MRS. A. FUHRBERG,
300 N. Guadalupe st., Redondo Beach.

I have had bridgework done by Dr. Schiffman and I am pleased in every way.
MRS. A. OLESEN,
1115 E. 12th st.

Dr. Schiffman extracted three teeth for me absolutely without pain. He also fitted three teeth from which I suffered no inconvenience whatever. I heartily recommend Dr. Schiffman for all kinds of dental work.
PROF. J. J. WHITE,
St. Vincent's College.

Dr. Schiffman performed a most successful operation in the placing of a porcelain crown, most natural to life. I am very well pleased and satisfied. The work was executed without pain. Dr. Schiffman does as he advertises.
JENNIE ENGERS,
1018 Figueroa st.

I have had two difficult gold fillings put in by Dr. Schiffman and can say that they are entirely satisfactory.
GRACE HALLIDAY,
Spaulding Station, L. A.

Being a stranger in this city and not knowing any dentist, I am certain I found one of the best, "Dr. Schiffman," his work is very satisfactory and should be highly recommended.
KATHRYN BUCKLY,
530 Temple st.

Before having Dr. Schiffman do any work for me, I was satisfied with two crowns which I had put on in the East. But now that Dr. Schiffman has done some work for me, I find it necessary to have the others taken off and two of "HIS" in their places. Dr. Schiffman's work is certainly very satisfactory.
MRS. T. E. BURGES,
Fullerton, Cal

Dr. Schiffman extracted two worthless teeth for me and replaced them by bridgework, which was done to my entire satisfaction and without any pain whatever.

STILL HOT.

BOOM GROWS BIGGER YET.

Rawhide Still Has the Call on Nevada Camps.

Leasers Now at Work in All Directions.

Week's News from "Times'" Own Correspondent.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

RAWHIDE (Nev.) March 12.—There's something in the air and the ground at Rawhide that takes an immediate grip on the casual visitor and holds him fast, turns pessimists to optimists, converts kickers into boosters, makes of mental dyspeptics healthy citizens and changes bellyaches to bowels of compassion for the poor devils not privileged to be here. Reno, once properly classified as a chronic doubter, sent hither a delegation of representative residents for purposes of cold-blooded investigation. Upon its return home the party wrote to the Rawhide Reception Committee, expressing gratitude for the homely hospitality shown here and penning among others this line: "With all the tests made by our party we are bound to acknowledge that such a mineral showing was never before made by a camp so young and that you are in a fair way to outgoldfield Goldfield."

SPORTS TAKE A HAND.

All sorts of people are affected on sight. None is immune from the contagion. Riley Grannon, turfman of national repute, took a flyer, just to satisfy curiosity, and is established in business to stick. Tex Rickard, in much the same walk of life, drove in, slept over night, next morning bought an $8000 lot, and ordered carloads of fixtures shipped by express to furnish his building, erected in a week. Zadig, the 'Frisco broker and promoter, spent his first day in the hills that wall in the city, and that evening exclaimed, "What I have seen convinces me that Rawhide will prove a greater producer than was the famous Comstock. Never before in my experience have I seen so much gold in evidence, so many shafts in rich ore and such positive indications of certain persistency of values to depth."

San Francisco, whence came Zadig, is pouring its population into Rawhide at a score a day. Twenty mining men of the Golden Gate, officially representing the largest exclusively mining stock exchange on earth, are scattered over the close-in claims today, gathering data for their authoritative report. Enough has been overheard to convince the overhearer that no knocks will be administered.

What may possibly be of more momentous significance is the fact that without exception all and eminent engineers and experts unite in singing the praises of Rawhide: that is, all who have seen the camp. If a condemnation has been uttered its author was a much bebooted and bebuckled person, just out of school and just into corduroys, who gleaned his premises by club fireside interviews. Two, not of that sort, are W. B. Devereaux, Jr., and E. G. Locke. The former is of the big house of Devereaux & Son, New York engineers and operators. The latter is an English engineer of international note, with a trunk full of cross-water diplomas. It hath been said that talk is cheap, but after their visit Devereaux bought stock in the Kearns No. 2 lease on Balloon hill and Locke took a block in the Truett No. 2 lease on Hooligan. When mining engineers buy mining stocks in a just-forming mining camp there is reason to suspect the presence of ore in the near vicinity.

STILL THEY COME.

There are other indications that such suspicion is entertained in divers quarters. Population is increasing at a hundred a day and an army of carpenters is engaged in the frenzied construction of shelter. To its assistance comes now the establishment of a mammoth brick yard which will be turning out an excellent grade of building material within a few weeks. Steps are taking toward the numbering of residences and business houses. An efficient fire department, volunteers from among the biggest men in camp, has the backing of the entire citizenry and the county commissioners. Thomas Kearns, of leasing fame, assures the speedy installation of light, power, water and milling plants. The Rawhide Western Railroad has finished its preliminary survey between Rawhide and Schurz and the laying of tracks will begin by the middle of April. It is not unreasonable to expect the inauguration of a regular passenger schedule by the first of July.

AGITATORS SQUELCHED.

There will be no labor troubles, such as have cursed Goldfield, in Rawhide for at least a year and probably for all time. At a recent election of officers of the Rawhide local a fractional element of the agitating variety was snowed under by a 95 per cent. conservative plurality. Rawhide is a leasing camp. A great number of the men working on the claims are interested in the property. Production is the goal toward which nearly all are making and already results are in evidence. Shipments are making ready on every hill about the city and out as far as Regent and the wonderful Royal and Tiger, west of town. Before the passing of another month regular consignments of ore to the market will far exceed the Goldfield tallies for the same period of development. All Rawhide needs to fill all requirements of a full-fledged camp is a stock exchange and that will come along in a very few months. Meanwhile there is brisk trading evident every day on the curbs of Rawhide and Nevada avenues.

LAST CHANCE.

A. W. Coote, associated with A. A. Codd in the control of the issues of the Rawhide Mining Company, is spending the week in camp, giving his personal attention to the progress making on the Last Chance claim, situated at the head of Nevada avenue, the main business thoroughfare of the city. It is conservative to state that in no other camp of the Golden West is there so spectacular an auriferous showing as is present on the surface of Last Chance hill. Already the trenches and shallow shafts have proved up four big veins, coursing the entire length of the claim and everywhere yielding most phenomenal values in gold, tempered with a sprinkling of silver. At one point it is possible to walk for 750 feet continuously on croppings that in no place fail to return generous pannings, and almost invariably display the yellow in the rock to the naked eye. One of the most conspicuous demonstrations of Last Chance's wonderful treasure reserves has been made by the Morrissey lease, recently sold to Utah capitalists. Under the new regime work has started in the sinking of a 100-foot contract shaft to exploit the proved ledges at a profitable depth.

MILL ON THE FLAT.

Codd and Coote, among the most prominent of the heavyweight operators of Goldfield and other Nevada districts, have made arrangements for the building of a big mill, on the flat below the city, to handle the output of the Last Chance and of the St. Ives lease, situated between the best-known diggings on Balloon Hill and also controlled by them. This plant will be in commission just as soon as the Reno contractors can built it, and will probably be the first company works to start its wheels moving. There appears to be firm foundation for the nickname already given the Last Chance, "the Mohawk of Rawhide."

MICROBE FRACTION.

Lying in the afternoon shadow of Last Chance hill, and adjoining that claim, is the Microbe fraction, a choice portion of the territory owned by the Rawhide Combination Gold Mines Company, organized by Ben D. Luce, prominent mine maker of Utah and Nevada and now a resident of Los Angeles. The Hessler lease on the Microbe is drifting northward on the sixty-foot level, along a big lead that offers specimen ore as rich as the best in camp. The entire face of the drift is good for an average sampling around the $300 mark, while big seams stand the fire test up to thousands per ton. The Rawhide Combination is projecting development operations on company account at the Microbe and also on the three other claims to which it holds absolute title.

RAWHIDE DAISY.

Diamondfield Jack Davis of Goldfield, who has the honor of having located the Daisy mine in the Diamondfield section of Goldfield district, is taking personal charge of the Rawhide Daisy, named for his first love. The property of the Rawhide Daisy lies on the eastern slope of Balloon Hill, and is literally surrounded on every side with rich producers. Within its own lines the Daisy has proved in numerous places a healthy fissure between perfect walls, and has started a big working shaft for systematic exploitation of the ledge which reveals alluring gold values wherever pierced. Leases have been applied for, but none has been allowed, the management being so sanguine of the future and so amply provided with development funds that it begrudges the royalties that would accrue from such course. J. H. Schweble, well known for his leasing operations on the Mohawk, is superintendent of the Rawhide Daisy. A hoist is en route to the diggings, and a lively campaign of deep development is promised. Daisy should be in the shipping list before the expiration of many weeks.

RAWHIDE HILLS.

H. D. Macmaster, one of the best known mining engineers in the West, has charge of the choice domain of the Rawhide Hills Mining Company, just west of town, and in close proximity to the Royal and Tiger. Rawhide Hills adjoins the New York group, recently passed to outside control for a big price. Five sets of leases are working on the Hills, and already two of these are sacking ore for the market. Work is to be begun at once on company account. The estate embraces fifty-five acres, and not an acre is without an encouraging mineral display.

NEVADA UMPAH.

On Nevada Umpah No. 1 claim of the Consolidated group the Rawhide Umpah Mining Company's lease has within the last week made a fine showing of milling ore. This is the lease of two blocks of ground, more familiarly known as the Calvert lease, having at its helm Charles Calvert, closely identified with the Pollard lease on the Florence at Goldfield. It adjoins the Big Four, and measures 300 x600 feet. All the way down to its bottom, sixty feet, the shaft has followed good milling ore, averaging upward of $10 a ton and frequently running as high as $50.

RAWHIDE FLORENCE.

Charles M. Bredhoff, Clayton Gannett and S. E. Phippen are officers of the Rawhide Florence Gold Mining and Milling Company, which owns the New York, New York No. 1, New York Annex and Scott's Nos. 1 and 3, about ninety acres, within the lines of the proved area. Nine consecutive assays recently taken on this ground gave average returns of $11.10, $23.80, $30.30, $41, $14.60, $111.80, $35.75, $471.60 and $66.09. Up to date the most favorable showings have been made on the New York Annex and the two Scott claims. On one lease that is working on the Annex ore is being sacked for shipment. This lease is owned by one of the original owners of the claim, who refused to deed it to the Florence company until he had gained permission to operate the lease.

RAWHIDE REGENT.

Rawhide and Reno people are making the fur fly on the property of the Rawhide Regent Mining Company, whose destinies they control. Fifty-seven acre comprise the Regent's holdings just northeast of the Royal and Tiger. Development is being carried on by means of a working tunnel which is expected shortly to tap the big ledge which pans well. Another company working is in ore that gives colors as big as wheat grains. One of five leases at work is following truck that runs up to $100 the ton. Rawhide Regent appears to be one of the sure winners of the district.

RAWHIDE OWL.

On McCloud Hill, which is really a portion of Hooligan Hill, the Rawhide Owl One Mining Company, owning two leasing blocks, has opened twenty-five feet of milling ore at a depth of sixty feet and the cross-cuts that are driving both directions have not yet reached the walls. In this space are frequent streaks of free gold ore that runs into the thousands a ton, as rich as was found on the Flynn-Ryan lease on the Hooligan, adjoining the Owl. This fabulous Flynn-Ryan strike of $70,000 ore was made only twenty feet from the Owl's lines. The Owl, which has in sight enough ore to justify the implanting of reduction works, will soon begin the erection of a company mill and will have plenty of shipping ore to spare. In addition to the leases the Owl One Company owns outright two Sensitiveness of Glass.

It seems scarcely credible, but it is a fact, declares one who knows, that a glass can be broken by the voice. If you strike a thin wine glass while you hold it by the stem it will emit a certain note—in most cases a pretty deep one. On approaching the glass rapidly to your mouth, and shouting into it the same note as loudly as possible, the vibrations of the glass being thereby extended, it will be shivered into fragments. This used to be a favorite experiment of Lablanche, the renowned singer, who would thus break, one after the other, as many glasses as were handed to him.

A GREAT WASTE.

COST OF FLOODS TO THE COUNTRY.

HUNDRED MILLION DOLLARS A YEAR IS LOST.

This Great Damage Believed to Be Needless While All the Wasted Water Is Needed to Augment the Streams During the Dry Seasons. Study of Remedies for Flood Losses.

[Washington Star:] Floods cost the people of the United States $100,000,000 a year. The mere menace of these floods prevents the development of thousands of square miles of otherwise valuable property and limits the usefulness of a far greater area, while the torrents themselves each year obliterate enormous values and bring to naught the toilsome work of many people.

A great flood is, above all things, a source of waste—as a rule of needless waste. Some of the elements of this waste—the damage to property, trade and public comfort—are familiar, forcing themselves into recognition with every recurrence of flood stages by the interruption of business and the immense expenditures required to restore normal conditions; but other elements are unfamiliar or remain quite forgotten. The greatest item of loss connected with floods, that which is the farthest reaching and of widest scope, is the waste of the water itself. A very conservative estimate of the value of this water places it at five times that of the more tangible results of flood damage. That is, every gallon of this wasted water is needed urgently to augment the flow of the streams in times of drought. If the flood water of the streams of the United States could be stored for future use it would be worth to the people of the country $500,000,000 annually.

Although the great mass of the people regard a flood as an inevitable mischance, accepting the consequent losses with such philosophy as they are able to summon, yet most floods could nevertheless be prevented by intelligent effort; and the avoidance of such an effort shows an indolence and an improvidence that would not be tolerated in the smaller affairs of life.

The engineers of one of the branches of a great government bureau—the water resources branch of the Geological Survey—have been for a number of years making systematic studies of flood conditions on many streams throughout the country and the survey has published several reports on the subject. An account of the flood on Passaic River in 1902 by G. B. Hollister and M. O. Leighton was presented in water supply paper No. 8, and a report on the flood on the same river in 1903 was made by Mr. Leighton in water supply paper No. 92. The destructive floods in the United States in 1903, 1904 and 1905 were studied by E. C. Murphy and by others, whose reports are given in water supply papers Nos. 96, 147 and 162, and incidental investigations of floods are reported in other publications of the survey. Renewed impetus was given to the work by the great flood in the Ohio River basin in March, 1907, which was one of the two greatest in the last century, the other having occurred in 1884.

The ideal remedy for floods, according to the engineers of the survey, lies in the creation of conditions on the surface of the ground that will prevent the rapid passage of rain or the water formed by the melting of snow or ice to the channels of the streams; that is, the earth's surface must be kept in a porous condition, so that the water will be absorbed and held as by a sponge and allowed to pass slowly into the streams. Throughout the eastern and by far the greater part of the western uplands this porous condition is maintained by natural processes. Wherever it is lacking in this part of the country the fault may be laid at the door of mankind. Vegetation is the great agent that produces porosity of soil, and the most effective form of vegetation for the retardation of surface flow is forest cover. The earth is kept in a loose condition by the roots of the trees, shrubs and other plants, and the mat of fallen leaves and twigs and bark that litter the ground is even more absorbent than the soil itself. The surface is also protected from the direct rays of the sun by the foliage on the trees, which prevent the hardening or toughening of the ground that takes place in soils that are bared to the sun. Forestation, therefore, is the prime requisite for the prevention of the needless waste caused by the floods.

The next requisite is the construction of reservoirs to retain the waters so that they may be made useful during seasons of low water. In the course of a year a river passes through all stages from high to low, but there is a certain range of stage above and below which it does not persist for any considerable period. For many of the streams of the United States the engineers of the survey have definitely determined this range, and work on still other streams is in progress. The reservoir serves to catch the surplus water that would form the flood, hold it over during the intermediate stages of the river and discharge it into the stream during seasons of extreme deficiency. In contending for this method of stream control the engineers of the survey maintain that the logical way to control a river is to control its sources of supply; that nearly all the rivers of the United States can be readily controlled by the construction of storage reservoirs on the the headwater streams; that the way to prevent floods is to use these reservoirs to catch and temporarily hold the flood waters, so that they will not descend upon the lower valleys in large volume; that on most streams it is undesirable to attempt to control floods by endeavoring to confine the water between high and expensive levees; and that the ultimate cost of such conservation of waste waters will appear nominal when compared with the enormous benefits conferred, these benefits being applied to water power and to irrigation, as well as to flood prevention and navigation.

An Old Song.

When all the winds are mellow in th glad spring-time
And bank and fell and fallow blos som laden,
When every breath's a song and ever laugh like rhyme,
Sing hey, the day for youth to mee
a maiden!
Then out amid the morning,
Let wisdom waste her warning,
We'll laugh, dear heart, and sing, dea heart, through all the golden day
Red lips are such a treasure
As only love can measure
When all the world is merry in th month of May!

When all the dark is hollow and th
wind blows cold
And down the west the tawny sun i sinking,
When every word is wise, and ever heart grows old,
Sing ho, the night's a noble time fo drinking!
Then drown the wizard sorrow!
Tonight from death we borrow,
We'll laugh, good friends,—and quaff, good friends, until the dawn o day!
Let song and wine remind us
Of loves we left behind us
When all the world was merry in the month of May!

DADDY" TELLS OF REPUBLIC.

nly the Jailbirds Required to Attend Church.

at Bedford Makes Eloquent Talk Also.

itizens of San Fernando Invite You.

The crowd of men at the City Club esterday at noon was so large that challeng d the capacity of the big ning-room at the Hotel Westminster. The attraction was a talk by Wil- am R. George of New York, founder the George Junior Republic at reeville, and who is here to see its rst branch started at San Fernando. r. George is a modest, smiling man, d was received with applause so ng-continued that it might have disconcerted many men, but Mr. George, hen he got an opening, smiled still ouder and said:

"That's very nice."

Entering upon his talk, Mr. George lled the attention of his hearers to e fact that when he addressed them year ago, "the Junior Republic was ly a small prospect, but today it's e real thing—it's in operation."

He said that in casting about for a ace to start the first branch of his xperiment, he had decided on Southn California because the people behind the movement were so deeply in rnest.

"I felt that if it failed here, we might s well give up the ship. But don't e alarmed, it will not fail. I have lked with many judges, but with ry few who have the human interst in boys that is shown by Judge Vilbur," which remark was the sigal for tumultuous applause.

In telling what the Junior Republic , Mr. George said that it has no ism hatever, except Americanism—a place here the boy and girl may have a hance.

NOT A REFORMATORY.

"It has every phase of political and eligious belief, just the same as a ig republic, and twenty years from ow you will read in the cyclopedia: unior Republic: a village whose citins are between the ages of 14 and 21.'

"We unconsciously begin to compare with a boarding school, a reform hool, or something of that kind. We ust forget all this, for the only thing e a Junior Republic is a 'republic. on't look at the citizens as if they re criminals, for they are not. They ave to meet in the Junior Republic ll the ordinary problems that come any republic, such as capital and bor, church and state, and even oman suffrage, for the girls can vote the Junior Republic as well as the oys."

He recited an amusing story of a bor agitator among the citizens of e Freeville republic. He worked the ale citizens up to the belief that ey ought to have an eight-hour law; lled a town meeting and passed such law, but forgot to reckon with the act that the girls were also citizens. hey hastened to repeal the law, but ot until after they had to go superless to bed one night.

He urged his hearers to go out and isit the San Fernando republic, asuring them that they will be welcome t any time. Perhaps the most remarkable fact mentioned in connection ith the Freeville republic, where over 00 boys and girls have lived, is that here has never been a death in the epublic. He said:

"They are such a hardy lot of felows, you could hardly kill them with n ax."

He further said that in the 700 who ave come and gone, not one has urned out a criminal, though a dozen r so have been arrested on petty harges.

"You pick out twenty sons of rich milies from the 'prep' schools," coninued Mr. George, "and I'll pick wenty from the Junior Republic, and 'll wager we'll have just as many ames in 'Who's Who,' as you will."

Asked if the citizens of the republic re compelled to attend church, Mr. eorge replied:

"Certainly not, no more than you ould compel your citizens to attend hurch, but an investigation at Freeille shows that 90 per cent. of the itizens attend some religious service. The only ones compelled to attend are he prisoners in the jail."

"DADDY" NAT TALKS.

Nat Bedford, who will have charge f the San Fernando republic, was ntroduced and made a good impresion, by his manner and his ability to xpress himself in the presence of a ritical audience. In the course of his ddress he said:

"You may get the idea that the citiens of the Junior Republic are all ad in some way, but that is a mistake. The republic is good enough for ny boy or any girl and we have many citizens who voluntarily come o the republic to live."

Mr. Bedford declared with much warmth of eloquence: "No better citizens ever came to California than those who have just come here from Freeville. They love their republic and we brought them in order that they might bring its spirit with them.

"There are plenty of boys just as good at Freeville, and many who could stand here and talk to you better than I can. We brought these boys, not because they are the best, but because they are boys who do things."

He created great enthusiasm by declaring eloquently that "we like to get the leaders of the gang because we make them leaders of good citizens."

Both speakers gave earnest invitations to the mass meeting in Simpson Auditorium on Monday night and to the inaugural ceremonies at San Fernando on Thursday. All the members of the republic will be present at the meeting on Monday night and a number of them will speak.

Rides Only Centuries.

Ernest G. Grupe, a young Brooklynite, and one of the best-known long-distance cyclists in the United States, who has made two previous attempts to win the long-distance cycling championship of the world, has at last had his efforts crowned with success. During the year just closed Grupe pedaled seventy-four centuries, including three doubles, over the official courses on Long Island, checking at the official checking stations, according to the rules of the Century Road Club of America. Grupe also won the national membership contest and finished third in the mileage contest. Grupe's best time in the mileage contest is 6 hours 5 minutes and 25 seconds, including time consumed in chain and other wheel troubles.

SANTA ANA
SOMERSET ACRES

Free Water

In the heart of a great artesian district where water in unlimited quantities is piped free to each acre in large steel mains. The flowing wells, the fertile soil and its remarkable products are all there to see. Crops go with the land.

Thirty Minutes

Thirty minutes from the Huntington Depot, on the fast Santa Ana electric line. Highest point between Los Angeles and Santa Ana. The site of a large suburban city. Power house, freight and passenger station right on the tract at Somerset.

Land that Pays for Itself

The good land is the land to buy. It is in itself a substantial asset. It never can be worth any less, and must steadily become more valuable. Close to a large city like this, the advance is certain and substantial. Somerset Acres is but 30 minutes from 6th and Main on the Santa Ana electric line. It has been a profitable ranch for years, being the finest portion of the famous old Bixby ranch. Flowing wells provide free water in large steel mains. Steel mains carry it to each acre. The soil, which is the finest garden loam, produces potatoes, onions, beets, beans, tomatoes, strawberries, melons, corn, alfalfa walnuts and all deciduous fruits. It is a mistake to experiment with poor or untried land when proven soil with a long record of fertility and productiveness with abundance of free water may be hand so close in and so cheap.

RAILROAD TO HARBOR.

tained under the original Flint resolution in Congress. For if the Southern Pacific gets possession of San Pedro harbor it will kill Wilmington and deal it a blow it will take more than twenty years for it to recover from.

"When the Panama Canal is completed the ships of all companies and nations using the canal on their way to the north, to Hawaii and to the Orient, will pass within seventy miles of Los Angeles and this port will become a half-way station. We are preparing to reap the benefit of this position.

WESTERN PACIFIC "POSSIBLE."

"It is possible that the Western Pacific will enter Los Angeles by our tracks, but at the same time any other road which desires to use them for this purpose will have the right. It is true that there may be some connection with the Gould lines in so far as the use of our tracks for this purpose is concerned, but it should be understood that this company is absolutely independent of the Western Pacific or of any other railroad or corporation."

The Harbor Company proposes to dredge the West Basin to a depth of thirty feet, sufficient to admit the largest vessels now sailing the Pacific to enter without trouble. It will also build docks and slips, warehouses, terminal facilities for the railroad so far as providing facilities for the unloading of vessels directly upon the cars is concerned, and for the building of a city which will be part of Wilmington and part of Los Angeles in the Shoestring strip, which touches upon the West Basin at this point.

In fact, if the plans of the company are carried out, and the assertions of the men interested in this gigantic project are positive that they will be, Wilmington will become more important as a port of entry for Los Angeles than its citizens ever dreamed. The development of this port will mean the growth of Wilmington, not only as a port of entry, but as a city of manufactures and the center of a busy commerce.

UPLAND.

UPLAND, March 14.—William Waddie has sold his ranch of twenty acres near Cucamonga to Mr. Oliver of Los Angeles; stated consideration, $18,000. The place is set to navel oranges and lemons.

Miss Gertrude Hobby of Ontario and Miss Mary Albert of Cucamonga won the $50 prize offered by the Southern California Fruit Growers' Exchange, recently, for the best essay advertising California citrus fruits. These two young ladies were collaborators in the writing of the article, and each received $25 of the prize money.

Horace Boies, ex-Governor of Iowa, and W. C. Farlow of Venice were guests yesterday at the home of Mr. Farlow's daughter, Mrs. Thomas Smith of Upland.

Camp Old Baldy, No. 110, Patriarchal Branch of Odd Fellows, was installed in Upland Wednesday evening, with the following officers: B. H. Shepley, C.P.; H. E. Bauchman, H.P.; A. H. Skinner, S.W.; E. H. Sattison, J.W.; Richard Bright, Scribe; Gordon Day, Treasurer; Bruce Snow, I.S.; Clyde Colborn, O.S.; Niles B. Walter, Guide.

ANAHEIM.

ANAHEIM, March 14.—Yesterday was the last day which candidates had for filing their nominations. The following names will appear on the official municipal ballot: N. F. Steadman, City Marshal (incumbent;) E. B. Merritt, City Clerk (incumbent;) Charles Boegue and John Hartung, City Treasurer; G. J. Stock, John Hahn, Frank Gates and A. Rimpau, Trustees.

Good Fellow at Yale.

Tainemon Hitachijama, champion Japanese wrestler, has presented to Yale three honorary gowns, or kesio mawashi, received by him in recognition of his victories in 1904. The gowns, with a description on them and their significance written by Tadasu Saiki, a Yale student from Japan, have been hung in the trophy room of the university gymnasium. The gowns are valued at $1000 each.

Warring Soccer Teams.

The New York Amateur Association Football League did not expect a visit from an English soccer eleven this spring, but if teams representative of the warring factions in England come across, they would be played in the order of arrival. No attention will be paid to threats which involve cancellation of matches where dates are made with so-called outlaw clubs from the other side.

Rawhide

THE RUSH IS ON

The great influx of Mining Men from every section of the country to the Rawhide D working things up to a fever heat in this greatest of all Gold Mining Camps. Rawhide ises to overshadow Goldfield, Tonopah, Rhyolite—and even the great Klondike. be made in a week. All indications point to an enormous ore production. Already claims are being developed—and some of the ore assays as high as $1000 a ton. But, this is exceptional. Even $100 ore means millions to people who are fortunate enough in right.

It is confidently predicted by men who are in a position to know, that Rawhide will a population of 10,000 souls inside of six months. There is untold wealth here—plenty everybody. Go to Rawhide if you can—if you can't, invest your money there, and grow. It is not the timid individual who will "win out" at Rawhide—but the man who foresight and the nerve to take hold of a proposition in advance who will reap the The time to act is now—not next week, or next month—but today.

Old Mining Men Are "Rawhide" Crazy

Not since the great Klondike rush about ten years ago has there been such a stampede of mining men to any district. Even when Goldfield and Tonopah were opened up, the excitement was not so great. Men who are now on the ground—experienced mining men, who have been through all the big diggings, say they never saw anything like it. Those who have foresight are putting every dollar they can rake and scrape into Rawhide leases. They know what they are about; they see the signs cropping up in every direction. Not only indications, but actual Gold is being found in quantities.

Every indication points to solid beds that will assay anywhere from $10.00 a ton; and bear in mind that there and acres of just such claims. Now, the probability of gold overproduction imminent.

Gold—glittering Gold, in the very the streets. The Mountains and Hills of the Golden treasure.

The Rawhide Operating Syndicat Owns Three Valuable Leases Incorporated For $3,000,000

The Rawhide Operating Syndicate has applied for a charter under the non-assessable laws which will grant them the right to buy, lease, sell, convey and develop mining properties in the hide District. This syndicate has already secured three of the most valuable leases in the The capital stock of the company is $3,000,000—divided into 3,000,000 shares of treasury stock value of $1.00 a share. The officers of this company are well known mining men of California —with an able board of directors. On the directorate are such names as E. D. Crowley, B. & W. Construction Co.; M. A. Collins, mining operator, formerly associated with G B. Moynihan, formerly of the Germania National Bank; E. A. Leavitt, formerly western manager ver Daily Mining Record; D. S. MacInnes, mining expert. Also associated with the company is J. J. Lynch, who is at present on the ground at Rawhide, and who has made most favorable a thorough examination of the company's holdings.

It is practically an assured fact that all who identify themselves with this company in the of its operations will realize many times over the amount of their investment. The time while it is possible to get in on the ground floor. After the properties are developed, on a paying basis, it will then be everlastingly too late. The men who have made fortunes been those who were gifted with foresight and knew enough to take hold of a good thing This is where history repeats itself. The same old story will be told next year, and ten years "If I had only invested in Rawhide at the right time, I would today have been independent."

Treasury Stock at 5c

Par Value $1.00 a Share

The Rawhide Operating Syndicate offers a limited block of its treasury stock—par value $1.00—at 5 cents a share, for the purpose of purchasing machinery and putting men to work on its claims—and to handle other properties.

There is absolutely no question but that this stock will advance in the near future. It will soon be listed on the San Francisco Stock Exchange—which in itself will cause it to take an upward tendency. While the price for a short time is only 5 cents a share, it would not surprise us to see it go to 25 cents or even 50 cents inside of six months. And if results come up to present prospects, there is every likelihood of this stock reaching par value before the expiration of one year.

A thousand shares of stock purchased at 5 cents—and sold at the end of the year for $1.00 a share—would mean a profit of $950.00. Will you take the chance? Will you get in now—or will you let the opportunity go by unheeded?

The men who have made fortunes in the mining industry, almost without who got in on a ground floor basis were developed. After a company is dends they don't need your assistance.

If you want to share in the profits in and help develop the claims; man's chance. Not only the poor other man who expects to make Many people will go on through small salaries, who will never be a competency.

Many of the millionaires of today few years ago. Fortune knocks at at least one time. It is knocking at What are you going to do about it? be another such chance as "Rawhide"

Shares can now be bought at 5 or by payment of 20 per cent cent a month.

Work Is Now Under Wa

The Rawhide Operating Syndicate has its manager on the ground watching and just as soon as it is possible to get machinery and men, work will be pushed sible speed. It is now the intention of the Syndicate to work a night and day force reach the rich ore, which the directors are convinced lies just beneath the claims—Owl No. 1, Owl No. 2, and Owl No. 4—lying right alongside some of the ducers which have been developed in this wonderful camp.

This present allotment of treasury stock, which is offered at 5 cents, will soon be There is every probability that the price will go up within a few days—or at least few weeks, and may be withdrawn from the market altogether. Those who get in will be the ones to share the profits later. We don't want procrastinators, but who are ambitious to succeed. There is no room for "dead ones" at Rawhide.

Ground Floor Chance to Accumulate Wealth

It is our honest belief that no such ground floor opportunity has ever before been offered the Los Angeles public as we tell of today. We have thoroughly investigated the Syndicate's claims—and if we were not fully convinced that they would "make good" we positively would refuse to act as fiscal agent of the company.

We have put our own money into the proposition. We own a large block of the Rawhide Syndicate stock, and are convinced that we will be richly rewarded for our foresight in getting in with the organizers at the ground floor price.

There is yet time for you to get in—but you must act quickly. Even a single day's delay may mean disappointment—as the stock is likely to be over-subscribed almost immediately. Write or wire today, reserving as many shares as you can afford. You will never regret it.

California's gem cities, centers of the great orange-producing section. Famous brands of the orange, such as "Mahala," "Rose," "Orchard," "California Sunshine," "Signet" and scores of others equally popular and familiar, are shipped yearly from Redlands, while from Riverside are sent to the markets of the East "Our Favorite," "Lochinvar," "La Mesa," "Golden Rule," "Alta Cresta" and other favorite brands of the fruit.

It was at Redlands that President McKinley and Roosevelt were officially welcomed to California. In 1900 the city had a population of 4700; now the inhabitants number over 10,000, with property valuation of $20,000,000. The Board of Trade embraces 500 representative citizens, and the city is metropolitan in appearance and equipment. In one year 3700 carloads of oranges were shipped from Redlands, and the net receipts for the orange crop in 1906 were $2,100,000.

Every year over 6000 carloads of oranges are shipped from Riverside. The points of interest include Huntington Park, Glenwood Mission Inn, the parent navel orange trees replanted by President Roosevelt, the White Park, the Carnegie Library, orange-packing houses, irrigation canals and the largest concrete bridge in the world.

HOW TO CLEAN IMPURE BLOOD.

MIX DANDELION, SARSAPARILLA AND KARGON AND TAKE AS TOLD.

A home-made mixture which anyone can prepare. Relieves all forms of Blood Disorders by restoring proper action of the Kidneys, and is said to cure Rheumatism of many years' standing.

All medical authorities are agreed that the blood is the great source of disease or of health in the human system. If the blood is pure, the individual is strong and healthy; if the blood is impure or diseased then there is sickness or decay in the whole system.

Rheumatism is strictly a blood disease. It is caused by excessive uric acid. Sores, pimples, etc., mean bad blood. Catarrhal affections must be treated through the blood to get permanent results. To get well, to feel strong, hearty and vigorous one must have good clean blood and lots of it. You can't clean the blood thoroughly unless the kidneys are made active. Bad blood means clogged, inactive kidneys and liver, which causes, too, such symptoms as backache, nervousness, bladder and urinary difficulties and other sympathetic troubles.

Here is a simple home remedy and the recipe, for making it up is as follows:

Fluid Extract Dandelion one-half ounce, Compound Kargon one ounce, Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla three ounces. Shake well in a bottle and take in teaspoonful doses after each meal and again at bedtime. The ingredients can be obtained at any good prescription pharmacy at small cost.

Here the readers of this paper have a simple yet powerful and effective remedy for all forms of blood, kidney and bladder diseases which should relieve rheumatism and catarrhal affections and replace that weak, worn-out indifferent feeling with strength, vigor and health.

Woman's Breast for Cancer.

Any Tumor, Lump or Sore on the Lip, Face or Anywhere Six Months is Cancer.

$1000 offered by a Los Angeles doctor for a failure to cure any cancer he treats before it poisons deep glands, is convincing. "Absolute guarantee." That man is the world-renowned cancer specialist who cures without knife or pain and charges nothing until cured. Strictly reliable; no X-Ray or other swindle. Dr. S. R. Chamley is the party. He has a national reputation of having cured more cancers in 35 years than any other doctor living. He has published a book that proves that any lump in woman's breast is cancer. Honesty is his policy; he refuses those who have waited until past cure, though they frequently offer him thousands of dollars. The reader may save a life by sending this to some one with cancer. To get his 130-page book free, describe your case and address Dr. and Mrs. Dr. Chamley & Co., 747 S. Main St., Los Angeles, Cal.

How Moving Pictures Originated.

The beginning of moving pictures was in this wise: Sir John Herschel, after dinner in 1826 asked his friend, Charles Babbage, how he would show both sides of a shilling at once. Babbage replied by taking a shilling from his pocket and holding it to a mirror. This did not satisfy Sir John, who set the shilling spinning upon the dinner table, at the same time pointing out that if the eye is placed on a level with the rotating coin both sides can be seen at once. Babbage was so struck by the experiment that the next day he described it to a friend, Dr. Fitton, who immediately made a working model. On one side of a disk was drawn a bird, on the other side an empty bird cage; when the card was revolved on a silk thread the bird appeared to be in the cage. This model showed the persistence of vision upon which all moving pictures depend for their effect. The eye retains the image of the object seen for a fraction of a second after the object has been removed. This model was called the thaumotrope. Next came the soetrope, or wheel or life. A cylinder was perforated with a series of slots and within the cylinder was placed a band of drawings of dancing men. On the apparatus being slowly rotated, the figures seen through the slots appeared to be in motion. The first systematic photographs taken at regular intervals of men and animals were made by Muybridge in 1877.

Band Wagon Congressman.

-INOIS STATESMAN OWNER OF WORLD'S LONGEST TROLLEY LINE.

tsburgh Dispatch:] William n McKinley, Representative in ess from the Nineteenth Illinois ct, owns and operates a bigger on car system than any other man e world. Its present lines cover iles and there are under construc- additional lines that will bring the up to 800.

Mr. McKinley is busy with an- sort of vehicle these days. He iving the Speaker Cannon band n. And he is right on the job. wagon drivers in the race to the e House are pretty well known. of the drivers have shoved them- s into the limelight as drivers. Not ith McKinley. this line of endeavor McKinley een but his natural self. He never s the red fire and he never gives ignal to the bands to begin play- when he is about to climb up on vorks. He just takes off his coat, es ahead and does things. This been his manner of procedure all fe.

w, when he is hardly 50 years old, rated as a multi-millionaire, has twork of railways in Illinois, is ing a $2,000,000 bridge across the ssippi at St. Louis, is chairman of mmittee in Congress and is the and front of the movement to Speaker Joseph G. Cannon in the dential chair.

A BIG LITTLE MAN.

these sound like big things. But are bigger things about this man. stands only 5 feet 4 inches high. loved by all who know him and nany who have never even seen His charity has carried happiness comfort to the sons of men all vay from Illinois to Iloilo, in the ppine Islands. He gives the em- s of his system a bonus every amounting to 5 per cent. of their al pay. In his office in his home Champaign, Ill., he has a motto reads:

you can't speak a kind word keep

Two months ago the try heard an explosion that sound- ke a Cannon boom. The connect- link between those whispers a ago and the echo of two months was William Brown McKinley. He made up his mind that Cannon one of the wisest men of his time the man who deserved the Pres- cy.

PORTANT COMMITTEE POST.

is is only his second term in Con- s. It is, therefore, something of at on the shoulder from the god- of fortune that he is chairman e Committee on Coinage, Weights Measures, and that, when he is on the floor of the House, he has mmittee for which two spacious ns in the Capitol have been set e.

illiam Brown McKinley, banker railroad operator, was born in rsburg, Ill., September 5, 1856, the of a preacher. He received a good cation in the schools and at the versity of Illinois. Then he found was up against the big round world out a cent in his pocket. So he ted out. He began as a clerk in rug store at $4.50 per week. He well and was offered clerkships in r drug stores in Champaign and ingfield, which he accepted and d for about three years.

1875 this silent, hard-working th was installed as a clerk in the king and brokerage house of his le, James B. McKinley, in Cham- gn, Ill. He worked and saved his ney. Two years later he was a tner in the concern. It has been principle always to save his money, to be liberal in his business trans- ions.

n 1885 he began to do the big things. that year he built the Champaign Urbana waterworks and electric ting system. In 1890 he construct- the Champaign and Urbana Elec- Railway. Between that time and he built and reconstructed elec- railways in Springfield and Defiance, O.; Bay City, Mich., and Joliet, La Salle, Galesburg, Quincy, Danville and Decatur, Ill.

GAS AND ELECTRIC COMPANIES.

Just to show that he could do pretty much everything, he reorganized and consolidated the gas and electric light companies in all of the towns and cities mentioned. Since 1902 he has devoted much of his time to building up interurban systems of electric railways in Illinois and Indiana, this work representing what he has done when not called on for work in Congress or campaign.

The enumeration of such a list of achievements does not readily bring to the mind of the reader the realization of the immense amount of work this traction operator and Presidential promoter has got out of his system. It is only by the wildest stretch of imagination that one can bring oneself to see the days and nights of labor, the trying burdens of detail, the exacting cares of administration, and the terrific responsibilities of giant undertakings he has had on his mind and shoulders.

Since 1902 he has been a member of the board of trustees of the University of Illinois. He has figured as the chief benefactor of the Julia F. Burnham Hospital in Champaign. Several years ago he gave the Young Men's Christian Association at the Illinois University the lump sum of $35,000. Last spring he took a crowd of members of Congress on a tour of Panama and the West Indies and footed the bill himself. And throughout his days of prosperity he has done countless deeds of kindness and charity, of which the world will never know, for he talks about his charity as little as he does about his business dealings.

He loves his friends and they are the subjects on which he rises to his greatest heights of loquacity. About himself he is the grand exalted ruler of the Keep Still Club and a fifty-second degree member of the Don't Say It Order. But on the subject of his friends he loosens up in great shape. He can find more virtues in those he likes than were ever described in the Bible. In this line of talk he excels. He likes people, and he likes people to like him.

KIND TO WOOLLY DOG.

Out in Champaign they tell stories of how the dogs in the streets see McKinley coming, wag their tails and then fall in behind him, merely for the sake of following him home. One day last summer when he was sitting at his desk, while the heat was coaxing the mercury through the top of the thermometer, a dog with a suit of long, curly, hot hair came in. The dog first lay under McKinley's desk, then went to the window and finally tried the doorway to see if there was a cool draft coming in that way. Pretty soon the clerks in the office missed "the boss."

They found him on the curbing outside shearing off the dog's long hair. He looked foolish when he was discovered, but he kept on cutting until the dog was cool and free of his wool.

He was a member of the Secretary Taft trip to the Philippines—that jaunt made famous by one of its results, the Longworth-Roosevelt wedding. When he returned from the journey the whole town of Champaign and its surrounding country turned out to welcome him. All the newspapers, Democratic as well as Republican, printed complimentary things about him.

That's the way "Little Mac" stands at home—and he occupies the place because of the way he has helped the town and its people. The only time John Eversman, who is his right-hand man, ever saw him "mad" was when one of his construction foremen, in digging post holes for a new electric line, had thrown earth on some of the lawns along the street. McKinley saw it late in the afternoon and immediately went to a telephone to instruct the manager to have that earth removed from the lawns it was defacing. The manager replied he could not do it without employing an extra gang of men. It took McKinley a fraction of a second to order out the extra gang. And the lawns were in perfect condition before night fell.

MODESTY IS EXCESSIVE.

He is first, last and all the time a modest man, not the sort of modesty that parades itself and becomes conceit, but the kind that hides its own good deeds and the kind that will wait until the end of time for others to find out his good traits. Of the most thorough gentle breeding, he has made in Washington a proverb of the saying, "We must be polite even to our friends."

He has built all his success and wealth, he says, on the creed that to trust one's fellowmen is the only wise thing to do. He has always taken it for granted that he would get fair treatment from every man. If the creed has ever disappointed him he never tells it.

Back of his love for the world and his trust in men there is a great ability for battle. When he gets into a fight he wants things done to a finish. He goes at it without gloves and refuses to have the rounds called. When the railroads told him he could not use their bridges to get his steel railway lines into St. Louis across the Mississippi River he said he would build a bridge of his own across the river. That was before he came to Congress, and the railroad people laughed him to scorn.

Soon after that he came to Congress. Before his first session was over he had secured the passage of the bill that allowed him to build the bridge across the Mississippi.

The incidents that have been dug out of Little Mac's past go to show what stuff he is made of. The men in Congress who know him will tell you nothing but good of him.

Whether he and the others who are enrolled under the Cannon standard will make their man President no one can say with any degree of certainty. But if Cannon ever reaches the White House he will owe a lot of it to the man who owns the big interurban railway system.

An Ample Field.

"I'd like to open a singing school," said the young lady with the squeaky voice, as she stepped from the train. "Do you think there is a large field in this community?"

"Yessum," drawled the rude farmer on the platform, "thar be a field forty acres wide back of the brick kilns, an' nothin' yeou could disturb but bullfrogs and snakes."—[Chicago News.

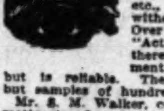
No Fat Women at Lyons.

For true female grace and handsome figures the city of Lyons surpasses all French towns, declared a recent traveler. The women of both high and low degree are alike equal in the possession of graceful flowing body lines. They are not thin, but elegant; as a man would say, just right. I understand this highly ornamental condition of the women folks is true wherever Marmola is much used, as it is in this famous old silk town. American women who are overfat, little or much, should adopt this extremely valuable and simple plan of reducing, for Marmola in ½ ounce sealed packages (see it is sealed) is obtainable in all American drug stores. Add to it at home a ½ ounce Fluid Extract Cascara Aromatic and 3½ ounces Syrup Simplex and take a teaspoonful after meals and at bedtime. The whole receipt costs but a few cents, but it takes off the fat in a wonderful way—even as much as 16 ounces a day without causing wrinkles or any ill effects. Fact is, it improves the health and brings brilliancy to the eyes and complexion.

Eyeglasses Not Necessary

Eyesight Can Be Strengthened and Most Forms of Diseased Eyes Successfully Treated Without Cutting or Drugging.

That the eyes can be strengthened so that eyeglasses can be dispensed with in many cases has been proven beyond a doubt by the testimony of hundreds of people who publicly claim that their eyesight has been restored by that wonderful little instrument called "Actina." "Actina" also relieves Sore and Granulated Lids, Iritis, etc., and removes Cataracts without cutting or drugging. Over seventy-five thousand "Actinas" have been sold, therefore, the Actina treatment is not an experiment, but is reliable. The following letters are but samples of hundreds we receive:



Mr. S. M. Walker, corner Carolina and Palmette sts., Los Angeles, Cal., writes: "About two years ago my sight began to fail rapidly. I consulted so-called scientific oculists and had special glasses made, but all to no avail. I bought an Actina and in less than thirty days threw away my glasses. Thanks to Actina I can read or write now for hours every day. I would not be without it for any amount of money."

Rev. Charles Carter, East Springfield, N. Y., writes: "I have made a severe test of 'Actina' by casting aside my glasses and have not had them on except to see what change had been wrought since the treatment began. My eyes gradually gained strength and power, and now my glasses are no longer necessary, for I see as well, if not better, without them. I recommend 'Actina' to all my friends."

E. R. Holbrook, Deputy County Clerk, Fairfax, Va., writes: "'Actina' has cured my eyes so that I can do without glasses. I very seldom have headache now, and can study up to 11 o'clock after a hard day's work at the office."

"Actina" can be used by old and young with perfect safety. Every member of the family can use the one "Actina" for any form of disease of the Eye, Ear, Throat or Head. One will last for years, and is always ready for use. "Actina" will be sent on trial postpaid.

If you will send your name and address to the Actina Appliance Co., Dept. 39N, 811 Walnut street, Kansas City, Mo., you will receive, absolutely FREE, a valuable book—Prof. Wilson's Treatise on Disease.

The "Tailor-Made" Man Makes Prosperity

He gives himself confidence by the knowledge that his clothes are correctly made and perfect in fit.

He inspires confidence in others by his good appearance and the air of prosperity that good clothes give him.

He is loyal to his home city, because he patronizes home industry and supports Los Angeles tailors instead of adding to the thousands and thousands of dollars that are contributed each year to enrich eastern wholesalers.

Not only is the tailor-made man a credit and a benefit to his home city, but he benefits himself by having his clothes made to measure because he gets more individuality, better material, better fit and better workmanship.

It's time now to order your spring suit.

Our showing of fabrics for this season's wear is the finest ever exhibited in Los Angeles. Good dressers favor terra cotta and biscuit browns, olive greens and elephant shade. Your inspection is most cordially invited.

wound of any kind, such as a bad cut from a scythe, or an ax, or any sharp instrument, a handful of mud from the bank was clapped on. "It beats anything for drawin' out the soreness," he used to explain. A fresh, bleeding wound would be cured in ten minutes by "first intention" with this application of mud.

Frederick Welles Warner, a stanch believer in Mother Earth, points out that when a dog gets a piece of diseased or unwholesome meat he buries it in the ground, and when he digs it out he eats it with a relish.

Only the initiated can eat possum, because there is too much rancidity in the thick layers of fat, almost like whale's blubber or goose grease. And, likewise, precious few people can eat a goose. Goose grease is a sovereign remedy for sore throat and a cold "on" the chest; but this fact, or the recollection of it, has obliterated many an appetite for goose. However, Warner declares that when he lived in the South he became very fond of possum. "But," he adds, "a dressed possum is about as rank as a skunk. I would wrap my possum in a clean cloth and cover it with clay. In a few hours it was as sweet as a spring turkey."

Warner is a wonder. "When hog cholera was epidemic," he says, "I knew a wise old farmer who buried his hogs in the ground, leaving only their snouts exposed so they could breathe, as soon as they were attacked by the disease. He dug them out well and never lost an animal."

Here is another: "A striking illustration of the cure of disease by earth treatment is presented by the early sea captains. On long voyages where vegetables could not be procured the use of salt meats would cause scurvy. Sometimes an entire crew would become unfit for duty. The captain would then make a landing, and after wrapping the sailors in sheets would bury them in the sand for twenty-four hours, and then resume the voyage with an able crew."

"Earth will remove the volatile oil quickly from any cloth or garment." Maybe so. When we got the worst of a polecat (skunk) we immediately dug a hole and buried our raiment. But we never resurrected that paraphernalia. "I have," continues Warner, "taken a gill of oil and soaked it into a dry pine plank. In one hour I had drawn out with an earth compress every particle of it, leaving not a grease spot."

Warner swears that: "I was called by a physician to the bedside of a woman dying from acute septic poisoning, due to an ulcer. I applied an earth compress which weighed exactly twenty-four ounces. In three hours it had gained eight and one-half ounces—one-third its weight. Three of these compresses removed more than twenty ounces of pus from the system, when all septic conditions disappeared. A dog, if bitten by a rattlesnake, will bury itself in the clay until the poison is absorbed."

Who Makes the Laws Here?

Wenzl Moeth and Michael Laden, of Newark, N. J., did not become citizens of the United States yesterday because they knew so much about the country that was not so.

"Who makes the laws of this country?" Moeth was asked.

"Roosefelty and Fairybanks," was the answer.

Pressed further, he said that the Senator helped when called upon to do so.

Laden declared Trenton was the capital of the United States, and that the country was directed by Roosevelt and "Gov. "Stogie," evidently meaning Stokes. Asked if he belonged to any societies opposed to the United States government. Laden replied:

"Not yet."—[New York Times.

PHOENIX MEN INVITE EDISON.

Ask Inventor to Come West to Recuperate.

Would Tender Use of Residence and Carriage.

Necessary Iron for Water-Works Now on Hand.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

PHOENIX (Ariz.) March 7.—In its desire to exploit as broadly as possible the charms and advantages of the Salt River Valley as a place of residence, the Phoenix Board of Trade has gone far afield, with the intention of bringing here, if possible, the world's leading scientific inventor, possibly with a major object of enlisting his intelligence in the solution of the mechanical problems that beset irrigation in this arid land.

Saturday afternoon there was a meeting under the auspices of the Board of Trade, presided over by President Foss of that organization. The meeting was addressed by Fitz James McCarthy upon the psychology of advertising and boosting. The speaker suggested that one effective mode of advertising the valley would be to invite Thomas A. Edison here to spend the period of his convalescence.

A lengthy telegram was sent to Mrs. Edison, reciting the solicitude of the Board of Trade over the affliction that has come to her husband, and tendering her the use of the best private residence in Phoenix, together with carriage and coachman, for such term as might be needed to bring the distinguished inventor to his usual condition of health.

The neighboring towns of Florence, Mesa and Tempe all have organized energetic Boards of Trade, preparatory to boosting for their respective localities in the most effective manner possible. The Florence organization is the last, to be known as the "Promotion Club." Dr. George M. Brockway is president and T. C. Eagin, secretary.

FOR NEW WATERWORKS.

Twenty-four hundred tons of cast-iron pipe, about 150 carloads, ranging in size from four inches to sixteen inches in diameter, has been ordered for the new waterworks installation of Phoenix. This will serve to lay twenty-three miles of mains. It is interesting to note that of the old system less than two miles of pipe will be available. Most of the pipe of the old system is thin wrought iron, badly rusted and unable to stand a fire pressure. When the new system is complete it is expected that a fire pressure of at least 100 pounds to the square inch may be put directly upon the mains. The extreme pressure now applied is forty-two pounds.

Within the very near future, it is understood that M. H. Sherman, owner of the local street railway system, will make very large improvements and extensions. At present there are four lines. To these is to be added a belt line north on Second avenue from Washington street to Roosevelt street, and thence eastward three blocks to a connection with the present First street line. It is also understood probable that a line will be run southward to the railroad depots. With the advent of cheap electricity, generated at the Tonto Basin Dam, there is more than a probability that there will be electric railway service between this city and Mesa, possibly upon the Southern Pacific right-of-way, which now has two sets of tracts, succeeding the absorption of the Phoenix & Eastern Railway by the Southern Pacific.

TO REFUND DEBT.

Congressman James R. Mann of Illinois has suddenly become an important personage in the eyes of the people of Phoenix, for it is his objection alone which stood in the way of immediate consideration of a bill for the funding of about $150,000 of the floating debt of Phoenix. This debt cannot now be paid, owing to the limitations of the Harrison act, yet every item of it is considered a just one. It is desired to fund it into territorial 5 per cents. and thus save interest as well as to do justice to the holders. So Mr. Mann is being favored with scores of letters, showing him the real condition of affairs, in the hope that he will not object but even assist the next time the matter is brought up in the House.

Preparations are being made by the Reclamation Service for the digging of a new high-line canal on the south side of the river, to start at the Granite Reef Dam at a level ten feet higher than the heading of the Highland canal. Its grade, however, will be much steeper than that of the Highland, which it will intersect at a point four miles east of Mesa. The new canal is to have capacity for 50,000 miners' inches. The Arizona canal on the north side is to have about double that capacity. The largest canal on the south side, the Consolidated, is to be sold to the government, though the terms of the sale have not been made public. An offer has been made by the Reclamation Service for the last remaining canal on the north side, the Appropriators The offer is $12,000 flat. Against the canal are claims aggregating $25,000. If the creditors will accept 50 cents on the dollar, the transfer will be made. This canal was purely an emergency ditch, hastily constructed by the farmers at the time when the Grand canal was put out of business by the continued breaking of the Arizona Canal dam.

WITH THE SHEEPMEN.

It has been estimated that the sheepmen of northern Arizona spend about $150,000 annually in Phoenix during the shearing season, which is now in full blast, with about 500,000 sheep in evidence.

Thirty shearers struck, Friday, at Beardsley, northeast of the city, demanding 8½ cents a sheep for machine shearing. They had been receiving 7¼ cents and had been making from $12 to $20 a day. The demand was granted, however, meaning an added wage to each man of about $2.50 a day.

Another strike was chronicled in Arizona during the week, that of a number of painters on the Harvey House at Williams. Their trouble was that their week's wages were one day overdue. They struck on Monday, went back to work Tuesday, and were definitely discharged Wednesday. That was all there was to the strike. New men have been brought in from Los Angeles to finish the job.

The latest sheep driveway has been laid out in Yavapai county, between Williamson and Skull valleys. The driveway was a mile wide, marked on either side with posts, eight to the mile.

A couple of weeks ago, an Arizona ranger was detailed to the Cave Creek region, protection being deemed necessary in that neighborhood, owing to the advent of large numbers of sheep herders and sheep shearers. The presence of the peace officer has excited deep ire among those who were to be protected.

LAST SPIKE DRIVEN.

STREET CAR LINE TO CLUB.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

BISBEE (Ariz.) March 7.—Mayor C. L. Caven of Bisbee drove the last spike in the Bisbee-Warren street car line, which now has rails laid from Bisbee through to the Warren County Club, a distance of five miles. Ballasting is to be complete, and the road in operation within a week. The line passes near all the principal mines and shafts of the district, and is expected to be a great convenience to the thousands of miners, who now daily trudge miles between their homes and their work. Six of the finest electric cars have been secured, each with 120-horse-power motors, capable of climbing the grades at high speed.

In the bottom of a shaft on the Swansea claim in the Cananea Mountains has been found the body of a Mexican miner, the head battered and the body showing evidence of many stabs, apparently inflicted with the spike of a miner's candlestick. Evidence is plain that the man was murdered on the surface and his body thrown down the unused shaft. It happened that an examination of the property was made within a few days of the crime by some mining men, else the murder might have been unknown for months. The Mexican authorities can find no trace of the murderer.

W. P. McComas the slayer of Mrs. Charlotte L. Noyes in Los Angeles, is well known in this county. He taught school in Pearce mining camp in 1896, and is said to have taught for a while in the Bisbee schools. In Pearce he killed a Mexican. It was adjudged that the deed was done in self-defense, but McComas left the camp in fear of retribution from the Mexican's friends.

March 18 the Bisbee Board of Trade will hold a banquet, whereat will be made public plans that have been made for the advancement of the interests of the city.

May 25 will be held the annual city election in Douglas.

Douglas bricklayers, through the officers of their union, have announced a voluntary decrease in wages from $7 to $6 a day.

MYSTERY CLEARED.

PRISONER CONFESSES MURDER.

TUCSON (Ariz.) March 4.—On the night of December 22 in Tucson was murdered A. C. Leonardt, a young contractor, his body being found where he had dragged himself, at the gate of his own home. The Evening Citizen the next day published a report that a woman had been implicated in the murder, but this found no official credence. It was generally believed that the criminals were tramps, who had made their escape on the brake beams of a passing freight train. The mystery was cleared up yesterday. D. W. Hawkins, an inmate of the County Jail, charged with burglary, confessed to the crime, and admitted that he was accompanied at the time by his wife, who also has been under arrest with her husband.

Hawkins has been living in Tucson for most of the time since last April. In July, while employed by the local street car company, he was married to Miss Bessie Chase of Tucson. Hawkins, who says he is only 22 years old, seems to glory in his history of crime. He even has told the Sheriff how he stole from his grandmother in his childhood. He served as an apprentice in the navy; was discharged in 1904; soon thereafter was sentenced to two years in Folsom prison for one of several burglaries committed in Vallejo; discharged in twenty months, he went to Los Angeles, after a while spent on lumber schooners. After a mildly criminal career in Los Angeles and in several Mexican towns, he drifted into Arizona. He told with apparent enjoyment how he "knocked down" $5 a day on the Tucson Street Railway Company, by manipulating transfers. Then he turned to burglary. It was he who stole the typewriter from the study of the Congregational Church, and he confesses to the burglary of the North Side grocery store and of the Lowrie residence. He had in view the entering of a couple of tempting jewelry stores. The arrest of the pair came through an attempt of the wife to dispose of some of the stolen goods.

Concerning the killing of Leonardt, Hawkins claims that the carpenter had met them offensively while they were taking a walk, and that in a fist fight that followed he had been compelled to draw a revolver and shoot in self-defense. The woman, who is about to become a mother, gave the police the first clew, though confidences to a negro woman, a fellow-prisoner. Hawkins claims that his confession has been dictated solely by a desire to save and shield his wife, who, he says, is "simple-minded and innocent of wrongdoing." Officers familiar with the facts believe that Leonardt resisted robbery and that a second man was implicated with Hawkins.

Mrs. Katherine Kingsbury, who committed suicide in El Paso a few days ago, was a former resident of Tucson, where her divorced husband, M. J. Kingsbury, is assistant trainmaster on the Tucson division of the Southern Pacific. She was still being supported by Kingsbury and seemed to esteem him still, for she left a note asking that he settle her affairs and care for their daughter, Margaret, who has been in school in Los Angeles. Mrs. Kingsbury's maiden name was Manning, and her parents reside in Garvanza, Cal. The pair were married nineteen years ago, and separated only last October. In El Paso the woman was attending a business school, taking a course in stenography.

A number of valuable articles lately have disappeared from the home of Mrs. W. C. Davis of this city and it has been assumed that the omnipresent burglars of the community had been responsible. It has just been discovered that the culprit was none other than a bulldog, owned by Mrs. Davis's daughter, Mrs. Charles Williams of San José, Cal., who is here on a visit. In a burrow made by the dog in a flower garden has been found a hand satchel containing jewelry and at other points in the yard various other articles of value have been uncovered.

The President has signed the bill granting Tucson permission to bond for $300,000 for waterworks improvement and work is to be commenced at once upon the installation of nearly 300 carloads of cast iron service pipe. The work is to be completed within four months.

By a decision just rendered in the General Land Office, the people of Oracle have been sustained in their occupancy of the townsite against the adverse claim of William Neal, a colored man, who claimed the land as a homestead.

An odd move toward retrenchment of expenses was that of the Western Union, which has transferred its Nogales telegraph office to the Mexican side of the international line, in order to avoid compliance at Nogales with the eight-hour law lately passed by Congress for the benefit of telegraphers.

At the Old Pueblo mine, five miles from Tucson, José Lopez, a miner, fell 150 feet to the bottom of a shaft, going to the bottom of twenty feet of water, mixed up with rope and a ore bucket in such manner that it was hours before his body could be recovered. Lopez was one of the foremost of the rioters in the disturbance at Cananea a couple of years ago, and was well known as a Mexican agitator. He was arrested at Cananea, but escaped by bribing a guard. He is survived by a wife, from whom he had separated only a few days ago.

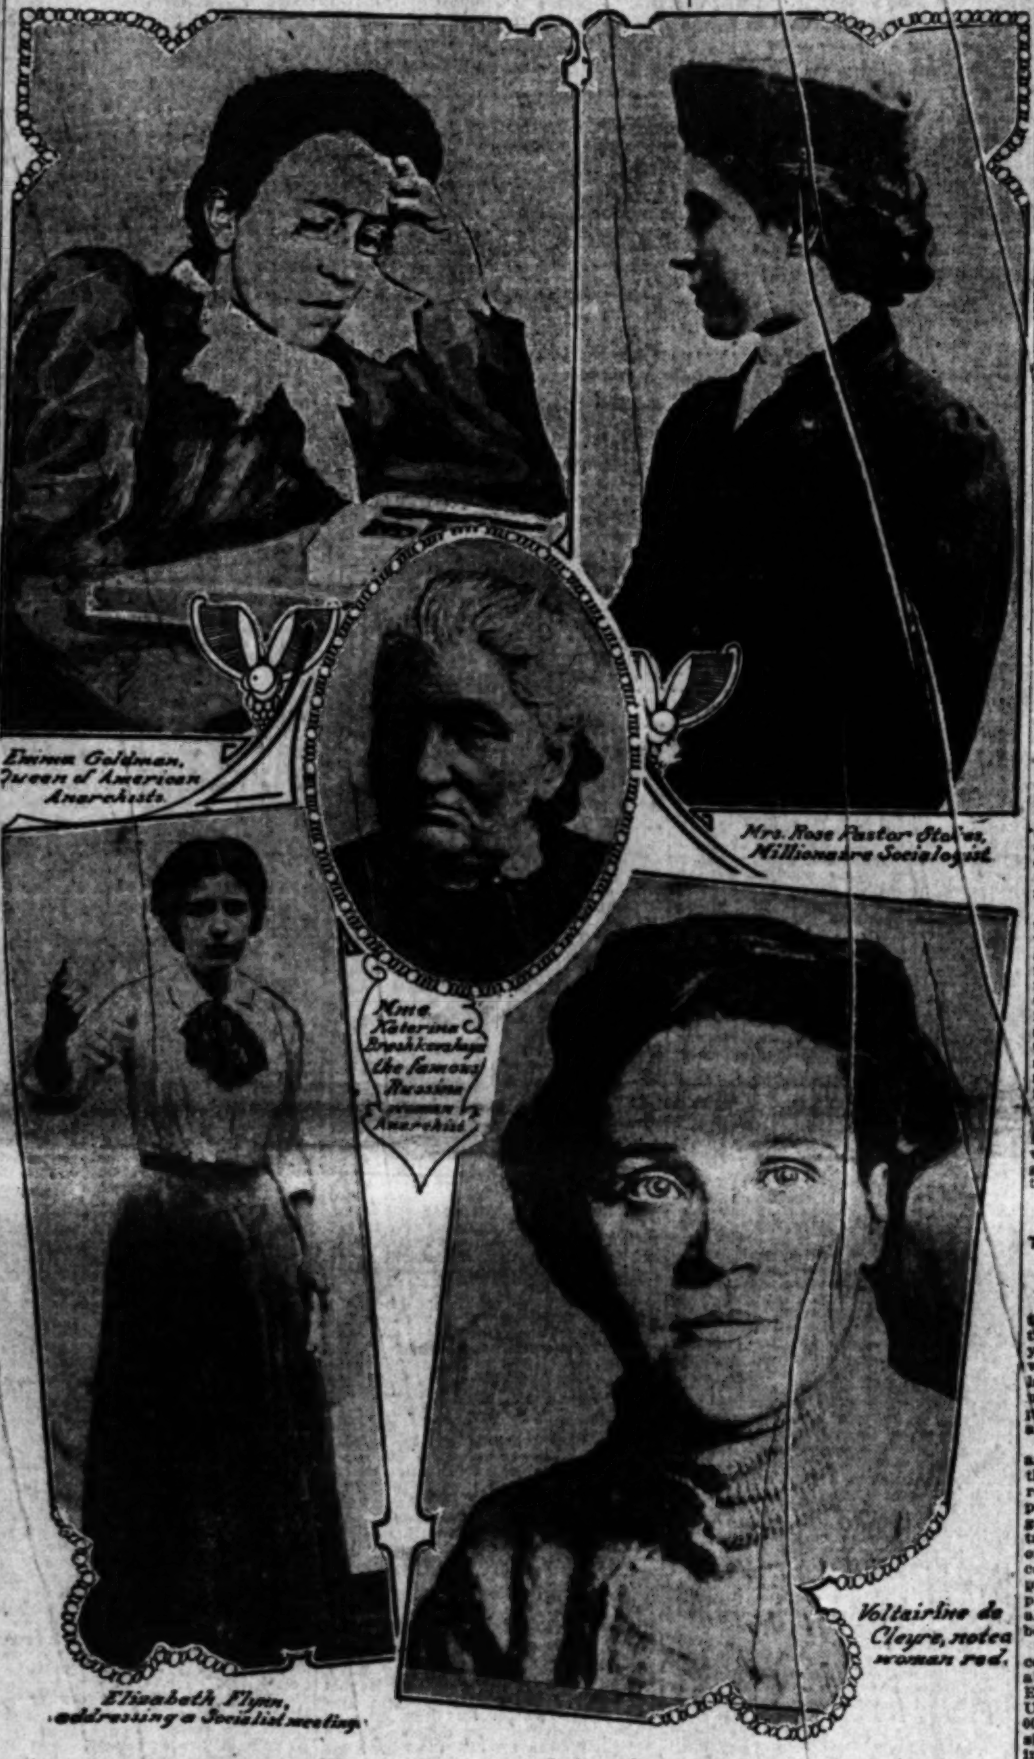
FEMALE TERRORS.

MOST BLOODTHIRSTY OF AGITATORS ARE THE SHE-DOGS OF ANARCHY.

Fanatical Women Anarchists, With Their Daring Crimes Outstripping Their Red Brothers, Have Become Terror of the World's Police.



Emma Goldman, Queen of American Anarchists.
Mrs. Rose Pastor Stokes, Millionaire Sociologist.
Mme. Katerina Breshkovskaya the famous Russian Anarchist
Elizabeth Flynn, addressing a Socialist meeting.
Voltairine de Cleyre, noted woman red.

Female Terrorists of America,
including the notorious Emma Goldman, who glories in the title of "Queen of the Anarchists."

WHEN it comes to deeds of violence the womna anarchist sees redder than her destructive brother.

A President of the United States is assassinated, a Russian general is blown to bits, a riot mob parades the streets of Philadelphia waving the red flag, and in every case the investigations of the police show that it was the reckless eloquence of a woman red that incited the violation of law.

The poet has written that hell hath no fury like a woman scored, equally he might have said that nothing limits the daring of the woman whose mind has yielded to the influence of the doctrines of violence.

Specious excuses offered by Emma Goldman that she had no thought of encouraging the killing of President McKinley, and that the act of Czolgosz was the worst thing that could have happened to the anarchistic propaganda, have never had the effect of erasing the belief from the minds of the American people that it was her words, her teachings that sent the mentally-unbalanced boy on his errand of slaughter.

These principles of resisting law, of arguing that the injustice of the present system not only gives the right to resist, but makes a martyr of the man who falls in helping to overthrow existing government, Miss Goldman taught long before the pistol of Czolgosz removed the President.

She was active in Chicago before the bomb thrown into the wagon full of policemen in the Haymarket riots resulted in the murder of a dozen bluecoats, to be followed by the trial and execution of all those who had a part in the horrible incident.

Had a man shown such activity, particularly after the off-taking of McKinley, he would have suffered heavy legal penalties, but the fact that the arch-agitator is a woman, has operated to soften judgment and mitigate punishment.

NEXT TO EMMA.

Next to Miss Goldman, the most pernicious woman fomenter of anarchy in this country is Voltarine de Cleyre of Philadelphia. She is a woman of considerably more culture than Miss Goldman, in fact she makes her living by teaching languages. Her poetry, though tinctured with doctrines of violence, is distinctly interesting, and has had such a powerful effect on the minds of her followers that she has become the center of a most active throng of reds, who make little secret of their hatred for the existing order, and of their willingness to see it overthrown.

In comparison with New York or Chicago, for example, Philadelphia has always been gratifyingly free of anarchist demonstrations. Many agitators have visited the city from time to time, but in spite of their appeals have found little response.

But what was impossible to men proved easy for a woman.

A short time ago a meeting of the unemployed was held in the ghetto of the Quaker City. Circulars freely distributed announced that the unemployed would gather to demand a redress for their grievances and force the Mayor of the city to give them work.

Several speakers, men, tried to stir the crowd to action, but succeeded in getting only a little applause, though some of them spoke in the native tongue of most of those present.

Then came Miss De Cleyre. She spoke in Enguish, but the thrill of her voice and her passionate earnestness instantly got a response.

Before she had half completed her remarks the audience was boiling, and at the end, in obedience to her demand for action, the mob started up the leading street of the city to force help from the Mayor.

RIOT CALL.

How far the incident might have gone none can tell, for the leaders of the mob flaunted a red flag, and wildly cheered their doctrine.

Just when five minutes more would have brought the rioters into City Hall, a policeman with a level head saw the danger of the situation, and turned in a riot call.

A pitched battle ensued when the police arrived, and pistols were fired and skulls cracked with clubs before the brands stirred by the fire of the woman's eloquence had been stamped out.

Generations of fighting with Russia's Nihilists have taught the soldiers and police of the Czar how to guard against outbursts on part of male agitators, but the woman red is a frightful menace to the lives of every member of the royal family, from the Czar down to the remotest relative who has a chance to reach the throne.

CUNNING.

To daring, absolutely devoid of fright, these women anarchists ally cunning so subtle that again and again they deceive the picked detectives and police who guard the palace, and work some terrible assassination.

Bombs hidden in flowers or dropped from women's skirts have been the means of taking the lives of a score of Russian generals and politicians of more or less prominence and the death list is constantly growing.

The case of Maria Spiridonova is preached to the revolutionist devotee of Russia as the ideal career to emulate.

This beautiful young woman suffered horrible tortures through the brutal Lugenovsky.

Lugenvosky had been appointed the leader of a band of Cossacks sent into a district to punish it because some of the residents had been charged with activity in the never-ceasing movement of revolt against the Czar.

Without discriminating, the general spread his punishment recklessly on all sides. To the beautiful and educated Mlle. Spiridonova fell the horrible experience of seeing her father flogged to death. On the instant of the crime, and before the cries of the victim had ceased ringing in her ears, she took a solemn oath to take a life for a life, and remove her father's murderer from the chance to do further violence on the helpless.

With the courage of a Charlotte Corday she laid her plans. It took careful scheming to get the moment when the General would be unguarded, for the character of his atrocities had won him such violent hatred that his soldiers knew his danger.

Only one chance would be granted her. To fail would mean to die anyway, with her intended victim living, another triumph added to his bloody record.

FIVE SHOTS.

But so well did the vengeful girl plan that when she drew a revolver on Lugenovsky he was totally unprepared. The act of vengeance took place at a railroad station. Five times she fired, and every one of the shots hit the mark.

In a minute after the bruised and beaten body of the girl was on its way to prison. Before and after her trial she was treated with incredible brutality, but through it all she bore up bravely, and went to death uncomplainingly, content at having removed what she deemed an enemy of the people.

Five political prisoners recently escaped from the fortress of St. Peter and St. Paul in St. Petersburg. How the delivery was accomplished presented an inexplicable riddle to the police, but as soon as it became known that one of the five was a woman, the mystery lessened, for the exploits of the feminine reds has led the police to believe them almost invincible.

The five prisoners were two brothers named Goloshtchanoff, the elder of whom had been an officer in the Army of the Caucasus, the other a mining engineer in Moscow; a Moscow chemical student named Gavriloff and a woman of 30, named Sasha Vorobieffs, who had been a laundry maid. The brothers Goloshtchanoff are presumed to have arranged and carried out the escape and to have spun the threads of connection with the prison officials who aided them.

The woman in the case was Sasha, brilliant and clever. She had made it her practice to aid in "action" against the younger officers. It was through her planning that a pale intellectual student, named Savin, made and threw the bomb that blew into fragments one of the tyrants of Tiflis.

The police descent followed so quickly after this crime that Sasha and all her fellow-conspirators were arrested, and the police breathed easier when they got the dreadful woman in jail.

But their joy was turned to dread when one fine day all five prisoners were discovered missing.

IN FORTRESS.

At the present time there is confined in the grim fortress of St. Peter and St. Paul, in St. Petersburg, Mme. Katerina Breshkorekaya, one of the most celebrated and widely known woman anarchists alive today. Mme. Breshkorskaya, who is well known in the United States, having visited the country a few months ago and given a series of lectures on the work of the revolutionary party in Russia, was recently apprehended in St. Petersburg distributing terrorist literature. She is 70 years old, and is one of the first aristocratic converts to the terrorist propaganda. She was sent to Siberia in the early seventies, but succeeded in escaping from the mines and disappeared.

Prominent among the younger generation of radical leaders and teachers in the United States is Comrade Elizabeth Flynn, as she calls herself. She is said to be only 17, but her power of speech has won her spellbound audiences all over the big eastern cities.

Perhaps Miss Flynn would object to the term "anarchist." She does not so class herself. Never has she advised violence. But the teachings of the young girl are so intensely radical, and her demand for action so vehement, that she is assured of a royal welcome from any audience of extremists.

Miss Flynn has a prosperous father and mother living in a pleasant residence section of New York. Her parents spring from Irish stock, and in them can be seen some traces of the radical ideas of their daughter.

Not far removed in thought from Comrade Flynn is Rose Pastor Stokes, wife of J. G. Phelps Stokes, millionaire sociologist. She has never come out in favor of a platform of anarchy, but a recent bold speech in which she offered the proposition that she loved the red flag better than the Stars and Stripes, and that it represented the people more thoroughly than the American emblem, shows that she has no long journey to make to get into the ranks of the full-fledged disciples of anarchy.

The job of protecting the peace of the world would be made much easier for military and civil authorities if woman could be made to abandon her growing belief in the doctrines that are typified in the red flag.

DRAIN UPON THE FORESTS.

Three Times as Much Timber Is Annually Cut as Actually Grows.

Statistics gathered by the Bureau of the Census and the Forest Service show that the quantities of timber used last year for lumber, shingles, ties, pulpwood, cooperage stock, mine timbers, lath, distillation, veneer, poles, tanning and turpentine and rosin, expressed in board feet, reach a total of approximately 50,000,000,000 board-feet.

While these drains upon the forest are known with reasonable certainty, there are others of which there is no record. These are the demand for posts, fuel, and domestic purposes, regarding which it is more difficult to obtain information, because the products often pass through no market, but are consumed on the farm where they were produced. Careful estimates, however, place the total of wood used for fuel alone at an equivalent of 50,000,000,000 board-feet a year.

It will be seen, then, that the present consumption of wood in all forms is above 100,000,000,000 board feet annually. Estimating the forest area of the United States at from 500,000,000 to 700,000,000 acres, and the annual growth at sixty board-feet per year, the yearly increase is from 30,000,000,000 to 42,000,000,000 feet. At this rate, the annual growth barely equals the amount consumed for lumber alone. Considering all the drains, the annual consumption of wood is probably three times the annual growth. Detailed estimates of standing timber range from 1,400,000,000,000 to 2,000,000,000,000 feet. Using the larger figure, and considering the annual growth of 40,000,000,000 feet, it appears that there is not more than a thirty-three years' supply of timber in this country at the present rate of consumption.

Since 1880 the sources of lumber supply have undergone remarkable changes. The first change was in the regions from which the principal kinds of lumber were procured, and this was followed by the substitution of other kinds of wood in their places. Neither the centers of the lumber industry nor the leading classes of woods are the same as they were twenty-five years ago. In 1880 nine States—Michigan, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, New York, Texas, Arkansas, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Washington—produced 52.8 per cent. or more than half of the total lumber production of the United States. In 1906 these States produced 51.5 per cent., practically the same proportion, but the changes which have taken place in the output of individual States are very striking. Michigan, for instance, cut 23 per cent. of the total in 1880 and but 5.6 per cent. in 1906; Louisiana cut .07 per cent. of the total in 1880 and 7.5 per cent. in 1906; Washington furnished but .09 per cent of the lumber production of 1880 and 11.5 per cent. of that of 1906. The cutting out of the virgin timber in the North and East has been followed by increased drains upon the forest resources of the South and West.

Despite these conditions the amount of timber required has increased year by year. The increase in consumption of timber since 1880 has been more rapid than the increase of the population, and greater than in any similar period in the history of the country. This shows in a striking manner how much the nation depends upon forest products, and indicates how greatly all interests must suffer as lumber becomes scarcer and dearer.

IMMENSE PROJECT.

BEGIN WORK ON BIG DAM

New Mexico to Have Secon Largest in World.

In Amount of Water Impounded Will Be First.

Reclamation Project Tha Will Cost Millions.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIME

SANTA FE (N. M.) March 8.—Wor of construction has actually begun the Elephant Butte reclamation project on the Lower Rio Grande nea Engle, N. M.

The first construction gang, numbering 100 men, arrived this week an are now at work excavating for th eastern abutment of the big dam. Th first work in the line of constructio will be to clear away all loose an light material, such as sand, soil gravel and rock, from the neighborhood of the two ends of the big dam and get down to the solid rock. Thi is what the first construction gang now doing.

Besides the construction gang, the is a surveying corps at work, numbering sixteen men, which is maki the final locations for the big da and spillway, and the temporary tu nel through which the river must b diverted during the construction of th dam.

FOR PERMANENT USE.

The tunnel will carry the entire flo of the river during construction an will eventualy become one of the principal outlets of the reservoir for th distribution of water for irrigation purposes. The reclamation service doe as little "dead work" as possible, an this tunnel will be planned for permanent use as an outlet for the rive It will be a costly and time-consuming undertaking, but it is absolutel necessary before the dam proper ca be begun.

It is understood that a greater par of the land which will be include within the reservoir has already bee secured. This embraces in the neighborhood of 58,000 acres, a greater portion of which lies within what known as the Armendaris land grant owned by Col. H. A. Jastro of Bakersfield, Cal., and which is used as range by the Victorio Land and Cattl Company. As much of this land wil be submerged when the project i completed, the government is buyin the land outright from the owners.

The great Engle, or Elephant Butt dam, which forms the largest and mos costly unit of the Rio Grande reclamation project, is estimated to cost $7, 00,000, and will require three years t build. It will be arched up stream o a six degree curve, to increase the resistance against the pressure of th water, and the length of the crest wil be 1200 feet. At the river level th dam will be 400 feet long, and situated at the mouth of a long, deep, narrow cañon of solid rock. Its height from bedrock foundation to the crest will be 275 feet. Bedrock lies sixty-five feet below the sandy bed of the river, and to get a foundation for the dam it will be necessary to excavate to this depth and to a width of 200 feet, for the concrete structure of the dam itself will be 170 feet wide at the bottom.

When bedrock is reached in the excavation, immense holes will be drilled and blasted into the rock and steel pins or shafts over a foot in diameter will be imbedded in these holes in the rock at close intervals and allowed to project above the surface so as to become an integral part of the huge concrete structure and prevent any possible tendency of the great dam to slip on its foundations with the tremendous weight of water behind it.

DRIVEWAY ON TOP.

The thickness of the dam at the crest will be twenty feet and part of this space will be occupied by a driveway. The upstream side or face of the dam will slope at the rate of one inch to the foot, but on the downstream side the slope will be 7½ inches to the foot, giving a gigantic batter to resist the pressure of the stored water. The depth of the water from the river bed to the spillway will be 175 feet. The spillway will occupy a natural gap several miles above the dam and will have a length of 800 feet.

The reservoir will be 40 miles long and five to eight miles wide. It will resemble a huge inland sea and will be the largest body of inland water in the United States excepting the Great Lakes. To give an adequate idea of its immensity it is only necessary to mention its great storage capacity. It will impound 2,000,000,000 acre feet of water to the level of the spillway, or comparatively 100,000,000 cubic feet or 650,000,000,000 gallons. This amount of water should supply all the needs of Chicago, with its 2,000,000 of people, for thirty years; it would fill the Hudson River basin from New York to Albany, or it would cover the State of Massachusetts six inches deep.

Not more than 600,000 acre feet of water per annum will be required to irrigate the 200,000 acres which will be included at the beginning under the project; but long experience with the treacherous Rio Grande has shown that it will be necessary to provide for a series of possible dry years, so that the engineers have undertaken to store a supply of water adequate to irrigate the entire Mesilla Valley for three years if no water should flow into the reservoir during that time, after it had once been filled.

TAKES CARE OF SILT.

There is another reason for making the reservoir extraordinarily large; this is the necessity for providing for taking care of the enormous volume of silt carried in suspension in the water of the Rio Grande, caused by its being a turbulent stream. While means have been provided to sluice out this silt to a considerable extent, it is realized that the gradual deposit will tend to decrease the storage capacity of the reservoir as years go by. Hence it is thought best to allow ample storage capacity at the start for a long time to come, as it would be very uneconomical to build a smaller dam with the expectation of ultimately increasing its capacity.

While the dam itself will not be the largest in the world, the storage capacity of the reservoir will be twice as large as the next largest in the world, which is the Assouan dam on the Nile, in Egypt, with a storage capacity of a little over 1,000,000,0.. acre feet. The Roosevelt dam in Arizona and other reclamation projects in the United States will be miniature in comparison.

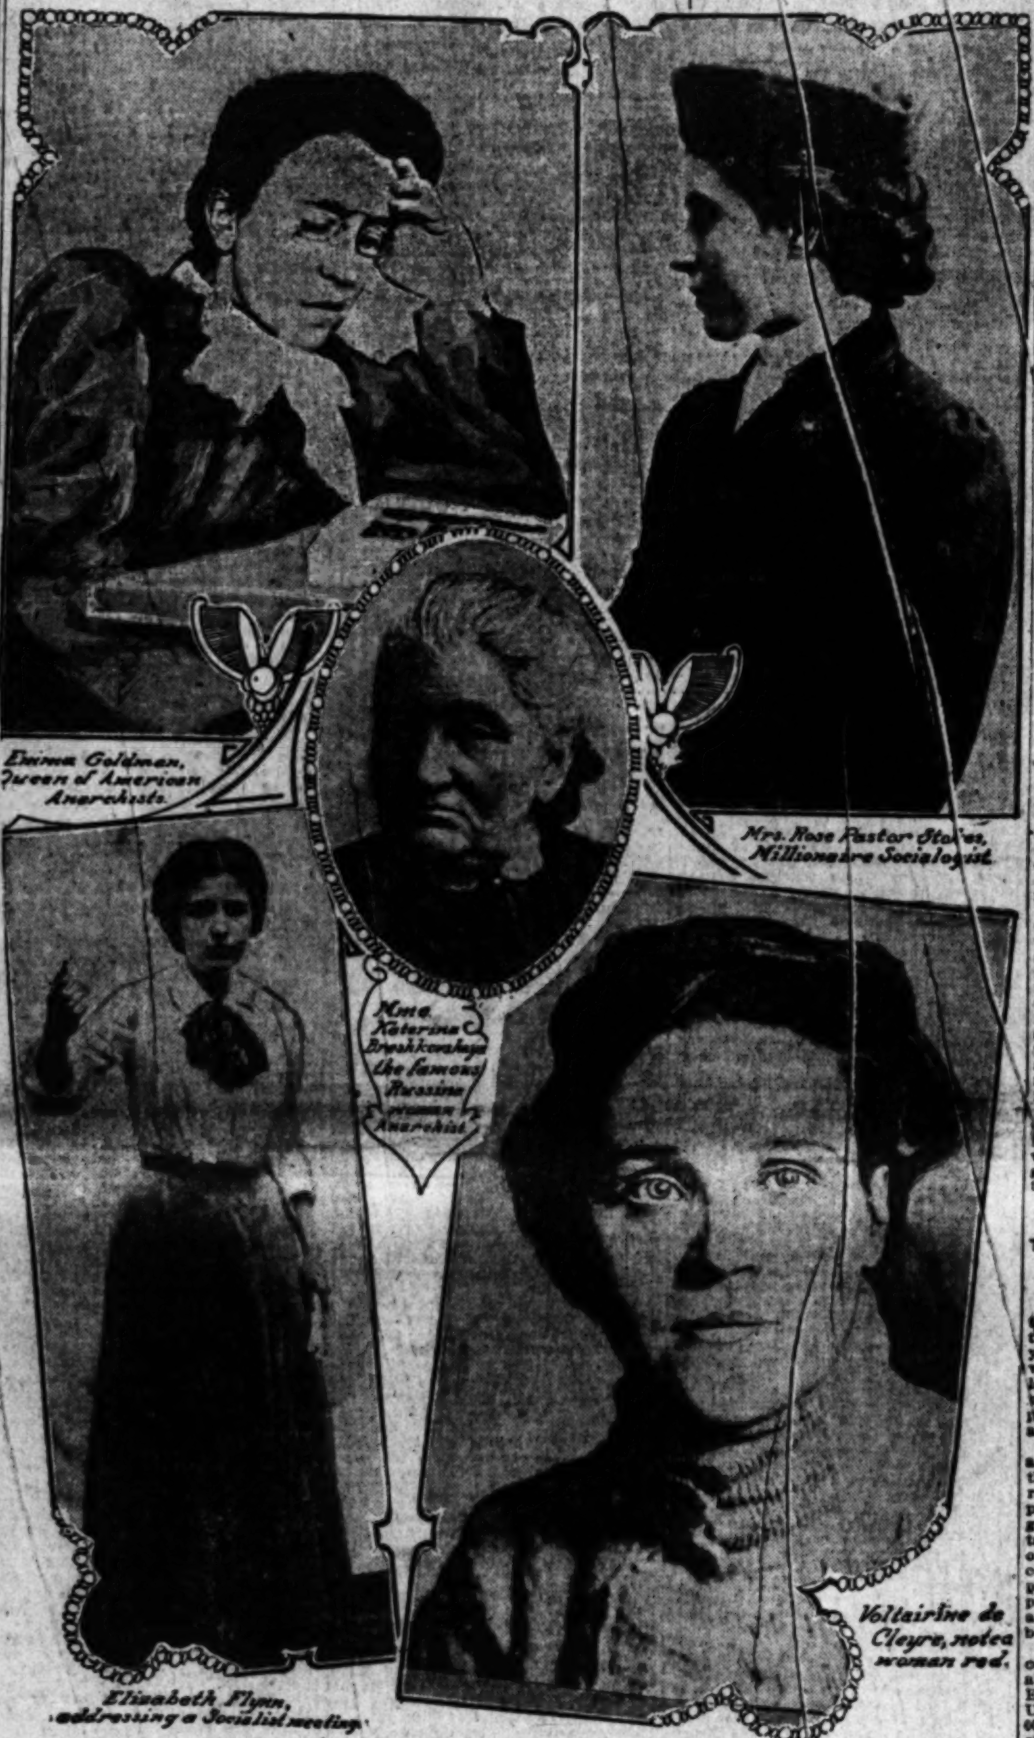
FEMALE TERRORS.

MOST BLOODTHIRSTY OF AGITATORS ARE THE SHE-DOGS OF ANARCHY.

Fanatical Women Anarchists, With Their Daring Crimes Outstripping Their Red Brothers, Have Become Terror of the World's Police.



Emma Goldman, Queen of American Anarchists.

Mrs. Rose Pastor Stokes, Millionaire Sociologist.

Mme. Katerina Breshkovskaya the famous Russian woman Anarchist.

Elizabeth Flynn, addressing a Socialist meeting.

Voltairine de Cleyre, noted woman red.

Female Terrorists of America,
including the notorious Emma Goldman, who glories in the title of "Queen of the Anarchists."

WHEN it comes to deeds of violence the womna anarchist sees redder than her destructive brother.

A President of the United States is assassinated, a Russian general is blown to bits, a riot mob parades the streets of Philadelphia waving the red flag, and in every case the investigations of the police show that it was the reckless eloquence of a woman red that incited the violation of law.

The poet has written that hell hath no fury like a woman scored, equally he might have said that nothing limits the daring of the woman whose mind has yielded to the influence of the doctrines of violence.

Specious excuses offered by Emma Goldman that she had no thought of encouraging the killing of President McKinley, and that the act of Czolgosz was the worst thing that could have happened to the anarchistic propaganda, have never had the effect of erasing the belief from the minds of the American people that it was her words, her teachings that sent the mentally-unbalanced boy on his errand of slaughter.

These principles of resisting law, of arguing that the injustice of the present system not only gives the right to resist, but makes a martyr of the man who falls in helping to overthrow existing government, Miss Goldman taught long before the pistol of Czolgosz removed the President.

She was active in Chicago before the bomb thrown into the wagon full of policemen in the Haymarket riots resulted in the murder of a dozen bluecoats, to be followed by the trial and execution of all those who had a part in the horrible incident.

Had a man shown such activity, particularly after the off-taking of McKinley, he would have suffered heavy legal penalties, but the fact that the arch-agitator is a woman, has operated to soften judgment and mitigate punishment.

NEXT TO EMMA.

Next to Miss Goldman, the most pernicious woman fomenter of anarchy in this country is Voltarine de Cleyre of Philadelphia. She is a woman of considerably more culture than Miss Goldman, in fact she makes her living by teaching languages. Her poetry, though tinctured with doctrines of violence, is distinctly interesting, and has had such a powerful effect on the minds of her followers that she has become the center of a most active throng of reds, who make little secret of their hatred for the existing order, and of their willingness to see it overthrown.

In comparison with New York or Chicago, for example, Philadelphia has always been gratifyingly free of anarchist demonstrations. Many agitators have visited the city from time to time, but in spite of their appeals have found little response.

But what was impossible to men proved easy for a woman.

A short time ago a meeting of the unemployed was held in the ghetto of the Quaker City. Circulars freely distributed announced that the unemployed would gather to demand a redress for their grievances and force the Mayor of the city to give them work.

Several speakers, men, tried to stir the crowd to action, but succeeded in getting only a little applause, though some of them spoke in the native tongue of most of those present.

Then came Miss De Cleyre. She spoke in Enguish, but the thrill of her voice and her passionate earnestness instantly got a response.

Before she had half completed her remarks the audience was boiling, and at the end, in obedience to her demand for action, the mob started up the leading street of the city to force help from the Mayor.

RIOT CALL.

How far the incident might have gone none can tell, for the leaders of the mob flaunted a red flag, and wildly cheered their doctrine.

Just when five minutes more would have brought the rioters into City Hall, a policeman with a level head saw the danger of the situation, and turned in a riot call.

A pitched battle ensued when the police arrived, and pistols were fired and skulls cracked with clubs before the brands stirred by the fire of the woman's eloquence had been stamped out.

Generations of fighting with Russia's Nihilists have taught the soldiers and police of the Czar how to guard against outbursts on part of male agitators, but the woman red is a frightful menace to the lives of every member of the royal family, from the Czar down to the remotest relative who has a chance to reach the throne.

CUNNING.

To daring, absolutely devoid of fright, these women anarchists ally cunning so subtle that again and again they deceive the picked detectives and police who guard the palace, and work some terrible assassination.

Bombs hidden in flowers or dropped from women's skirts have been the means of taking the lives of a score of Russian generals and politicians of more or less prominence and the death list is constantly growing.

The case of Maria Spiridonova is preached to the revolutionist devotee of Russia as the ideal career to emulate.

This beautiful young woman suffered horrible tortures through the brutal Lugenovsky.

Lugenvosky had been appointed the leader of a band of Cossacks sent into a district to punish it because some of the residents had been charged with activity in the never-ceasing movement of revolt against the Czar.

Without discriminating, the general spread his punishment recklessly on all sides. To the beautiful and educated Mlle. Spiridonova fell the horrible experience of seeing her father flogged to death. On the instant of the crime, and before the cries of the victim had ceased ringing in her ears, she took a solemn oath to take a life for a life, and remove her father's murderer from the chance to do further violence on the helpless.

With the courage of a Charlotte Corday she laid her plans. It took careful scheming to get the moment when the General would be unguarded, for the character of his atrocities had won him such violent hatred that his soldiers knew his danger.

Only one chance would be granted her. To fail would mean to die anyway, with her intended victim living, another triumph added to his bloody record.

FIVE SHOTS.

But so well did the vengeful girl plan that when she drew a revolver on Lugenovsky he was totally unprepared. The act of vengeance took place at a railroad station. Five times she fired, and every one of the shots hit the mark.

In a minute after the bruised and beaten body of the girl was on its way to prison. Before and after her trial she was treated with incredible brutality, but through it all she bore up bravely, and went to death uncomplainingly, content at having removed what she deemed an enemy of the people.

To give an adequate idea of its immensity it is only necessary to mention its great storage capacity. It will impound 2,000,000,000 acre feet of water to the level of the spillway, or comparatively 100,000,000 cubic feet or 650,000,000,000 gallons. This amount of water should supply all the needs of Chicago, with its 2,000,000 of people, for thirty years; it would fill the Hudson River basin from New York to Albany, or it would cover the State of Massachusetts six inches deep.

Not more than 600,000 acre feet of water per annum will be required to irrigate the 200,000 acres which will be included at the beginning under the project; but long experience with the treacherous Rio Grande has shown that it will be necessary to provide for a series of possible dry years, so that the engineers have undertaken to store a supply of water adequate to irrigate the entire Mesilla Valley for three years if no water should flow into the reservoir during that time, after it had once been filled.

TAKES CARE OF SILT.

There is another reason for making the reservoir extraordinarily large; this is the necessity for providing for taking care of the enormous volume of silt carried in suspension in the water of the Rio Grande, caused by its being a turbulent stream. While means have been provided to sluice out this silt to a considerable extent, it is realised that the gradual deposit will tend to decrease the storage capacity of the reservoir as years go by. Hence it is thought best to allow ample storage capacity at the start for a long time to come, as it would be very uneconomical to build a smaller dam with the expectation of ultimately increasing its capacity.

While the dam itself will not be the largest in the world, the storage capacity of the reservoir will be twice as large as the next largest in the world, which is the Assouan dam on the Nile, in Egypt, with a storage capacity of a little over 1,000,000,000 acre feet. The Roosevelt dam in Arizona and other reclamation projects in the United States will be miniature in comparison.

MRS. FREEMAN'S "THE SHOULDERS OF ATLAS" FAVORITE IN COMPETITION WITH MAX PEMBERTON'S ROMANCE.

THE TIMES AND NEW YORK HERALD ANGLO-AMERICAN COMPETITION.

Max Pemberton, England, vs. Mary E. Wilkins Freeman, America.

Referee—The Public.

The Los Angeles Times and the New York Herald have purchased the exclusive rights to two novels, simultaneous publication of which is now proceeding and which will continue, in weekly installments, for a total of about eighteen weeks, announcement of the closing date to be made hereafter. One novel is by a distinguished Englishman, Max Pemberton; the other by an equally distinguished American woman, Mrs. Mary E. Wilkins Freeman. In order to supplement the purely artistic incentive to high endeavor The Times and the Herald will award a large prize to the author of the better novel of the two. In event of a tie the prize money will be divided equally.

Believing that the public is a more competent judge than a self-styled "critic," The Times invites its readers to express their individual opinions of the weekly installments by filling out the subjoined ballot and sending it to the Anglo-American Competition Committee, The Times, Los Angeles.

I consider this week's installment of (name of novel)..............

better than that of (name of novel)................

SYNOPSIS.

Henry Whitman and his wife Sylvia, a middle-aged couple, poor and hard-working, living in the New England village of East Westland, come unexpectedly into the property of Sylvia's cousin, Abrahama White. Abrahama's will cuts off her own sister's child, Rose Fletcher, an orphan, living with rich people in New York. The property consists of a big house, standing on fifty acres of ground, and an annual income of $800 in stocks. Just before the funeral Sylvia catches the undertaker's daughter, Flora Barnes, snipping a thin braid of silk out of the gown that drapes the corpse. She had been robbing the dead for years in order to accumulate material for a black silk dress for herself. Other characters introduced are Horace Allen, a school teacher, who had boarded with the Whitmans in their days of poverty and remains with them in their prosperity, and Albion Bennett, who presides at the little village wine store and doles out the drinks that cheer and likewise inebriate. Lucinda Hart, a timid young woman, keeps the hotel. Miss Farrell dwells therein, an object of suspicion because of great beauty, despite her advanced years. She is a school teacher in East Westland. One morning Miss Farrel is found murdered in bed. Lucinda Hart is suspected of giving her poisoned candy and is arrested together with Hannah Simmons, who is supposed to be her accomplice. Now, Miss Farrel, it turns out, was the person who took care of Rose Fletcher, having secretly settled her entire fortune on her, but given all the credit to the New York people. Consequently Rose Fletcher is summoned to the funeral. On her arrival she captures the Whitman family, though they look with awe and misgiving upon her city clothes and city manners. The case against Lucinda Hart and Hannah Simmons was never pressed. Because of the departure for Europe of the people with whom she had been living, Rose Fletcher decides to remain with the Whitmans. She makes friends with a morbid, hysterical girl named Lucy Ayres. Incidentally, Horace and Henry hear that Lucy is fond of making candy, and uneasiness is aroused in the minds of both, the more so that Henry observes there is something greatly troubling his wife.

She decided at once that it was easy to see through the plans of Horace and her husband, and she determined to thwart them. "I don't see why she shouldn't go," she said. "It is a lovely afternoon. The walk will do her good. Lucy Ayres is a real nice girl, and of course Rose wants to see girls of her own age now and then."

"It is Sunday," said Henry. He felt and looked like a hypocrite as he spoke, but the distress in Horace's gaze was too much for him.

Sylvia sniffed. "Sunday," said she. "Good land! what has come over you, Henry Whitman? It has been as much as I could do to get you to go to meeting the last ten years, and now all of a sudden you turn around and think it's wicked for a young girl to run in and see another young girl Sunday afternoon." Sylvia sniffed again very distinctly, and then Rose entered the room. Her clear, fair face looked from one to another from under her black hat. "What is the matter?" she asked.

Sylvia patted her on the shoulder. "Nothing is the matter," said she. "Run along and have a good time, but you had better be home by 5 o'clock. There is a praise meeting tonight, and I guess we'll all want to go, and I am going to have supper early."

After Rose had gone and Sylvia had left the room the two men looked at each other. Horace was ashy pale. Henry's face showed alarm and astonishment. "What is it?" he whispered.

"Come out in the grove and have a smoke," said Horace, with a look toward the door through which Sylvia had gone.

Henry nodded. He gathered up his pipe and tobacco from the table, and the two men sauntered out of the house into the grove. But even there not much was said. Both smoked in silence, sitting on the bench, before Horace opened his lips in response to Henry's inquiry.

"I don't know what it is, and I don't know that it is anything, and that is the worst of it," he said, gloomily, "and I can't see my way to telling any mortal what little I do know that leads me to fear that it is something, although I would if I were sure and actually knew beyond any doubt that there was——" He stopped abruptly and blew a ring of smoke from his cigar.

"Something is queer about my wife lately," said Henry in a low voice.

"What?"

"That's just it. I feel something as you do. It may be nothing at all. I tell you what it is, young man; when women talk, as women are intended by an overruling Providence to talk, men know where they are at; but when a woman doesn't talk, men know where they ain't."

"In my case there has been so much talk that I seem to be in a fog of it, and can't see a blessed thing sufficiently straight to know whether it is big enough to bother about or little enough to let alone; but I can't repeat the talk; no man could," said Horace.

"In my case there ain't talk enough," said Henry. "I ain't in a fog; I'm in pitch darkness."

CHAPTER XVII.

HORACE AND ROSE.

The two men sat for some time out in the grove. It was very pleasant there. The air was unusually still and only the tops of the trees whitened occasionally in a light puff of wind like a sigh. Now and then a carriage or an automobile passed on the road beyond, but not many of them. It was not the main thoroughfare. The calls and quick carols of the birds, punctuated with sharp trills of insects, were almost the only sounds heard. Now and then Sylvia's face glanced at them from a house window, but it was quickly withdrawn. She never liked men to be in close conclave without a woman to superintend, yet she could not have told why. She had a hazy impression, as she might have had if they had been children, that some mischief was afoot.

"Sitting out there all this time and smoking, and never seeming to speak a word," she said to herself as she returned to her seat beside a front window in the south room and took up her book. She was reading with a mild and patronizing interest a book in which the heroine did nothing which she would possibly have done under given circumstances, and said nothing which she would have said, and was moreover a distinctly different personality from one chapter to another, yet the whole had a charm impossible to account for to the average woman reader. Henry had flung it aside in contempt. Sylvia thought it beautiful, possibly for the reason that her own hard sense was sometimes a strenuous burden, and in reading this she was forced to put it behind her. However, the book did not prevent her from returning every now and then to her own life and the happenings in it. Hence her stealthy journeys across the house and peeps at the men in the grove. If they were settled by a sense of feminine mystery, she reciprocated. "What on earth did they want to stop Rose from going to see Lucy for?" seemed to stare at her in blacker type than the characters of the book.

Presently, when she saw Horace pass the window and disappear down the road, she laid the book on the table, with a slip of paper to keep the place, and hurried out to the grove. She found Henry leisurely coming toward the house. "Where has he gone?" she inquired with a jerk of her shoulder toward the road.

"Mr. Allen?"

"Yes."

"How should I know?"

"Don't you know?"

"Maybe I do," said Henry, smiling at Sylvia with his smile of affection and remembrance that she was a woman.

"Why don't you tell?"

"Now, Sylvia," said Henry, "you must remember that Mr. Allen is not a child. He is a grown man, and if he takes it into his head to go anywhere you can't say anything."

Sylvia looked at Henry with a baffled expression. "I think he might spend his time a good deal more profitably Sunday afternoon than sitting under the trees and smoking, or going walking," said she rashly and inconsequentially. "If he would only sit down and read some good book."

"You can't dictate to Mr. Allen what he shall or shall not do," Henry repeated.

"Why didn't you want Rose to go to Lucy's?" asked Sylvia, making a charge in an entirely different quarter. Henry scorned to lie.

"I don't know," he replied, which was was the perfect truth as far as it went. It did not go quite far enough, for he did not add that he did not know why Horace Allen did not want her to go, and that was his own reason. However, Sylvia could not possibly fathom that. She sniffed with her delicate nostrils, as if she actually smelled some questionable odor of character. "You men have mighty queer streaks, that's all I've got to say," she returned.

When they were in the house again she resumed her book, reading every word carefully, and Henry took up the Sunday paper, which he had not finished. The thoughts of both, however, turned from time to time toward Horace. Sylvia did not know where he had gone. She did not suspect. Henry knew, but he did not know why. Horace had sprung suddenly to his feet and caught up his hat as the two men had been sitting under the trees. Henry had emitted a long puff of tobacco smoke and looked inquiringly at him through the filmy blue of it.

"I can't stand it another minute," said Horace, almost with violence. "I've got to know what is going on. I am going to the Ayerses myself. I don't care what they think. I don't care what she thinks. I don't care what anybody thinks." With that he was gone.

Henry took another puff at his pipe. It showed the difference between the masculine and the feminine point of view that Henry did not for one moment attach a sentimental reason to Horace's going. He realized Rose's attractions. The very probable supposition that she and Horace might fall in love with and marry each other had occurred to him, but this, he knew at once, had nothing whatever to do with that. He turned the whole over and over in his mind, with no result. He lacked enough premises to arrive at conclusions. He had started for the house and his Sunday paper when he met Sylvia, and had resolved to put it all out of his mind. But he was not quite able. There is a masculine curiosity as well as a feminine, and one is about as persistent as the other.

Meantime Horace was walking down the road toward the Ayres house. It was a pretty, much-ornamented white cottage, with a carefully-kept lawn and shade trees. At one side was an old-fashioned garden with an arbor. In this arbor, as Horace drew near, he saw the sweep of feminine draperies. It seemed to him that the arbor was full of women. In reality there were only three—Lucy, her mother and Rose.

When Rose had rung the doorbell she had been surprised by what sounded like a mad rush to answer her ring. Mrs. Ayers opened the door. She looked white and perturbed, and behind her showed Lucy's face, flushed and angry.

"I knew it was Miss Fletcher. I told you so, mother," said Lucy, and her low, sweet voice rang out like an angry bird's with a sudden break for the high notes.

Mrs. Ayres kept her self-possession of manner, although her face showed not only nervousness, but something like terror. "Good afternoon, Miss Fletcher," she said. "Please walk in."

"She said for me to call her Rose," cried Lucy. "Please come in, Rose. I am so glad to see you."

In spite of the cordial words the girl's voice was strange. Rose stared from daughter to mother and back again. "If you are engaged," she said, rather coldly, "you would prefer that I came some other time."

"No, indeed," cried Lucy; "no other time—yes, every other time. What am I saying? But I want you now, too. Come right up in my room, Rose. I know you will excuse my wrapper and my bed's being tumbled. I have been lying down. Come right up."

Rose followed Lucy, and, to her astonishment, became aware that Lucy's mother was following her. Mrs. Ayres entered the room with the two girls. Lucy looked impatiently at her and spoke, as Rose wondered any daughter could speak. "Rose and I have some things to talk over, mother," she said.

"Nothing, I guess, that your mother cannot hear," returned Mrs. Ayres with forced pleasantry. She sat down, and Lucy flung herself petulantly upon the bed, where she had evidently been lying, but seemingly not reposing, for it was much rumpled, and the pillows gave evidence of the restless tossing of a weary head. Lucy herself had a curiously rumpled aspect, though not exactly untidy. Her soft white lace trimmed wrapper, carelessly tied with blue ribbons, was wrinkled, her little slippers were unbuttoned. Her mass of soft hair was half over her shoulders. There were red spots on the cheeks which had been so white in the morning and her eyes shone. She kept tying and untying two blue ribbons at the neck of her wrapper as she lay on the bed and talked rapidly. "I look like a fright, I know," she said. "I was tired after church, and slipped off my dress and lay down. My hair is all in a muss."

"It is such lovely hair that it looks pretty anyway," said Rose.

Lucy drew a strand of her hair violently over her shoulder. It almost seemed as if she meant to tear it out by the roots.

"Lucy!" said her mother.

"Oh mother do let me alone!" cried the girl. Then she said, looking angrily at her tress of hair, then at Rose, "It is not nearly as pretty as yours. You know it isn't. All men are simply crazy over hair your color. I hate my hair. I just hate it!"

"Lucy!" said her mother again, in the same startled but admonitory tone.

Lucy made an impatient face at her. She threw back the tress of hair. "I hate it," said she.

Rose began to feel awkward. She noticed Mrs. Ayres's anxious regard of her daughter, and she thought with disgust that Lucy Ayres was not as sweet a girl as she had seemed. However, she felt an odd kind of sympathy and pity for her. Lucy's pretty face and her white wrapper seemed alike awry with nervous suffering, which the other girl dimly understood, although it was the understanding of a normal character with regard to an abnormal one.

Rose resolved to change the subject. "I did enjoy your singing so much this morning," she said.

"Thank you," replied Lucy, but a look of alarm instead of pleasure appeared upon her face, which Rose was astonished to see in the mother's likewise.

"I feel so sorry for that poor Miss Hart, because I cannot think for a moment that she was guilty of what they accused her," said Rose, "that I don't like to say anything about her singing. But I will say this much. I did enjoy yours."

"Thank you," said Lucy again. Her look of mortal terror deepened. From being aggressively nervous she looked on the verge of a collapse. Mrs. Ayres rose, went to Lucy's closet and returned with a bottle of wine and a glass. "Here," she said, as she poured out the red liquor, "you had better drink this, dear. You know Dr. Wallace said you must drink port wine, and you are all tired out with your singing this morning." Lucy seized the glass and drank the wine eagerly.

"It must be a nervous strain," said Rose, "to stand up there before such a crowded audience as there was this morning and sing."

"Yes, it is," agreed Mrs. Ayres in a harsh voice, "and especially when anybody isn't used to it. Lucy is not at all strong and she had to be out quite late at rehearsal last night, too."

"I hope it won't be too much for her," said Rose, "but it is such a delight to listen to her after——"

"Oh, I am tired and sick of hearing Miss Hart's name!" cried Lucy unpleasantly.

"Lucy!" said Mrs. Ayres.

"Well, I am," said Lucy defiantly. "It his been nothing but Miss Hart, Miss Hart from morning until night lately. Nobody thinks she poisoned Miss Farrell, of course. It was perfect nonsense to accuse her of it, and when that is said I think myself that is enough. I see no need of this eternal harping upon it. I have heard nothing except 'Poor Miss Hart' until I am nearly wild. Come, Rose, I'll get dressed and we'll go out in the arbor. It is too pleasant to stay indoors. This room is awfully close."

"I think perhaps I had better not stay," Rose replied doubtfully. It seemed to her that she was having a very strange call, and she began to be indignant, as well as astonished.

"Of course you are going to stay," Lucy said, and her voice was sweet again. "We'll let Miss Hart alone, and I'll get dressed and we will go in the arbor. It is lovely out there today."

With that Lucy sprang from the bed and let her wrapper slip from her shoulders. She stood before her old-fashioned black walnut bureau and began brushing her hair. Her white arms and shoulders gleamed through it as she brushed with what seemed a cruel violence.

Rose laughed in a forced way. "Why, dear, you brush your hair as if it had offended you," she said.

"Don't brush so hard, Lucy," said Mrs. Ayres.

"I just hate my old hair, anyway," said Lucy, with a vicious stroke of the brush. She bent her head over and swept the whole dark mass downward until it concealed her face and nearly touched her knees. Then she gave it a deft twist, righted herself and pinned the coil in place.

"How beautifully you do up your hair!" said Rose.

Lucy cast an appreciative look at herself in the glass. The wine had deepened the glow on her cheeks; her eyes were more brilliant. She pulled her hair a little over one temple and looked at herself with entire satisfaction. Lucy had a beautiful neck and arms, unexpectedly plump for a girl so apparently slender. Her skin was full of rosy color, too. She gazed at the superb curve of her shoulders rising above the dainty lace of her corset cover and smiled undisguisedly.

"I wish my neck was as plump as yours," said Rose.

"Yes, she has a nice, plump neck," said Mrs. Ayres. While the words showed maternal pride the tone never relaxed from its nervous anxiety.

Lucy's smile vanished suddenly. "Well, what if it is plump?" she said. "What is the use of it? A girl living here in East Westland can never wear a dress to show her neck. People would think she had gone out of her mind."

Rose laughed. "I have some low-necked gowns," she said, "but I can't wear them either. Maybe that is fortunate for me; my neck is so thin."

"You will wear them in other places," said Lucy. "You won't stay here all your days. You will have plenty of chances to wear your low-neck gowns." She spoke again in her unnaturally high voice. She turned toward her closet to get her dress.

"Lucy!" said Mrs. Ayres.

"Well, it is the truth," said Lucy. "Don't preach, mother. If you were a girl and somebody told you your neck was pretty, and you knew other girls had chances to wear low-necked dresses, you wouldn't be above feeling it a little."

"My neck was as pretty as yours when I was a girl, and I never wore a low-neck dress in my life," said Mrs. Ayres.

"Oh, well, you got married when you were eighteen," said Lucy. There was something almost coarse in her remark. Rose felt herself flush. She was sophisticated and had seen the world, although she had been closely, if not lovingly, guarded; but she shrank from some things as though she had never come from under a country mother's wing in her life.

Lucy got a pale blue muslin gown from the closet and slipped it over her shoulders. Then she stood for her mother to fasten it in the back. Lucy was lovely in this cloud of blue, with edgings of lace on the ruffles and knots of black velvet. She fastened her black velvet girdle and turned herself sidewise, with a charming feminine motion, to get the effect of her slender waist between the curves of her small hips and bust. Again she looked pleased. "You are dear in that blue gown," said Rose. Lucy smiled. Then she scowled as suddenly. She could see Rose over her shoulder in the glass. "It is awful countrified," said she. "Look at the sleeves and look at yours. Where was yours made?"

"My dressmaker in New York," faltered Rose. She felt guilty, because her gown was undeniably in better style.

"There's no use trying to have anything in East Westland," said Lucy. While she was fastening a little gold brooch at her throat Rose again tried to change the subject. "That candy of yours looked perfectly delicious," said she. "You must teach me how you make it."

Mrs. Ayres went dead white in a moment. She looked at Lucy with a look of horror, which the girl did not meet. She went on fastening her brooch. "Did you like it?" she asked, carelessly.

"An accident happened to it, I am sorry to say," explained Rose. "Mr. Allen and I were out in the grove, and somehow, he joined me, and the candy got scattered on the ground, and he stepped on it."

"Were you and he alone out there?" asked Lucy in a very quiet voice.

Rose looked at her amazedly. "Why, no; not when that happened," she replied. "Aunt Sylvia was there, too." She spoke a little resentfully. "What if Mr. Allen and I had been alone—what is that to her?" she thought.

"There is some more candy," said Lucy calmly. "I will get it and then we will go out in the arbor. I will teach you to make the candy any day. It is very simple. Come, Rose, dear. Mother, we are going out in the arbor."

Mrs. Ayres rose immediately. She preceded the two girls down stairs and came through the sitting room door with a dish of candy in her hand just as they reached it. "Here is the candy, dear," she said to Lucy, and there was something commanding in her voice.

Lucy took the dish, a pretty little decorated affair, with what seemed to Rose an air of suspicion and a grudging "Thank you, mother." "Come, Rose," she said. She led the way and Rose followed. Mrs. Ayres returned to the sitting-room. The girls went through the old-fashioned garden, with its flower beds outlined with box, in which the earlier flowers were at their prime, to the arbor. It was a pretty old structure, covered with the shaggy arms of an old grapevine, whose gold-green leaves were just uncurling. Lucy placed the bowl of candy on an end of the bench which ran around the interior and, to Rose's surprise, seated herself at a distance from it and motioned to Rose to sit beside her, without offering her any candy. Lucy leaned against Rose and looked up at her. She looked young and piteous and confiding. Rose felt again that she was sweet and that she loved her. She put her arms around Lucy.

"You are a dear," said she.

Lucy nestled closer. "I know you must have thought me perfectly horrid to speak as I did to mother," said she, "but you don't understand."

Sir Richard Escombe.

A ROMANCE.

By Max Pemberton.

[Copyright 1908, by the New York Herald. All Rights Reserved.]

SYNOPSIS.

In a short foreword we are told that the story is to deal largely with the revels of the notorious Society of St. Francis, founded during the reign of George II at Medmenham Abbey, on the Thames, by John Wilkes and Sir Francis Dashwood. Among its members were William Whitehead, poet laureate, and Frederick Lord Harborne, a rascally voluptuary. One of the rules of these burlesque Franciscans was that a man must die or marry any woman whose good name he defended. Inasmuch as only women of notorious character were ever named here the marriage demanded was merely a mock ritual, celebrated with a burlesque of religious ceremonial.

Then the hero is introduced, Sir Richard Escombe, a brave, brilliant, daredevil Irish baronet. Suspected of participation in a Jacobite plot while he is abroad in France, a price is put upon his head. He boldly returns to England, partly to reinstate himself in royal favor, partly to see the girl he loves, Kitty Dulcimore. Her country home he finds occupied by some of Lord Harborne's soldiers, who, gradually reaching a stage of reckless intoxication, propose that Kitty's name be put in a lottery. Whoever draws the right number must pledge himself to marry her. Right here Dick Escombe breaks into the room. The revelers conspire to force the winning number into his unwilling hands. Kitty appears at this, his moment of discomfiture, hears the story, demands an explanation, which he cannot give, and the lovers part in mutual wrath. On his way to the Tower, however, whither he had been summoned by King George, Dick meets Honor Marwood, Lord Harborne's cast-off mistress. She informs him that Kitty has promised herself in marriage to the titled rake and is now in the Dulcimore town house, in St. James street, awaiting her wedding on the morrow at Northumberland House. Dick, forgetting his duty to the King, flies to her rescue. On the way he is plied with liquor by two of Harborne's minions, and on his arrival Harborne himself gives him a glass of drugged liquor. Dick appears in the presence of Kitty and of George II in a state of beastly intoxication. The King makes a shrewd guess at the true state of affairs and makes Harborne swallow a dose of his own drug.

When Dick recovers he learns that Harborne has spirited Kitty and her family away to his estate in Buckinghamstown, and Dick rides out there. At 5 in the morning he is admitted by the keeper's daughter at the lodge. He finds no Kitty there, but he hears a woman's voice raised in agony. Kitty, we learn, is really at Brighton, where Honor Marwood seeks her to warn her against Lord Harborne and to soften her anger against Sir Richard.

CHAPTER XVIII.

IN WHICH WE HEAR OF A WHIP.

"Kitty, Kitty, by all that's amazing, it's little Kitty."

She had run herself to a standstill and breathed with such difficulty that she could no more have answered my lord than flown across the moonlit sea. There she stood, her hand pressed close to her heart, her hair flying to the wind, her dress blown all about her shapely figure, and there from the saddle Harborne watched her with a grin upon his hatchet face that told of pleasant satisfaction.

"Of all the lucky men in Sussex!" he went on—for remember the bottles had been many and Frederick, Lord Harborne, was not the man to pass them by—"of all the lucky men in Sussex! Now, here's a pretty thing. That I should find Kitty Dulcimore upon the road to Shoreham just when my old horse was complaining of the darkness, and devil a lantern for half a mile about. Zounds! I vow a silver altar to the gods; but, Kitty, look at me; tell me that you knew of it; say that it is not all an accident; Kitty, are you angry with me for finding you, then?"

She had recovered herself by this time and all her wits were at work. An alarm such as she had never known in any association with men before was inspired by the presence of this perfumed and larded soldier, who, with all his personal defects, had eyes which could look a woman through and through, to say nothing of the fine figure and white hands of the born aristocrat. His voice purred when he spoke to her, his fingers touched her own with a silky touch, the jewels at his throat and wrists sparkled in the darkness; it was impossible to forget that his ancestors had practiced for a thousand years those very arts in which he excelled, and to which so many submitted.

"My dear lord," says Kitty, "if I were a horse who had strayed from a meadow perhaps I'd be obliged to you, but being only a woman——"

"Are ungrateful as all your kind. Come, be honest with me; something was said tonight which offended you?"

"Oh, la, then I'd be a particular person indeed to criticise your noble friends who make an ale house of your parlor and a fool of its master when the ale is drunk."

"Kitty, Kitty," for the reference to himself had provoked some irritation; "what would you have me think of you, Kitty?"

"That I am best left our of your thoughts and others named therein. There are many more willing for a coranto in the moonlight, Lord Harbourne; I'm a simple little body and when great folk touch me I turn cold."

"That I'll believe when it's put to the proof. Mind not the rogues at all; they are like children from a school when they come to the tea."

"And, like children, would be the better for the birch. Will you be telling them that in the morning, my lord?"

"Zounds! what a vixen—she'd flog the guards! You must tell them that yourself, Kitty—or, better, bid them be gone if you will. What! would you be alone with me?"

"If you were absent, yes, sir, I would be alone with you."

"Come, not so fast—we shall be in Brighton before I have well begun. Here's a lover's seat ready built for the asking—come, Kitty—there would be an irony in that—shall we sit upon the lover's seat?"

"I have too much regard for your reputation, my lord. Is it to me to tell what you have told me for the last time upon four occasions already? Oh, here's a poet with but one string to his bow. I'd better be at home, my lord."

"Having but one pillow for a pretty head. What says a good right arm to that?"

"Oh, la, it's pillowed many I'll be bound. Will you please let me go, my lord?"

"What, was I holding your hand? A thousand apologies, but, you see, my beautiful jewel, there are some hands so small that a man does not know whether he holds them or no. Let's sit here and cry a truce. I've much to say that has been left unsaid. Eh, gad! what could be finer—a parley in the moonlight and so home when the cock crows? You'll not refuse me that, Kitty?"

"Indeed, and I shall, my lord, as you very well know."

"In which case we ride in together and cry a view halloa. Surely our friend, Churchill will have something to say to that—and Cunninghame—they'll cry the news to half the town tomorrow. Oh, I should sit awhile, Kitty—I should hear what the ambassador has to say."

She comprehended his meaning instantly. Should she refuse him an audience he would proclaim to all the town that she had gone to Shoreham with him at such an hour. This, however, did not daunt her—and it was not fear of him but curiosity which kept her to the place.

"Am I so much to the town, then, that it would make news of me? You are not very clever, Lord Harborne—not a very clever man for all the world says of you. Let's begin the parley with that—"

"Kitty—Kitty—what a golden head the moonlight makes of it. I positively am beside myself—good God! why do you plague me in this way—don't I love you well enough?"

"Too well, my lord—at present. By and by you would love me not at all. Oh, what a beautiful affection it is, extending to my dear parents. Are you not ashamed, Lord Harborne, to treat simple people so?"

He opened his eyes wide at this.

"A daredevil little philosopher, upon my word! Oh, I've no stomach for that; come closer to me, Kitty, a little closer"!——

But Kitty's line of argument was not to be interrupted.

"Befooling them before your friends," she went on—"bribing them so that even the servants mock their presence in the house. Do you think that I am to be won that way, my lord?"

"My dear baby, I don't care which way it is, so long as you are won. Why not listen patiently. I said in London I would make you my wife. You've never answered me that, Kitty?"

"Oh, my dear lord, what a memory!"

"And here at Brighton you've treated me no better than a dog—a mere mongrel who has forgotten how to bark. I'll not stand that, Kitty—by the stars, I won't!"

He laughed at his own assumption of ferocity—and, in truth, we find both in his manner of speaking and his insolence toward her something very foreign to the habitual dignity and shrewdness of this capable man. In a word, my Lord Harborne had been just the half of an hour too long over the bottle and this clown's mood was the result. Kitty quite understood as much and would have readily escaped him—but every time she tried to rise his arm closed about her—and, fearing to provoke him to something more impudent, she still continued to parley.

"Dogs have no souls—they must suffer sometimes," she said; "would you go home if I said the word?"

"Not a step of the way. Your eyes hold me like a lodestar. Is that my fault? Not a bit of it—blame the moonlight and your pretty face. By all there is in life, Kitty, I shall make you love me—d'ye understand that?—make you love me. Is it nothing that I have more to offer than any man you've met or ever will meet. Kitty, I'll make you the best woman among them all—upon my sacred word of honor. I'll give you anything in the world; but you shall love me."

"Shall in the future, Lord Harborne—I can't answer for that. Oh, la, now I'm sure the wind begins to blow cold, and home I go whether you will or no. Would you have me ill with a fever, my lord?"

"I would have you for my little wife, Kitty. I won't part with you—gad! I couldn't—not yet—not yet."

"But you must—I insist—oh, no, no, no, my lord—you must not touch me"——

He tried to catch her in his embrace, and for an instant succeeded, defying her strength and pressing her close to him. His eyes burned while they looked down into her own; his lips were almost at hers when with a quick movement she slipped from his arms and, all her blood fired at the insult, she snatched the riding whip from his arm and cut him over the face with it. My lord bore the scar of that to his dying day. It never ceased to remind him of an hour of madness for which he was to pay a heavy price.

"Some dogs must be whipped!" she cried, savagely, and then throwing the weapon from her hand she ran as though furies of shame were upon her heels; she cared not whither if she might but escape him. Nothing was remembered now but the insult he had put upon her; Honor Marwood's visit; the false story of Dick's contrition; her own determination to leave Brighton and to seek out her kinswoman at Marlow—her mind remained a blank as to these. The insult—how the memory of it seemed to scorch her very soul!

To Kitty it appeared almost as though she had been in a manner guilty and must accuse herself for what had happened. Why had she stayed to listen to him; why had she permitted him even to touch her hands? And would anything redeem the facts of this night? Kitty shuddered again when she recalled them. She had forgotten the road, the hour, the meaning of her absence—she wished to hide herself from all the world. And this was her condition when, quite unaware of the fact, she arrived upon the outskirts of the village of Brighton, walked indeed to my lord's very door and there discovered in an instant that her lips were unlocked, the flood gates of her grief opened and that she could tell all her story to one who would listen with a boy's ear and a man's sympathy.

We shall say in a word that he was no other than our old friend, Ensign Willoughby, who had arrived at the house an hour ago, carrying an urgent message from the Prince to Lord Churchill, and thus, as we shall believe, was providentially sent to Kitty's aid in the hour of her greatest need.

CHAPTER XIX.

THE ELOPEMENT.

Now, there had been a rare carouse in the house, and when Lord Harborne had ridden off to Shoreham to confab with Honor Marwood (as we have seen,) my lords Churchill and Alisa had cried best to the bottle and frankly permitted themselves to be carried to their beds. As for that fat fop Cunninghame, he had gone out also to walk a while by the sea; but sleep overtaking him at the second turn, he lay at full length upon the shingle, where he would repose until tomorrow's sun came to awaken him. Of the others, old Mrs. Dulcimore was the only one who had her wits about her—and she, we gladly confess, was scared out of her wits by Kitty's absence.

At first she thought it was but a fit of the vapors, that it would pass immediately and send Kitty back to her, if not repentant, at least acquiescent. When this did not happen, when hour succeeded hour, and the servants were sent this way and that in quest of the missing girl, then, in truth, a mother's instinct returned—and from anger the poor old soul passed to laments and from laments to downright honest tears, shed abundantly and with meaning. Pathetically and with hands upraised, she asked old Dulcimore if she had ever desired aught in all this world but Kitty's happiness; if she had planned, slaved and schemed to any other purpose; if he could name the day when it had been otherwise.

"And such a fool of a man for her father! Oh, God, save and help me! Is it him I must put up with for the daughter that is gone? Is this the account of the candy episode.

Sylvia explained. "He actually knocked that candy out of her hand and made her spill the whole box, and then trampled on it; I saw him."

Henry stared at Sylvia. "It must have been an accident," said he.

"It looked like an accident on purpose," said Sylvia. "Well, I guess I'll go out and make some of that salad they like so much for supper."

After Sylvia had gone Henry sat for awhile reflecting, then he went noiselessly out of the front door and round to the grove. He found the scattered pieces of candy and the broken box quickly enough. He cast a wary glance around and gathered the whole mass up and thrust it into the pocket of his Sunday coat. Then he stole back to the house and got his hat and went out again. He was hurrying along the road when he met Horace and Rose returning.

Rose was talking seemingly with a cold earnestness to her companion. Horace seemed to be listening passively. Henry thought he looked pale and anxious. When he saw Henry he smiled. "I have an errand, a business errand," explained Henry. "Please tell Mrs. Whitman I shall be home in time for supper. I don't think she knew when I went out. She was in the kitchen."

"All right," replied Horace. After he had passed them Henry caught the words, "I think you owe me an explanation," in Rose's voice.

"It is about this blamed candy," thought Henry, feeling the crumpled mass in his pocket. He had a distrust of candy, and it occurred to him that he would have an awkward explanation to make if the candy should by any possibility melt and stick to the pocket of his Sunday coat. He therefore took out the broken box and carried it in his hand, keeping the paper wrapped firmly around it. "What in creation is all this about?" he thought, irritably. He felt a sense of personal injury. Henry enjoyed calm, and it seemed to him that he was being decidedly disturbed as if by mysterious noises breaking in upon the even tenor of his life.

"Sylvia is keeping something to herself that is worrying her to death, in spite of her being so tickled to have the girl with us, and now here is this candy," he said to himself. He understood that for some reason Horace had not wanted Rose to eat the candy, that he had resorted to fairly desperate measures to prevent it, but he could not imagine why. He had no imagination for sensation or melodrama, and the candy affair was touching that line. He had been calmly prosaic with regard to Eliza Farrell's death. "They can talk all they want to about murder and suicide," he said to Sylvia. "I don't believe a word of it."

"But the doctors found——" began Sylvia.

"Found nothing," interposed Henry. "What do doctors know? She ate something that hurt her. How do doctors know but what anybody might eat something that folks think is wholesome that if the person ain't jest right for it, acts like poison? Doctors don't know much. She et something that hurt her."

"Poor Lucinda's cooking is enough to hurt most anybody," admitted Sylvia; "but they say they found——"

"Don't talk such stuff," said Henry fiercely. "She et something. I don't know what you women like best to suck at, candy or horrors."

Now Henry was forced to admit that he himself was confronted by something mysterious. Why had Horace fairly flung that candy on the ground and trampled on it, unless he had suddenly gone mad, or—— There Henry brought himself up with a jolt. He absolutely refused to suspect. "I'd jest as soon eat all that's left of the truck myself," he thought, "only I couldn't bear candy since I was a child, and I ain't going to eat it for anybody."

Henry had to pass the Ayres house. Just as he came abreast of it he heard a hysterical sob, then another from behind the open windows of a room on the second floor whose blinds were closed.

[To Be Continued Next Sunday.]

RAILROAD NOTES.

Friendly trade relations have been reëstablished between the Gould lines and the Mexican Central, after a lapse of eighteen months. Representatives of the lines will open a headquarters in the City of Mexico.

A Baltimore banking firm has issued a circular letter calling the attention of the South to the mistake that has been made in pressing so vigorously its campaign against railroad corporations. It says: As the South has just begun to grow and develop, can it hope to forge ahead without a vast amount of new railroad constructian each year? And can the South reasonably expect investors to supply hundreds of millions for this new construction, while railroads are considered the plaything of lawmaking bodies? Until the South comes to a full realization that progress without railroads is impossible, that railroads cannot be built without capital, and that capital will not risk itself in the face of injustice and legislative onslaughts, little headway can be made.

The Erie Railroad has offered to place a special train at the service of the faculty of the Cornell College of Agriculture, with permission for the train to stop at all stations in New York State where the professors may decide to investigate and advise with farmers as to the best crops and methods suitable to the varying soil and physical conditions, and, furthermore, if it were deemed necessary, the company would arrange to frank packages of soil from points in New York State, so far as its lines could carry them, sent in by farmers for analysis to the university laboratory, so that a report could be made as to what could be best grown on such soils.

The western railroads, as a result of competition for the summer tourist business, will apparently give the same rates as last year, thus abandoning the effort to maintain a uniform rate of 2 cents a mile for passenger business. The Burlington has already made such an announcement of its tourist rates.

The close connection

tional prosperity and railroad activity finds one proof in the steel industry. From figures published in the Iron Trade Review it appears that of 19,400,000 gross tons of rolled iron and steel, the railroads take about 7,500,000 tons, or a trifle under 39 per cent.; that of some 7,300,000 gross tons of iron and steel castings, they take a trifle under 20 per cent., and that of the grand total of all rolled and cast iron and steel, 26,700,000 gross tons, they take $8,900,000 tons, or exactly one-third. Whatever curtails the prosperity of the railroads, and stops the building of extensions and the addition of rolling stock seriously reacts upon the iron and steel industry, with its many ramifications.

The purchase of a controlling interest in the Mexican Central by the Mexican government is expected to be soon announced. E. N. Brown, president of the national lines of Mexico, is expected to retain the presidency of the enlarged government merger system.

SIR RICHARD ESCOMBE.

one who will sit there like a hulk when my darlint Kitty may be under the cold water? Mr. Dulcimore—Mr. Dulcimore, I do believe you're the most outrageous man in Englind this night, and the wickedest. Be up and doing, sir—isn't she your own daughter, flesh of your flesh and bone of your bone? And I tell you she's left me—she's fled the house—my Kitty—my darlint—oh, sorrow the day——"

Here would follow a violent burst of sobbing, varied upon occasion by a useful fit of hysterics. Never did old Anthony do so much apologizing in all his days. And he had a hundred stories ready. Kitty was but just gone across the road to see old Miss Pennyfeather, and was staying there to plague them. Any minute might bring her back to the house. She would be down by the sea laughing at what she had done.

"I am grieved, profoundly grieved, my love—indeed, I do not know how to apologize for her waywardness. She's young, and we are two old folks—do not let us forget that. And, my dear Clara—come now—now, don't you think that we, perhaps, have been a little premature, a little overwishful in this matter? If I could bring you to see so much——"

"I do believe," says the old lady, wringing her hands anew, "that I have married a baboon from the Indies. Oh, get out of me sight, man—take yerself away—'tis no more sense ye have in your head than the old cow in the stable! Be off and find the girl—and don't you dare to come back to me unless she comes with you."

Of course he went, gladly and with new apologies—and what must happen directly he had gone but that the boy Willoughby arrives, hot from London in quest of Lord Churchill. A fine house of sorrows for such a lad to come to and a sorry tale for him to hear—my lords upstairs unable to hiccough another word—Lord Harborne heaven knew where; Kitty taken herself off. Mr. Cunninghame vanished as surely as the Cock Lane ghost! All of which Mrs. Dulcimore recited at length and with tears—and while she recited it a great hope came to Master Willoughby.

How, he asked himself, if Kitty, fleeing from circumstances he could well understand—how if she had taken the road to London; the very road which he himself must take, since his orders were imperative to deliver the papers to Lord Churchill and to return to London immediately. He believed it to be possible. None understood better than he the character of the wayward but clever girl with whom these people were dealing. Ensign Willoughby thought it by no means improbable—but of that he did not whisper a syllable to old Mrs. Dulcimore.

"I don't believe a word of it, Mrs. Dulcimore," he said laughing; "Kitty has just gone away in a huff, and, for all you know, is back in the house again by this time. She's too clever to give you cause for any real anxiety. Take my advice and send some one up to her bedroom—as like as not you'll find her there all the time."

"The very thing I said to me Anthony—not five minutes ago. She'll be upstairs all the time, I said—and what must the ijiot be doing but setting off for Shoreham after her. Oh, sorrow the day that I was married to an elephant, sorry the—but wait till he comes home and I'll know his reasons—ay, Mr. Willoughby, and with justice!"

Willoughby laughed in his sleeve at this—and, having drunk a glass of wine and eaten a mouthful of food, he returned to the chaise in which he had traveled down from London—and there, with his very foot upon the step, he came face to face with Kitty, as we have told, and was instantly put in possession of her story.

"Cousin Willoughby—oh, can it be Cousin Willoughby?"

"Now, Mistress Kitty, could it be any other? What, you are in trouble—crying—oh, Kitty, Kitty?——"

"I met my lord upon the cliff, and he insulted me—I cannot return to his house, Cousin Willoughby—neither my father nor mother understands—they are simple people and know no better. Cousin—I must go away—I must leave this place—will you take me, cousin?"

"But, Kitty, think, what will they—"

"I care not though all the country cries upon me. Is it not enough that I have been in this man's house for weeks together? Cousin Willoughby, I am going to my kinswoman at Marlow. If you will not help me to get there, I will walk the whole way—and I have not a shilling in my pocket nor a cloak for my back. Now, cousin——"

He stared at her, amazed. His pulse beat furiously, his tongue cleaved to the roof of his mouth because of the excitement of his thoughts.

"Kitty," he stammered, "you know there is nothing I would not do—and if your mind is really set upon it——"

"Oh, cousin, cousin," cries Kitty, "if I were your sister, would you leave me here for men to scorn me or would you take me to a house of safety?"

"God knows, I would give my life for you," says the lad—and immediately opening the door, he bade her enter the chaise.

Such, then, was the beginning of that pretty flight—an escapade of which the town would make much in the days to come, as we shall presently discover. And yet, as we know, it was never even a boy and girl affair; never so much as a hoyden comedy playing among the wheat sheaves innocently or set up for an example in the pastorals beloved of the King's Theater.

Kitty fled from Brighton because she believed it were an infamy to stay longer there—the young soldier accompanied her because she asked him to and for no other reason under God's sky.

It is true that Master Willoughby's heart beat quick, that the blood throbbed in his veins and that every impulse of his young manhood was quickened when he found himself side by side with Kitty in the chaise; but this was a natural sequence enough.

How he had loved the child; how often in his dreams had he pictured her as the new day discovered her—eyes half-closed, upon a white pillow; the golden threads of her pretty hair tousled upon a snow-white forehead, her breath faint as one who sleeps a child's sleep; her little hands clasped upon her lap—Kitty become the nomad, Kitty fleeing from riches to the cot—and by her side a man who named her for his divinity! None the less, young Willoughby would sooner have cut off his strong right hand than have betrayed a word of the truth at such an hour. Indeed, we find that he labored for her comfort in a way that no man of the world could have bettered; rousing the inns at her coming; urging the postboys to dispatch; asking her at every turn how she did—and expressing his love by no other overt act than that of the homage his eyes could not conceal. And thus, at last, he brought her to St. James—and there he left her at a hostelry he knew until leave could be obtained and he might conduct her to Marlow to her kinswoman's house.

Of this second stage of the journey we shall have but little to say. It had been a happier day for Ensign Willoughby, perhaps, had he chosen another for his escort—for what must happen but that, when they approached the village of Slough, whence Windsor is clearly to be discerned, the lad suddenly recollected Sir Richard's presence at the Castle and made mention of it.

"The King, they say, is very pleased with him, Kitty," he remarked, in a generous impulse not to be restrained.

To this Kitty replied by the first earnest word she had spoken since they don again, cousin?"

"Not once since you were there. They tell the oddest things of him—were Medmenham a monkery in fact as well as name, Sir Dick would be the very man for a habit in the place."

Kitty thought upon this for a little while and presently she said:

"Why do you speak to me of Sir Richard, cousin, why does every one speak to me of him?"

"Because we all thought that you loved him, Kitty."

"And you, cousin—did you believe it?"

"Could I help it, Kitty? If it had not been so, if I had not thought it so, would not I have told you long ago what I have always been afraid to tell you, Kitty?"

Here was a declaration if you like; and what would have followed upon it but for Kitty's discretion, God only knows. Young Willoughby, a great hope returning to him, had no other desire than to catch Kitty in his arms and, holding her close, to take an oath that no days of his life should separate them again—which fully, perchance, he would have committed had not he surprised her pretty eyes regarding the distant castle so wistfully that all her secret was to be read in an instant and his own supreme desire frozen at his heart. Kitty, however, wished still to deceive him; and speaking very kindly, she said:

"I shall never learn to love, cousin; it is a lesson no one can teach me."

"Ah, Kitty. If I could believe that. Look in my eyes and tell me it is the truth."

"No, no," she cried, "the sun is setting and it blinds me, cousin; look, all the west is aflame. I cannot speak of it. And now the castle is far behind us; oh, do not let us talk of it any more, cousin"

He obeyed her without a word. This knowledge, that whatever her lips might say, her heart was another man's, came to him as a sad echo of the declining day and an omen of that night through which, it seemed, all who loved Kitty Dulcimore must live.

"She will marry Richard Escombe or she will never marry at all," said Ensign Willoughby, and then with an instinctive dread of that which had been done he asked himself, "What will he say, what will London say of last night's work?"

But this was a question the future alone could answer—and how it answered it we shall presently tell.

FOREIGN LEMON SPELLS LOSS.

EVEN CANADA PREFERS PRODUCT OF CALIFORNIA.

Reports from Various Parts of the United States Show Western Fruit Is Rapidly Shutting Out Imports from Sicily—Orange Trade Continues to Improve.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, March 10.—Losses are all that importers of Sicily lemons can figure on. During the past two or three weeks the net loss has ranged from 35 to 40 cents on every box sold at auction in this market. The cost of these lemons to importers, based on prices paid for fruit in Sicily, is $2.40 laid down here. Many importers have made contracts for the season based upon this price. The outlook is not encouraging, and it appears that handlers of foreign goods are, in a way, to lose a good deal of money before the season closes.

Prominent importers say that the more liberal distribution of Californias is a potent influence in depressing the Sicily market. The amount of this influence is told eloquently in the figures which show that not more than 140,000 boxes of Sicilies will go to Montreal this year. This same city, however, is reported as buying Californias heavily, and many of its dealers are unsatisfied because it is impossible to obtain all the supplies desired. If Canadians find it more profitable to handle American-grown fruit, the proportion of profits and the relative increase in trade which will accrue to growers and dealers in the States can be easily understood.

Brokers who have customers scattered through the West declare that the demand for Sicily lemons in the sections where they operate, is not more than 50 per cent. of that of last year. This is admitted to be due to the competition of Californias. The principal reason assigned for the supplanting of Sicily by California fruit is the better packing and grading. Or, to put it another way, when buyers place orders for Sicily lemons, they do not know what they are going to get; when they buy Californias, they feel assured that the quality will be satisfactory, and that the packing will be quite in keeping with the general excellence of the fruit.

It only remains for the California grower to continue to pack and grade his fruit well in order to capture the markets of the world.

The Sicily fruit is unsatisfactory. It has been unsatisfactory for years, but the Sicily grower and importer had the trade at their mercy. It was impossible to obtain anything else better, or even as good. That time has passed. The lemons grown on the Pacific Coast are infinitely superior to anything offered from abroad, and buyers are glad to pay highest prices for them. It remains now to increase the output to correspond with the enlarged demand.

The orange trade continues to improve. With spring-like weather for a considerable proportion of the time during the past week the conditions have been fully as good as previously. Retailers have been able to offer fruit in the open air, which has materially increased the sales. The effect is felt in the auction rooms.

So much depends upon the weather. The retailer can't dispose of his wares if it is frosty, and his customers will not buy if it is rainy or cold and windy. When the sun shines, however, the yellow globes are extremely attractive and sales are relatively large.

When at noon the great office buildings pour forth the huge crowds of employés a good many charge upon the push carts, and the temptingly-displayed stock fades away as if by magic.

The trustees of the New York Fruit Exchange held a meeting recently at which the question of the inspection of Florida and California oranges and of pineapples was considered. The exchange has felt for some time that the control of these three fruits, so far as inspection is concerned, should be in its own hands.

Pineapple inspection was thought most important at present, and a committee of three, composed of William A. Camp, E. Andrews, Jr., and C. W. Maxfield, was appointed to investigate and report at a subsequent meeting. The pineapple season is about opening, which accounts for the special stress laid upon that variety of fruit.

The exchange has long wanted to get the inspection of domestic oranges as it would largely increase the income of the organization. But it is difficult to see wherein inspection of Californias is necessary. They arrive in good condition, both winter and summer, and no fault can posibly be found with them.

Resolutions calling for the standardization of Sicily lemon boxes will be sent to the daily press of the country. The exchange hopes in this way to

DOWN IN OLD MEXICO.

BY WILL BRANAN.

Since Adam was inspired by the divine inflatus to take unto himself a wife in the person of that timid young creature whose name was Eve, love has played a promiscuous part in the history of the universe. It is an established fact that one of the most pleasant pastimes in any country, civilized or otherwise, is that of courtship, of dancing attendance at the heels of one's fair prospect. Indeed, it has come to be recognized as the most entrancing part of the affair, since those who have ventured into that dread unknown which lies beyond the altar are always willing to testify that it would have been far better if they could have continued forever in that blissful state of ignorance which precedes matrimony.

Now there is so much curiosity concerning that most delightful recreation which the republic of Mexico affords, generally known to the foreigners resident in the capital city as "playing the bear," that the following modus operandi, which has been known to achieve desired results, may not be found amiss:

FIRST.

Find some señorita of inviting demeanor, and sweet—but not too sweet. It is absolutely essential that she be "simpatica" and that she have sufficient embonpoint; but as all señoritas look alike in the moonlight it is immaterial as to whether she has golden or raven-black hair, gazelle or doe eyes, big feet or little. These minor details will develop after the prize is won.

SECOND.

It is necessary that the charming damsel's dwelling have some sort of an opening, preferably a casement window. The bars of a window are never so close together that they prevent two hands from thrilling as one.

THIRD.

The devoted admirer must first establish communication with the object of his tender solicitude through the assistance of some portero, mozo, or criada of the household, and after much perseverance, pounds of dulces, bushels of billets doux, and a hothouse of flowers, he is in a position to proceed.

FOURTH.

The young gentleman in question seeks some vantage point at a convenient distance from the window where the apparition is supposed to appear, and begins to curb his patience He attracts attention to his presence in the neighborhood by something sentimental, not necessarily "Yankee Doodle," but this is hardly requisite—as his presence will probably have been instinctively felt by the maiden, who has doubtless been waiting expectantly for the approach of some male specimen since her graduation from the cradle, long before the present subject arrives on the scene But there may be no indication of her anxiety in this direction on the first night—not even a flutter behind the blinds of her window. Still, after a proper number of moonlight nights the maiden may make bold to inquire in a low voice as to what the young man is doing in the vicinity. Perhaps he would like to talk with some other member of the family? No?

FIFTH.

After a few preliminaries and some side-stepping it develops, as it always does in the course of true love that the young man in question is a hero or demi-god of some sort—that is, while posing in the proper attitude against some convenient wall. It also develops that the charming damsel is one of the most beautiful young persons on earth—in the moonlight.

It is only natural to presume that this pleasant diversion would have a host of enthusiastic followers, and it is merely a matter of passing down some street or boulevard in the evening from 7 to 10 o'clock, to have the fact sufficiently demonstrated by concrete and loving examples. They may be seen in every shadow, and it requires remarkable agility to avoid breaking into some stage of the game that is too far advanced for the eyes of an outsider. It is perhaps the most popular pursuit or pastime or sport, or whatever it may be designated by its devotees, at present engaging the leisure time of the young natives of Mexico.

Carnival Day in Mexico.

Martes de Carnival, or the Frenchman's Mardi Gras, was celebrated throughout the republic of Mexico on Tuesday, March 3, His Majesty, King Momo, being buried at midnight, in the midst of much merrymaking, music and dancing.

Carnival Day is generally observed in Mexico in anticipation of the succeeding dull days of Lent, and that portion of the multitude which is in the habit of being bad is supposed to get all of the mischief out of its system in preparation for the restraint exercised by the mother church.

But much of the festival fun observed by old-timers in Mexico has departed in late years, and there is very little to the day in the capital but big crowds and noisy children. The west side of the Alameda, one of the most magnificent parks in the two Americas, is always lined with booths for the sale of toys and dulces on days of fiesta, and this, of course, lent a holiday color to the celebration. Several small dances and masked balls were held in Mexico City and its suburbs during the evening, but the maskers were less conspicuous on the streets than in past celebrations of the sort.

One of the prettiest customs connected with Carnival Day in Mexico is that of breaking "cascarones," or eggshells filled with confetti, over the coquettish heads of young females eligible for matrimony. Though this custom is not so generally observed in the capital city, where Florida water is frequently substituted for confetti, it is still very popular in many parts of the republic.

The Conqueror.

If they tell you that I am stern of heart,
Unkind, unfeeling, merciless, 'tis true;
If they tell you that I have trampled through
Their tears of desolation, and depart
With iron in my soul, you will impart
To them this declaration,—and for you
The task will be of honor, for in lieu
Of Hernan Cortez you shall speak; to start
My plea, I never yet destroyed in vain,—
I may not spare your soldiers or your king,
But I will not unwise destruction bring
To that which I may never build again
With greater grandeur; and your bells will ring,
Your poets ever of my conquest sing.

Cuernavaca's Past.

The picturesque little capital of the State of Morelos, Mex., is now passing through a very pleasant boom, and its ancient inhabitants are on the qui vive to take advantage of that most desirable of suckers, the American tourist.

The new golf links of the Cuernavaca Country Club, whose membership is made up largely of Mexico City residents, were formally inaugurated Saturday afternoon, March 7, the first ball being driven over the course by Gov. Alarcon of Morelos.

But this is not the best part of Cuernavaca's story, by any means. Though not very pretentious in population or civilization, Cuernavaca has a history that would put to shame

It is not generally known that one of the innumerable spouses of Hernan Cortez was gently pushed over the rear balcony of the present municipal palace of Cuernavaca by her lord and master, when he was sojourning with her in this little city. As it is a sheer drop of nearly one hundred feet to the court beneath, this esteemed lady probably suffered the same fate that befell La Mariha, another damsel who enjoyed en passant the favor of New Spain's conqueror.

Perhaps it may not be remembered by readers of The Times, but La Marina was the distinguished dame who died of asthma in the Coyoacan casa of Hernan Cortez. Or at any rate that was the report given out by physicians in their iron-hearted master's employ, though the finger-marks on her white throat might have indicated very peculiar symptoms of the disease.

But returning to the rear balcony of the Cuernavaca municipal palace, it is presumed that the fall of the lady was entirely accidental, as were a number of other sudden demises in the Cortez household, whenever the occasion ap-

So the municipal building is still called the Palace of Cortez in honor of its strenuous master, and its history still lends an added distinction to the small city of Cuernavaca.

A Blind Marksman.

Charged with throwing a stone at Frederick W. Gestewitz, a music teacher, and inflicting a gash in his scalp, John Hartman, a blind man, of Springfield township, Pennsylvania, was given a hearing before Alderman Jacob Stager and held for court.

Hartman's defense was that, being blind, he would not have been able to see where to throw the stone.

Gestewitz claimed that he could produce neighbors to testify that Hartman shot birds, aiming by ear from sounds they uttered, or from their rustling in the trees. He said his footfalls in running away enabled Hartman to throw with accuracy.

When Heinrich Deterling weds Miss Mary Osterman tomorrow in the Dutch Reformed Church he will owe his good fortune to his gustatorial

A TRUE TEST

REGARDING CHAMBERLAIN'S COUGH REMEDY.

THE TEST OF TIME

A Bit of History—Showing How Honest Goods and Honest Efforts Have Succeeded.

For more than thirty years Chamberlain's Cough Remedy has constantly gained in favor and popularity until it is now one of the most staple medicines in use, and has an enormous sale. Every industry has its pioneer days, and it is during these struggling times that its worth and merits are tested. The early history of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy shows that except in point of merit, it had no more hope of success than other similar preparations, which were put on the market at the same time, but were never known outside of their own locality, and have long since ceased to be manufactured. Step by step, each successive year, as its superior excellence becomes more widely known, it has been gradually gaining in favor. Taken first, perhaps, on trial by some family, who found it good, it was recommended by them to a neighbor; they in turn passed it on to other friends, and for over thirty years its reputation has in this manner been spreading until it has reached the utmost corners of the earth. Science and advanced medical authorities during all of this time have failed to produce a better remedy for coughs, colds, and croup, and today Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is enjoying the largest sale of any similar preparation on the market. This success can be attributed to no other cause than its sterling worth. No matter how much prominence an article may receive through the medium of advertising, it must be trustworthy to hold the confidence of the public. In thousands of homes this remedy is the main reliance of parents in attacks of croup. Not only does it give prompt relief, but it is so pleasant to take that children like it, and it contains nothing that is in any way injurious.

NO OPIUM

In Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

The fact that Chamberlain's Cough Remedy contains no opium or other narcotic makes it particularly suitable for young children, and especially so, as it can always be depended upon in cases of colds, croup and whooping cough, and has become famous for its cures of these diseases. Mothers have for many years accepted our statements that Chamberlain's Cough Remedy contains no opium or other narcotic, but that they may be further assured of this fact, we submit the following certificates.

Many Mothers of a Like Opinion.

Mrs. Pilmer, of Cordova, Iowa says: "One of my children was subject to croup of a severe type, and the giving of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy promptly always brough relief. Many mothers in this neighborhood think the same as I do about this remedy and want no other kind for their children."

HEART TO HEART TALK

With a Young Mother.

Good morning. I'm so glad to see you. How are the children? What's the trouble now? Seems like they have been sick all winter. First scarlet fever, then diphtheria and now it is whooping cough. Well, you have had your hands full to be sure, but do you know I believe you could have warded off some of those diseases. Oh no! I'm not accusing you of neglecting your children: you're too good a mother to do that. I know your new neighbors brought scarlet fever, but don't your remember the hard colds your children had just when they came? Now listen a moment; that has had more to do with it than you think. Your children were then particularly susceptible to disease germs on account of their lowered vitality. Eminent physicians now agree that children would not be nearly so likely to take scarlet fever, diphtheria, whooping cough or any of the catching diseases if every cold were doctored when it first makes its appearance. You have noticed that when two children are exposed to some contagious disease at the same time often one of them will take it and the other will not. Well, that is just the reason, one child had a cold and the other did not. I never allow a cold to run twenty-four hours without attention. You say you don't have any confidence in cough medicines? You have not used the right one yet. Just try Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and you'll change your mind. Of course you have heard of it. It has been on the market for thirty-five years. No, indeed, it won't hurt the children. There is nothing in it that will injure your little baby. Get a bottle of it while you are up town and you will find that your children will not catch everything that comes along.

A Maine Merchant Tells Why He Recommends Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

"I have sold Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for a number of years," says Alonzo Preston, of West Bowdoin, Maine. "I do not use any other kind myself or in my family. I will give you a bit of experience I had with this remedy myself. I had a cough caused by catarrh so the doctors told me. I kept a continual hacking and when I got a cold it was much worse. The doctor could not relieve me and I used several cough cures, all to no purpose, except to get my stomach out of order. I had grown worse for two or three years and it became very annoying. After I took the agency for Chamberlain's Medicines I tried Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I used half a dozen bottles of the 25-cent size and three bottles of the 50-cent size and was thoroughly cured. I have not had a cough since, now going on two years, except when I get a cold, then I take this remedy and it soon fixes me all right. I know that my catarrh has not bothered me near so much as before, so of course I always recommend Chamberlain's when I am asked for the best cough remedy. I would have willingly given $50.00 to anyone who would have cured my cough as Chamberlain's Cough Remedy did."

Newbro's Herpicide

"I am sending you my photograph to show what Newbro's Herpicide has done for me.
"Since I first tried Herpicide upon my hair I have used it exclusively in giving scalp treatments to others, and I would not think of trying to get along without it."
(Signed) MRS. ANNA CONNER.
2807 Archer ave., Chicago, Ill.

Hundreds of lady scalp specialists and hair dressers use and recommend Newbro's Herpicide, instead of products of their own manufacture upon which a much larger profit could be made. They claim that Herpicide makes friends for them and gives much better satisfaction. Some hair dressers use Herpicide for obstinate cases only, but why not use the best first?

Herpicide is a delightful dressing that can be used when there is no disease of the hair or scalp, and as an actual remedy for dandruff, itching scalp and falling hair it stands in a class singularly its own.

Many ladies object to a gummy and sticky hair dressing, or one that is full of sedimentary chemicals intended to dye the hair. The marked preference for a clean and dainty preparation, particularly one that overcomes excessive oiliness and leaves the hair light and fluffy, is reflected in the enormous sale of Newbro's Herpicide. Discriminating ladies become enthusiastic over its refreshing quality and exquisite fragrance. It stops itching of the scalp almost instantly.

SIR RICHARD ESCOMBE.

one who will sit there like a hulk when my darlint Kitty may be under the cold water? Mr. Dulcimore—Mr. Dulcimore, I do believe you're the most outrageous man in Englind this night, and the wickedest. Be up and doing, sir—isn't she your own daughter, flesh of your flesh and bone of your bone? And I tell you she's left me—she's fled the house—my Kitty—my darlint—oh, sorrow the day——"

Here would follow a violent burst of sobbing, varied upon occasion by a useful fit of hysterics. Never did old Anthony do so much apologizing in all his days. And he had a hundred stories ready. Kitty was but just gone across the road to see old Miss Pennyfeather, and was staying there to plague them. Any minute might bring her back to the house. She would be down by the sea laughing at what she had done.

"I am grieved, profoundly grieved, my love—indeed, I do not know how to apologize for her waywardness. She's young, and we are two old folks—do not let us forget that. And, my dear Clara—come now—now, don't you think that we, perhaps, have been a little premature, a little overwishful in this matter? If I could bring you to see so much——"

"I do believe," says the old lady, wringing her hands anew, "that I have married a baboon from the Indies. Oh, get out of me sight, man—take yerself away—'tis no more sense ye have in your head than the old cow in the stable! Be off and find the girl—and don't you dare to come back to me unless she comes with you."

Of course he went, gladly and with new apologies—and what must happen directly he had gone but that the boy Willoughby arrives, hot from London in quest of Lord Churchill. A fine house of sorrows for such a lad to come to and a sorry tale for him to hear—my lords upstairs unable to hiccough another word—Lord Harborne heaven knew where; Kitty taken herself off. Mr. Cumminghame vanished as surely as the Cock Lane ghost! All of which Mrs. Dulcimore recited at length and with tears—and while she recited it a great hope came to Master Willoughby.

How, he asked himself, if Kitty, fleeing from circumstances he could well understand—how if she had taken the road to London; the very road which he himself must take, since his orders were imperative to deliver the papers to Lord Churchill and to return to London immediately. He believed it to be possible. None understood better than he the character of the wayward but clever girl with whom these people were dealing. Ensign Willoughby thought it by no means improbable—but of that he did not whisper a syllable to old Mrs. Dulcimore.

"I don't believe a word of it, Mrs. Dulcimore," he said laughing; "Kitty has just gone away in a huff, and, for all you know, is back in the house again by this time. She's too clever to give you cause for any real anxiety. Take my advice and send some one up to her bedroom—as like as not you'll find her there all the time."

"The very thing I said to me Anthony—not five minutes ago. She'll be upstairs all the time, I said—and what must the ijiot be doing but setting off for Shoreham after her. Oh, sorrow the day that I was married to an elephant, sorry the—but wait till he comes home and I'll know his reasons—ay, Mr. Willoughby, and with justice!"

Willoughby laughed in his sleeve at this—and, having drunk a glass of wine and eaten a mouthful of food, he returned to the chaise in which he had traveled down from London—and there, with his very foot upon the step, he came face to face with Kitty, as we have told, and was instantly put in possession of her story.

"Cousin Willoughby—oh, can it be Cousin Willoughby?"

"Now, Mistress Kitty, could it be any other? What, you are in trouble—crying—oh, Kitty, Kitty?——"

"I met my lord upon the cliff, and he insulted me—I cannot return to his house. Cousin Willoughby—neither my father nor mother understands—they are simple people and know no better. Cousin—I must go away—I must leave this place—will you take me, cousin?"

"But, Kitty, think, what will they—"

"I care not though all the country cries upon me. Is it not enough that I have been in this man's house for weeks together? Cousin Willoughby, I am going to my kinswoman at Marlow. If you will not help me to get there, I will walk the whole way—and I have not a shilling in my pocket nor a cloak for my back. Now, cousin——"

He stared at her, amazed. His pulse beat furiously, his tongue cleaved to the roof of his mouth because of the excitement of his thoughts.

"Kitty," he stammered, "you know there is nothing I would not do—and if your mind is really set upon it——"

"Oh, cousin, cousin," cries Kitty, "if I were your sister, would you leave me here for men to scorn me or would you take me to a house of safety?"

"God knows, I would give my life for you," says the lad—and immediately opening the door, he bade her enter the chaise.

Such, then, was the beginning of that pretty flight—an escapade of which the town would make much in the days to come, as we shall presently discover. And yet, as we know, it was never even a boy and girl affair; never so much as a hoyden comedy playing among the wheat sheaves innocently or set up for an example in the pastorals beloved of the King's Theater.

Kitty fled from Brighton because she believed it were an infamy to stay longer there—the young soldier accompanied her because she asked him to and for no other reason under God's sky.

It is true that Master Willoughby's heart beat quick, that the blood throbbed in his veins and that every impulse of his young manhood was quickened when he found himself side by side with Kitty in the chaise; but this was a natural sequence enough.

How he had loved the child; how often in his dreams had he pictured her as the new day discovered her—eyes half-closed, upon a white pillow; the golden threads of her pretty hair tousled upon a snow-white forehead, her breath faint as one who sleeps a child's sleep; her little hands clasped upon her lap—Kitty become the nomad, Kitty fleeing from riches to the cot—and by her side a man who named her for his divinity! None the less, young Willoughby would sooner have cut off his strong right hand than have betrayed a word of the truth at such an hour. Indeed, we find that he labored for her comfort in a way that no man of the world could have bettered; rousing the inns at her coming; urging the postboys to dispatch; asking her at every turn how she did—and expressing his love by no other overt act than that of the homage his eyes could not conceal. And thus, at last, he brought her to St. James—and there he left her at a hostelry he knew until leave could be obtained and he might conduct her to Marlow to her kinswoman's house.

Of this second stage of the journey we shall have but little to say. It had been a happier day for Ensign Willoughby, perhaps, had he chosen another for his escort—for what must happen but that, when they approached the village of Slough, whence Windsor is clearly to be discerned, the lad suddenly recollected Sir Richard's presence at the Castle and made mention of it.

"The King, they say, is very pleased with him, Kitty," he remarked, in a generous impulse not to be restrained.

To this Kitty replied by the first earnest word she had spoken since they left London again, cousin?"

"Not once since you were there. They tell the oddest things of him—were Medmenham a monkery in fact as well as name, Sir Dick would be the very man for a habit in the place."

Kitty thought upon this for a little while and presently she said:

"Why do you speak to me of Sir Richard, cousin, why does every one speak to me of him?"

"Because we all thought that you loved him, Kitty."

"And you, cousin—did you believe it?"

"Could I help it, Kitty? If it had not been so, if I had not thought it so, would not I have told you long ago what I have always been afraid to tell you, Kitty?"

Here was a declaration if you like; and what would have followed upon it but for Kitty's discretion, God only knows. Young Willoughby, a great hope returning to him, had no other desire than to catch Kitty in his arms and, holding her close, to take an oath that no days of his life should separate them again—which folly, perchance, he would have committed had not he surprised her pretty eyes regarding the distant castle so wistfully that all her secret was to be read in an instant and his own supreme desire frozen at his heart. Kitty, however, wished still to deceive him; and speaking very kindly, she said:

"I shall never learn to love, cousin; it is a lesson no one can teach me."

"Ah, Kitty. If I could believe that. Look in my eyes and tell me it is the truth."

"No, no," she cried, "the sun is setting and it blinds me, cousin; look, all the west is aflame. I cannot speak of it. And now the castle is far behind us; oh, do not let us talk of it any more, cousin"

He obeyed her without a word. This knowledge, that whatever her lips might say, her heart was another man's, came to him as a sad echo of the declining day and an omen of that night through which, it seemed, all who loved Kitty Dulcimore must live.

"She will marry Richard Escombe or she will never marry at all," said Ensign Willoughby, and then with an instinctive dread of that which had been done he asked himself, "What will he say, what will London say of last night's work?"

But this was a question the future alone could answer—and how it answered it we shall presently tell.

FOREIGN LEMON SPELLS LOSS.

EVEN CANADA PREFERS PRODUCT OF CALIFORNIA.

Reports from Various Parts of the United States Show Western Fruit is Rapidly Shutting Out Imports from Sicily—Orange Trade Continues to Improve.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, March 10.—Losses are all that importers of Sicily lemons can figure on. During the past two or three weeks the net loss has ranged from 35 to 40 cents on every box sold at auction in this market. The cost of these lemons to importers, based on prices paid for fruit in Sicily, is $2.40 laid down here. Many importers have made contracts for the season based upon this price. The outlook is not encouraging, and it appears that handlers of foreign goods are, in a way, to lose a good deal of money before the season closes.

Prominent importers say that the more liberal distribution of Californias is a potent influence in depressing the Sicily market. The amount of this influence is told eloquently in the figures which show that not more than 140,000 boxes of Sicilies will go to Montreal this year. This same city, however, is reported as buying Californias heavily, and many of its dealers are unsatisfied because it is impossible to obtain all the supplies desired. If Canadians find it more profitable to handle American-grown fruit, the proportion of profits and the relative increase in trade which will accrue to growers and dealers in the States can be easily understood.

Brokers who have customers scattered through the West declare that the demand for Sicily lemons in the sections where they operate, is not more than 50 per cent. of that of last year. This is admitted to be due to the competition of Californias. The principal reason assigned for the supplanting of Sicily by California fruit is the better packing and grading. Or, to put it another way, when buyers place orders for Sicily lemons, they do not know what they are going to get; when they buy Californias, they feel assured that the quality will be satisfactory, and that the packing will be quite in keeping with the general excellence of the fruit.

It only remains for the California grower to continue to pack and grade his fruit well in order to capture the markets of the world.

The Sicily fruit is unsatisfactory. It has been unsatisfactory for years, but the Sicily grower and importer had the trade at their mercy. It was impossible to obtain anything else better, or even as good. That time has passed. The lemons grown on the Pacific Coast are infinitely superior to anything offered from abroad, and buyers are glad to pay highest prices for them. It remains now to increase the output to correspond with the enlarged demand.

The orange trade continues to improve. With spring-like weather for a considerable proportion of the time during the past week the conditions have been fully as good as previously. Retailers have been able to offer fruit in the open air, which has materially increased the sales. The effect is felt in the auction rooms.

So much depends upon the weather. The retailer can't dispose of his wares if it is frosty, and his customers will not buy if it is rainy or cold and windy. When the sun shines, however, the yellow globes are extremely attractive and sales are relatively large.

When at noon the great office buildings pour forth the huge crowds of employés a good many charge upon the push carts, and the temptingly-displayed stock fades away as if by magic.

The trustees of the New York Fruit Exchange held a meeting recently at which the question of the inspection of Florida and California oranges and of pineapples was considered. The exchange has felt for some time that the control of these three fruits, so far as inspection is concerned, should be in its own hands.

Pineapple inspection was thought most important at present, and a committee of three, composed of William A. Camp, E. Andrews, Jr., and C. W. Maxfield, was appointed to investigate and report at a subsequent meeting. The pineapple season is about opening, which accounts for the special stress laid upon that variety of fruit.

The exchange has long wanted to get the inspection of domestic oranges as it would largely increase the income of the organization. But it is difficult to see wherein inspection of Californias is necessary. They arrive in good condition, both winter and summer, and no fault can posibly be found with them.

Resolutions calling for the standardization of Sicily lemon boxes will be sent to the daily press of the country. The exchange hopes in this way to

DOWN IN OLD MEXICO.

BY WILL BRANAN.

Since Adam was inspired by the divine inflatus to take unto himself a wife in the person of that timid young creature whose name was Eve, love has played a promiscuous part in the history of the universe. It is an established fact that one of the most pleasant pastimes in any country, civilized or otherwise, is that of courtship, of dancing attendance at the heels of one's fair prospect. Indeed, it has come to be recognized as the most entrancing part of the affair, since those who have ventured into that dread unknown which lies beyond the altar are always willing to testify that it would have been far better if they could have continued forever in that blissful state of ignorance which precedes matrimony.

Now there is so much curiosity concerning that most delightful recreation which the republic of Mexico affords, generally known to the foreigners resident in the capital city as "playing the bear," that the following modus operandi, which has been known to achieve desired results, may not be found amiss:

FIRST.

Find some señorita of inviting demeanor, and sweet—but not too sweet. It is absolutely essential that she be "simpatica" and that she have sufficient embonpoint; but as all señoritas look alike in the moonlight it is immaterial as to whether she has golden or raven-black hair, gazelle or doe eyes, big feet or little. These minor details will develop after the prize is won.

SECOND.

It is necessary that the charming damsel's dwelling have some sort of an opening, preferably a casement window. The bars of a window are never so close together that they prevent two hands from thrilling as one.

THIRD.

The devoted admirer must first establish communication with the object of his tender solicitude through the assistance of some pertero, mozo, or criada of the household, and after much perseverance, pounds of dulces, bushels of billets doux, and a hothouse of flowers, he is in a position to proceed.

FOURTH.

The young gentleman in question seeks some vantage point at a convenient distance from the window where the apparition is supposed to appear, and begins to curb his patience He attracts attention to his presence in the neighborhood by something sentimental, not necessarily "Yankee Doodle," but this is hardly requisite—as his presence will probably have been instinctively felt by the maiden, who has doubtless been waiting expectantly for the approach of some male specimen since her graduation from the cradle, long before the present subject arrives on the scene But there may be no indication of her anxiety in this direction on the first night—not even a flutter behind the blinds of her window. Still, after a proper number of moonlight nights the maiden may make bold to inquire in a low voice as to what the young man is doing in the vicinity. Perhaps he would like to talk with some other member of the family? No?

FIFTH.

After a few preliminaries and some side-stepping it develops, as it always does in the course of true love that the young man in question is a hero or demi-god of some sort—that is, while posing in the proper attitude against some convenient wall. It also develops that the charming damsel is one of the most beautiful young persons on earth—in the moonlight.

It is only natural to presume that this pleasant diversion would have a host of enthusiastic followers, and it is merely a matter of passing down some street or boulevard in the evening from 7 to 10 o'clock, to have the fact sufficiently demonstrated by concrete and loving examples. They may be seen in every shadow, and it requires remarkable agility to avoid breaking into some stage of the game that is too far advanced for the eyes of an outsider. It is perhaps the most popular pursuit or pastime or sport, or whatever it may be designated by its devotees, at present engaging the leisure time of the young natives of Mexico.

Carnival Day in Mexico.

Martes de Carnival, or the Frenchman's Mardi Gras, was celebrated throughout the republic of Mexico on Tuesday, March 3, His Majesty, King Momo, being buried at midnight, in the midst of much merrymaking, music and dancing.

Carnival Day is generally observed in Mexico in anticipation of the succeeding dull days of Lent, and that portion of the multitude which is in the habit of being bad is supposed to get all of the mischief out of its system in preparation for the restraint exercised by the mother church.

But much of the festival fun observed by old-timers in Mexico has departed in late years, and there is very little to the day in the capital but big crowds and noisy children. The west side of the Alameda, one of the most magnificent parks in the two Americas, is always lined with booths for the sale of toys and dulces on days of fiesta, and this, of course, lent a holiday color to the celebration. Several small dances and masked balls were held in Mexico City and its suburbs during the evening, but the maskers were less conspicuous on the streets than in past celebrations of the sort.

One of the prettiest customs connected with Carnival Day in Mexico is that of breaking "cascarones," or eggshells filled with confetti, over the coquettish heads of young females eligible for matrimony. Though this custom is not so generally observed in the capital city, where Florida water is frequently substituted for confetti, it is still very popular in many parts of the republic.

The Conqueror.

If they tell you that I am stern of heart,
Unkind, unfeeling, merciless, 'tis true;
If they tell you that I have trampled through
Their tears of desolation, and depart
With iron in my soul, you will impart
To them this declaration,—and for you
The task will be of honor, for in lieu
Of Hernan Cortez you shall speak; to start
My plea, I never yet destroyed in vain,—
I may not spare your soldiers or your king,
But I will not unwise destruction bring
To that which I may never build again
With greater grandeur; and your bells will ring,
Your poets ever of my conquest sing.

Cuernavaca's Past.

The picturesque little capital of the State of Morelos, Mex., is now passing through a very pleasant boom, and its ancient inhabitants are on the qui vive to take advantage of that most desirable of suckers, the American tourist.

The new golf links of the Cuernavaca Country Club, whose membership is made up largely of Mexico City residents, were formally inaugurated Saturday afternoon, March 7, the first ball being driven over the course by Gov. Alarcon of Morelos.

But this is not the best part of Cuernavaca's story, by any means. Though not very pretentious in population or civilization, Cuernavaca has a history that would put to shame

It is not generally known that one of the innumerable spouses of Hernan Cortez was gently pushed over the rear balcony of the present municipal palace of Cuernavaca by her lord and master, when he was sojourning with her in this little city. As it is a sheer drop of nearly one hundred feet to the court beneath, this esteemed lady probably suffered the same fate that befell La Mariña, another damsel who enjoyed en passant the favor of New Spain's conqueror.

Perhaps it may not be remembered by readers of The Times, but La Mariña was the distinguished dame who died of asthma in the Coyoacan casa of Hernan Cortez. Or at any rate that was the report given out by physicians in their iron-hearted master's employ, though the finger-marks on her white throat might have indicated very peculiar symptoms of the disease.

But returning to the rear balcony of the Cuernavaca municipal palace, it is presumed that the fall of the lady was entirely accidental, as were a number of other sudden demises in the Cortez household, whenever the occasion ap-

So the municipal building is still called the Palace of Cortez in honor of its strenuous master, and its history still lends an added distinction to the small city of Cuernavaca.

A Blind Marksman.

Charged with throwing a stone at Frederick W. Gestewitz, a music teacher, and inflicting a gash in his scalp, John Hartman, a blind man, of Springfield township, Pennsylvania, was given a hearing before Alderman Jacob Stager and held for court.

Hartman's defense, was that, being blind, he would not have been able to see where to throw the stone.

Gestewitz claimed that he could produce neighbors to testify that Hartman shot birds, aiming by ear from sounds they uttered, or from their rustling in the trees. He said his footfalls in running away enabled Hartman to throw with accuracy.

When Heinrich Deterling weds Miss Mary Osterman tomorrow in the Dutch Reformed Church he will owe his good fortune to his gustatorial

A TRUE TEST

REGARDING CHAMBERLAIN'S COUGH REMEDY.

THE TEST OF TIME

A Bit of History—Showing How Honest Goods and Honest Efforts Have Succeeded.

For more than thirty years Chamberlain's Cough Remedy has constantly gained in favor and popularity until it is now one of the most staple medicines in use, and has an enormous sale. Every industry has its pioneer days, and it is during these struggling times that its worth and merits are tested. The early history of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy shows that except in point of merit, it had no more hope of success than other similar preparations, which were put on the market at the same time, but were never known outside of their own locality, and have long since ceased to be manufactured. Step by step, each successive year, as its superior excellence becomes more widely known, it has been gradually gaining in favor. Taken first, perhaps, on trial by some family, who found it good, it was recommended by them to a neighbor; they in turn passed it on to other friends, and for over thirty years its reputation has in this manner been spreading until it has reached the utmost corners of the earth. Science and advanced medical authorities during all of this time have failed to produce a better remedy for coughs, colds, and croup, and today Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is enjoying the largest sale of any similar preparation on the market. This success can be attributed to no other cause than its sterling worth. No matter how much prominence an article may receive through the medium of advertising, it must be trustworthy to hold the confidence of the public. In thousands of homes this remedy is the main reliance of parents in attacks of croup. Not only does it give prompt relief, but it is so pleasant to take that children like it, and it contains nothing that is in any way injurious.

according to directions, return it to your dealer and get your money back. It is well known for its prompt cures of coughs, colds, and croup.

NO OPIUM

In Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

The fact that Chamberlain's Cough Remedy contains no opium or other narcotic makes it particularly suitable for young children, and especially so, as it can always be depended upon in cases of colds, croup and whooping cough, and has become famous for its cures of these diseases. Mothers have for many years accepted our statements that Chamberlain's Cough Remedy contains no opium or other narcotic, but that they may be further assured of this fact, we submit the following certificates.

Many Mothers of a Like Opinion.

Mrs. Pilmer, of Cordova, Iowa says: "One of my children was subject to croup of a severe type, and the giving of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy promptly always brough relief. Many mothers in this neighborhood think the same as I do about this remedy and want no other kind for their children."

HEART TO HEART TALK

With a Young Mother.

Good morning. I'm so glad to see you. How are the children? What's the trouble now? Seems like they have been sick all winter. First scarlet fever, then diphtheria and now it is whooping cough. Well, you have had your hands full to be sure, but do you know I believe you could have warded off some of those diseases. Oh no! I'm not accusing you of neglecting your children; you're too good a mother to do that. I know your new neighbors brought scarlet fever, but don't your remember the hard colds your children had just when they came? Now listen a moment; that has had more to do with it than you think. Your children were then particularly susceptible to disease germs on account of their lowered vitality. Eminent physicians now agree that children would not be nearly so likely to take scarlet fever, diphtheria, whooping cough or any of the catching diseases if every cold were doctored when it first makes its appearance. You have noticed that when two children are exposed to some contagious disease at the same time often one of them will take it and the other will not. Well, that is just the reason, one child had a cold and the other did not. I never allow a cold to run twenty-four hours without attention. You say you don't have any confidence in cough medicines? You have not used the right one yet. Just try Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and you'll change your mind. Of course you have heard of it. It has been on the market for thirty-five years. No, indeed, it won't hurt the children. There is nothing in it that will injure your little baby. Get a bottle of it while you are up town and you will find that your children will not catch everything that comes along.

A Maine Merchant Tells Why He Recommends Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

"I have sold Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for a number of years," says Alonzo Preston, of West Bowdoin, Maine. "I do not use any other kind myself or in my family. I will give you a bit of experience I had with this remedy myself. I had a cough caused by catarrh so the doctors told me. I kept a continual hacking and when I got a cold it was much worse. The doctor could not relieve me and I used several cough cures, all to no purpose, except to get my stomach out of order. I had grown worse for two or three years and it became very annoying. After I took the agency for Chamberlain's Medicines I tried Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I used half a dozen bottles of the 25-cent size and three bottles of the 50-cent size and was thoroughly cured. I have not had a cough since, now going on two years, except when I get a cold, then I take this remedy and it soon fixes me all right. I know that my catarrh has not bothered me near so much as before, so of course I always recommend Chamberlain's when I am asked for the best cough remedy. I would have willingly given $50.00 to anyone who would have cured my cough as Chamberlain's Cough Remedy did."

Newbro's Herpicide

"I am sending you my photograph to show what Newbro's Herpicide has done for me.

"Since I first tried Herpicide upon my hair I have used it exclusively in giving scalp treatments to others, and I would not think of trying to get along without it."

(Signed) MRS. ANNA CONNER.
2807 Archer ave., Chicago, Ill.

Hundreds of lady scalp specialists and hair dressers use and recommend Newbro's Herpicide, instead of products of their own manufacture upon which a much larger profit could be made. They claim that Herpicide makes friends for them and gives much better satisfaction. Some hair dressers use Herpicide for obstinate cases only, but why not use the best first?

Herpicide is a delightful dressing that can be used when there is no disease of the hair or scalp, and as an actual remedy for dandruff, itching scalp and falling hair it stands in a class singularly its own.

Many ladies object to a gummy and sticky hair dressing, or one that is full of sedimentary chemicals intended to dye the hair. The marked preference for a clean and dainty preparation, particularly one that overcomes excessive oiliness and leaves the hair light and fluffy, is reflected in the enormous sale of Newbro's Herpicide. Discriminating ladies become enthusiastic over its refreshing quality and exquisite fragrance. It stops itching of the scalp almost instantly.

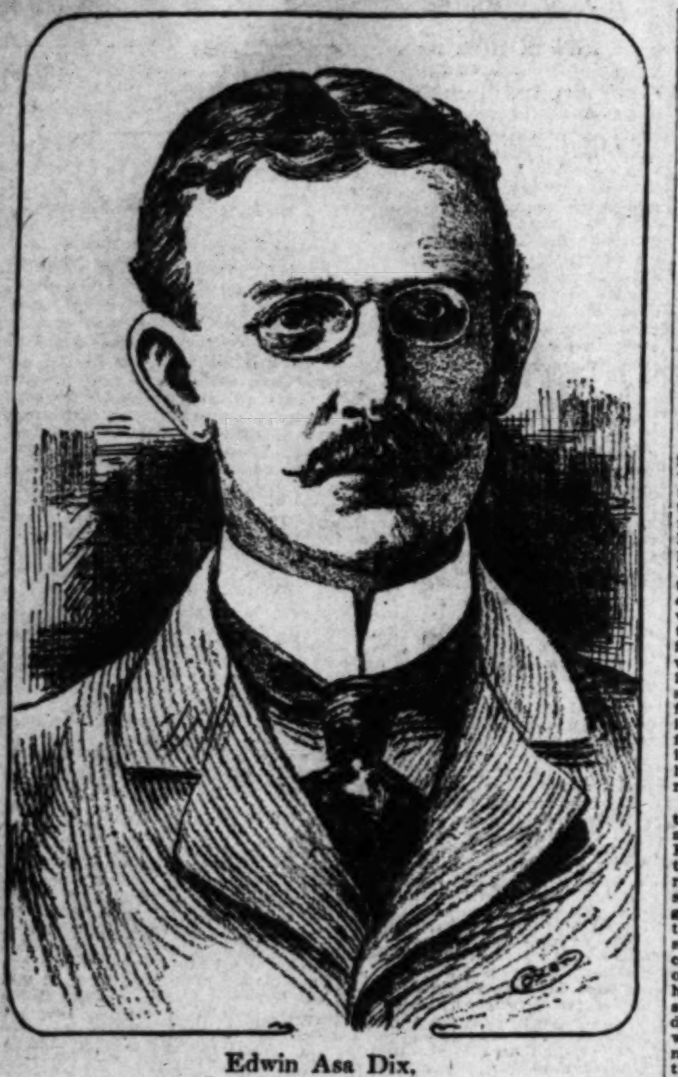
SH LITERATURE—News From the Realm of Books and Authors.



Edwin Asa Dix,
author of "Prophet's Landing."

Simple and Wholesome.

PROPHET'S LANDING. By Edwin Asa Dix. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. (Price $1.50.)

This is the story of a little New England town in the early seventies, called "Prophet's Landing," because some centuries ago it was founded by a strange religious sect, led there by one of themselves, who thought he was a prophet. One of his ancestors is a leading character in the story. He, too, is regarded by some as a prophet.

The story is direct, straightforward and intenesly real. It deals with the growth of Joel Harney, an able man who keeps a general store in Prophet's Landing, and who applies modern business methods to the situation with unexpected results to himself and his neighbors.

Joel Harney intends to run for State Senator, but Elder Potter, the prophet, thinks it is his duty to defeat him, and he calls a meeting for this purpose. He speaks against Joel, though he does not mention his name. Joel, whose conscience has been astir for some time, gets up and says he has withdrawn his name, and that Elder Potter's arraignment is all true.

In his intense ambition, Joel Harney has, to some extent, alienated himself from himself and family, who have not fully sympathized with him in his struggle for wealth and power. The reconciliation with his wife is tender and touching. They agree that together they will strive to make every reparation for the wrong he has done.

"He got up and began to pace back and forth.

" 'We can't go back to father's days. But perhaps we can go back to some of his ways. I'm going to try to at the store. I don't mean that I expect to put the molasses barrel and the butter tubs exactly where they used to stand, nor close out the new lines; that would be only foolishness. But I think I'll try running the place again on his motto of live and let live—even if it doesn't make so much money.' "

A Fairy Story of Today.

LORD CAMMARLEIGH'S SECRET. By Roy Horniman. Little, Brown & Co., Boston. (Price $1.50.)

The picturesque hero has always had his devoted following, for we all admire cleverness and audacity, even if they be seasoned with a strong dash of wickedness. Surely, there never was a more engaging scamp in fiction than Anthony Brooke, the musingly resourceful hero of this bright bit of fiction, "Lord Cammarleigh's Secret."

Anthony is as beautiful as the Ernests and Algernons of Oscar Wilde's plays, and he talks with the same amazing epigrammatic cleverness and cynicism. Attaching himself to Lord Cammarleigh as his private secretary by a bold declaration that he knows me luds "secret," he carries all before him, living a life of ease twice gilded, and ends up by marrying Lord Cammarleigh's niece, the charming and almost equally adventure-loving Sybil. Me lud was glad to give his consent, for he felt that Anthony would never betray a relative.

The books ends as delightfully as it began:

"He grew almost hysterical with relief, and stood on the steps of the house in Grosvenor Square with tears in his eyes, smiling at the bride and bridegroom as they entered the carriage to drive to Charing Cross.

"Just as the horses were about to start, Anthony called out:

" 'Stop,' and he beckoned to Cammarleigh.

"Cammarleigh approached the door of the brougham, and Anthony, leaning forward, whispered in his ear:

" 'By the way, what is your secret?'

"And the carriage dashed away."

COMMENT FROM THE REVIEWER'S TABLE.

A marked revival of interest in the stories of Louisa M. Alcott has been a feature of the past book season in England. This is probably due to the publication there of eight volumes of the new illustrated edition of the famous "Little Women" series. The edition has met with marked favor, from both the public and the literary journals. G. K. Chesterton, in an appreciation of Miss Alcott's work, does not hesitate to place her by the side of Jane Austen, "because her talent, though doubtless inferior, was of exactly the same kind." He points out that the two writers are alike inasmuch as there is the same silent and unexplained assumption of the feminine point of view. He adds: "One thing is very certain, that the books are good, very good, from both a masculine and feminine standpoint."

Judge Curtis D. Wilbur of Los Angeles is already known as a lover of children. New evidence of this can be found in the current St. Nicholas, where there begins a series of novel animal stories for younger readers entitled "The Bear Family at Home" and "How the Circus Came to Visit Them." These stories were originally told by Judge Wilbur to his own children, and are now to gladden a larger circle of kiddies.

The Grafton Press of New York is bringing out at the present time two books for Mrs. Lu Wheat of this city. One is a new edition of her "Third Daughter," adapted to children, under the title of "Ah Moy, the Story of a Chinese Girl." The illustrations for this book are made from drawings which were studies of life among the Chinese, by a Los Angeles artist, Miss Nellie Curran. The other book is a romance of life in the early days of Los Angeles, having also a serious purpose. Its title is "Helen, a Story of Things to Be."

Any one wishing to read something far beyond the ordinary in a magazine can find in the current McClure's a little bit of human life, set down with simplicity and suppressed feeling that is truly genius. It is the story of Gen. Pickett's life, told by his widow. In the few pages of recollection, more is made clear concerning the real man than would be found in any thousand-page biography. It is too holy a revelation to be made between storiettes and corset ads.

PEOPLE AND THINGS OF LITERARY NOTE.

In its inquiry into the usefulness of alcohol as a stimulus to work the Revue has obtained the following interesting opinions from notable men: Jules Claretie denies its efficacy as an intellectual stimulant; Massenet, the composer, prefers to work without it; Saint-Saëns disdains it; Sardou calls it poison.

In October, 1900, the Atlantic published a story by Charles Warren entitled: "The Draxon Dinners." In January, 1908, a writer called Frederick Herron sold the same story to the editors of the Smart Set under the title "The Shurtleff Dinners." The two narratives are identical except for the consistent change of name throughout the second. It is an extraordinarily bold literary theft.

With "Furze the Cruel" a new English novelist, John Trevena, will be introduced to American readers. With his first novel Mr. Trevena made a favorable impression upon the critics and discerning readers of his own country, who predict for its author great popularity among the large class of readers who appreciate the work of Thomas Hardy.

S. E. Kiser is suffering the penalty of fame. Somebody is traveling about posing as S. E. Kiser and as a proof reciting his "Love Sonnets of an Office Boy" and other verse. In consequence Mr. Kiser receives strange communications from numerous unknown friends, and lately one of them, on a visit from London, called on him at Chicago to exchange the hospitalities which the real Kiser never received.

The advance sheets of H. Perry Robinson's "Twentieth Century American," which is to be published during the next fortnight, seem to indicate that the purpose of the book is to remove as far as may be America's distrust of England and England's ignorance and prejudice against the United States. "The frank brutality with which the traveling Englishman has made his opinions known on any peculiar trait which he has been pleased to think that he has noticed in the United States," Mr. Robinson says, "has been vastly more ill mannered than anything in the manner of the Americans themselves on which he has animadverted so freely. The thing most comparable to it—most nearly as ill mannered—is the frank brutality with which the traveling American expresses himself (or herself) in regard to things in Europe."

Camille Flammarion, whose sensitiveness to all the influences of earth and air is revealed in his "Mysterious Psychic Forces," is in protest against the automobile. He says that the big red devils disturb the music of the spheres and the harmony of the angelic choir. They raise a dust cloud that stands between him and his constellations, besmirching his lenses and clogging the delicate machinery of the observatory. He may have to retire, he admits, with his astronomical instruments and his apparatus for conducting seances to some far away spot where the toot of the automobile is not heard and where nothing impedes the interplay of electrical and psychic forces.

Prof. John Bassett Moore, formerly Assistant Secretary of State, has been compelled to give up his duties as professor of international law at Columbia University, owing to failing eyesight. The trustees have granted him leave of absence for the remainder of the academic year, and he will go to Florida to recuperate. It is hoped that Prof. Moore's trouble will not be serious, and that he may soon be able to resume, not only his university duties, but also the work of editing the writings and state papers of the late President James Buchanan, upon which he has been engaged for several years. This work will be complete in about twelve volumes, and its publishers are planning to have two volumes ready this spring.

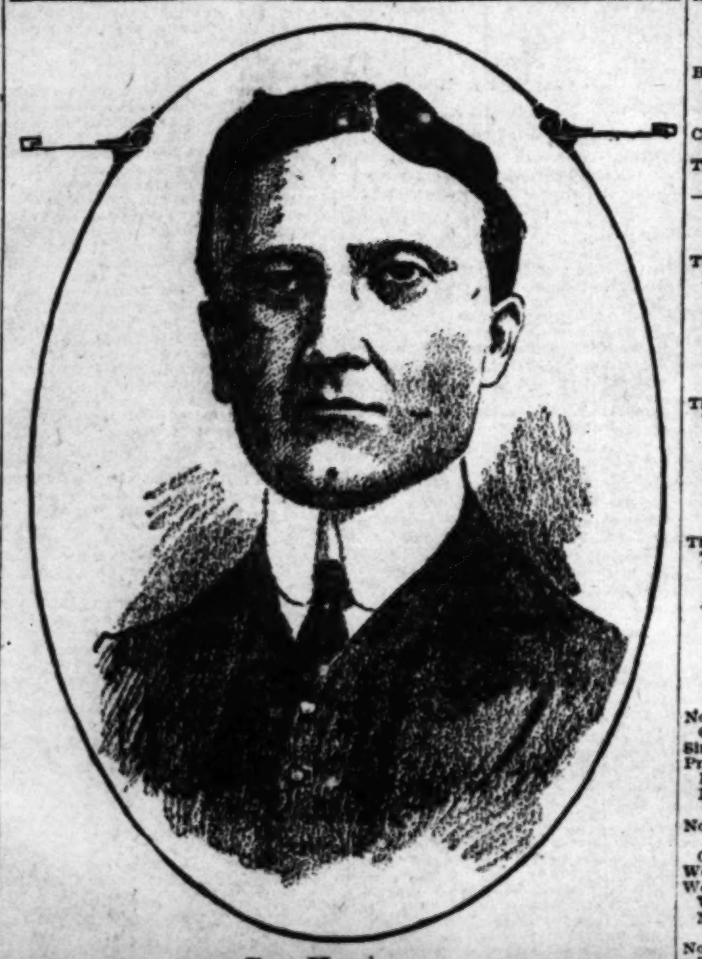
While traveling in England during the early sixties, J. B. Lippincott, founder of the firm of the name, chanced upon the late "Ouida's" first novel, "Held in Bondage." Finding merit in it, he bought the American rights. The book did not at first prove a success in this country, owing to its title, which was supposed to have reference to the impending war. However, Mr. Lippincott brought out in 1865 this author's second novel, "Strathmore," which proved more successful. The first novel was later republished under the title of "Granville de Vigne," and achieved a great popularity. Thus was established the almost life-long connection between the author and the J. B. Lippincott Company. For nearly thirty years they were her sole publishers in America, and it was through them that all of this novelist's books became known to the American public.

NEWS AND NOTES OF FORTHCOMING BOOKS.

Ernest Hamlin Abbott's papers "On the Training of Parents," which have been appearing serially, will be published next month in book form.

The Rev. Stopford A. Brooke has just finished a volume of essays upon Matthew Arnold, Rossetti, Morris and Arthur Hugh Clough. The volume will be entitled "Four Victorian Poets," and will appear shortly under the Putnam imprint.

Prof. A. J. Church is preparing for early publication in England his autobiography which will appear under the title "Memories of Men and Books." For more than forty years Prof. Church was associated with the Spectator and R. H. Hutton and he has written some seventy books.



Roy Horniman.

The latest book written by Gen. Charles King, which bears the military title, "To the Front," is a sequel to the famous "Cadet Days." In this later story Geordie Graham, now lieutenant, is a pretty good sort of hero, and boys will be glad to grip his hand once more.

Arthur Train's new book, "True Stories of Crime from the District Attorney's Office," will be brought out early this month. The scenes recorded are historical and the characters are real men and women who lived and schemed, laughed, sinned and suffered and paid the price when the time came, most of them without flinching.

"The Girl and the Game and Other College Stories" is Jesse Lynch Williams's contribution to the spring fiction. Athletics, fun and sentiment, study and sport—all that makes up the college life of the day—enter into these tales. There are seven short essays of advice to a kid brother in the book, which are full of humorous wisdom.

J. Ellis Barker is publishing in England a work entitled "British Socialism; an Examination of Its Doctrines, Aims and Practical Proposals." Mr. Barker claims that this is the first book to examine fully the entire party literature of socialism and to reply to the socialistic propaganda. He quotes between 400 and 500 books and pamphlets.

For more than a quarter of a century the Earl of Cromer was practically the ruler of Egypt. In his two-volume work on "Modern Egypt," which is to be published this week, Lord Cromer tells the whole story of his connection with the country—a story which has particular interest for Americans because of the information it will give concerning problems of colonial administration.

William Dean Howells's new novel will make its appearance through the Harpers during the second week in March. The somewhat baffling title, "Fennel and Rue," which at once recalls the herbs of Ophelia's naming, symbolizes, it is said, the emotional state of the hero after it is all over, when he reflects upon his somewhat curious treatment of the heroine. This unusual quality in the love story will doubtless capture many of Mr. Howell's readers, if any such remain uncaptured.

The new novel by May Sinclair, according to a statement of the Harpers, will be published early in March; as it happens, on the same day with Mr. Howells's "Fennel and Rue." The story will not be a problem novel, in any current sense of the word, at least, since it will describe a wife who is loving and a husband who is faithful. The psychological tragedy between them which is nevertheless involved will, it is claimed, challenge the critics to declare whether Miss Sinclair in her most poignant realism is not, after all, an idealist of a complex and subtle—that is to say, of an intensely modern—kind.

BITS OF VERSE.

The Watch Below.

The bell has sounded and the watch is done,
 The dawn enlightens all the darkened sea—
 That cold relentless friend of such as we—
The bell has sounded, brother; soon the sun.

No more to stare on dreary sheets of foam,
 No more to scan the stars in any wise,
 No more to clamber riggings hard with ice;
Lo! on the port repeat the lights of home.

Oh, we were weary, weary, and the best
 That life could give us was to plow the main
 Through the wide night till dawn loomed up again;
But God at last has covered us with rest.

The bell has sounded, 'tis the watch's knell;
 Let us make haste below where it is warm,
 Out of the cold and fog, the dark and storm;
The bell has sounded, brothers. All is well.

Friends.

There are friends who linger while riches attend,
 And those who will praise you when many defend,
Those, too, who will love you midst fortune and power,
 Gay friends, gaudy friends, gallant friends of an hour—

But when heartless poverty masses his cloud,
 And frowning misfortune has woven her shroud
About you, you turn to your friends all in vain;
 But few, maybe none, of the many remain—

But if there be one who is faithful and true,
 Whose heart and whose hand are extended to you,
Count him the best blessing that heaven could send—
Thank God for all loss if you win such a friend.

A Life Lesson.

There! little girl; don't cry!
 They have broken your doll, I know;
  And your tea-set blue,
  And your playhouse, too,
 Are things of the long ago;
  But childish troubles will soon pass by—
   There! little girl; don't cry!

There! little girl; don't cry!
 They have broken your slate, I know;
  And the glad, wild ways
  Of your schoolgirl days
 Are things of the long ago;
  But life and love will soon come by—
   There! little girl; don't cry!

There! little girl; don't cry!
 They have broken your heart, I know;
  And the rainbow gleams
  Of your youthful dreams
 Are things of the long ago;
  But heaven holds all for which you sigh—
   There! little girl; don't cry!

Nothing but Leaves.

Nothing but leaves; the spirit grieves
 Over a wasted life;
Sin committed while conscience slept,
Promises made but never kept,
 Hatred, battle and strife;
 Nothing but leaves!

Nothing but leaves; no garnered sheaves
 Of life's fair, ripened grain;
Words, idle words, for earnest deeds;
We sow our seeds—lo! tares and weeds;
 We reap, with toil and pain,
 Nothing but leaves!

Nothing but leaves; memory weaves
 No veil to screen the past:
Counting each lost and misspent day,
 We find, sadly, at last,
 Nothing but leaves!

And shall we meet the Master so,
 Bearing our withered leaves?
The Savior looks for perfect fruit;
We stand before Him, humbled, mute;
 Waiting the words He breathes—
 Nothing but leaves!

O Silver Rose.

The dark hours turn so slowly and so sweet,
 This last still hour soft fallen from the stars,
Tomorrow I may kneel and touch thy feet,
 O Rose of all Shiraz!

Lay wide thine amorous lattice to the south,
 O Silver Rose, when roses breathe thy name,
And thou at dawn shall feel upon thy mouth
 The kiss I dared not claim.

Discrowned, dishonored, reft of pride and power,
 From the red battle where they hailed me lord,
O Silver Rose, O sweet Pomegranate Flower,
 I turn me to their sword.

Life hath so held me to an empty part,
 Life hath so snared me, bound and made me blind,
Tomorrow I may rest upon thy heart,
 For death shall prove more kind.
—[Marjorie L. C. Pickhall, in the Metropolitan.

Sit Down, Sad Soul.

Sit down, sad soul, and count
 The moments flying;
Come, tell the sweet amount
 That's lost by sighing!
How many smiles? a score?
Then laugh, and count no more;
 For day is dying!

Lie down, sad soul, and sleep,
 And no more measure
The flight of time, nor weep
 The loss of leisure;
But here, by this lone stream,
Lie down with us, and dream
 Of starry treasure!

We dream; do thou the same;
 We love forever;
We laugh, yet few we shame—
 The gentle never.
Stay, then, till sorrow dies;
Then—hope and happy skies
 Are thine forever!

RHEUMATISM

Makes a man feel old before his time. His joints become stiff, his circulation poor, and his suffering makes him irritable.

Sloan's Liniment

gives him instant relief from pain, starts up a good circulation, relieves congestion, and gives elasticity to the muscles and joints. It is very penetrating, needs hardly any rubbing. Best remedy for Sciatica, Lumbago, Sprains, Strains, Cuts, Burns and Bruises.

If You Have a Friend, and That Friend Has a Cancer, You Cannot Do for Your Friend an Act of Greater Devotion than to Send This Advertisement to Him or Her.

DON'T NEGLECT A CANCER. Thirty thousand people in the United States die every year from Cancer. The disease is always fatal if the Cancer is neglected.

Yet, in probably 29,000 cases, the disease could be cured if properly treated. Don't neglect a lump in the breast, or a sore on the face or any part of the body. It may be a Cancer. Check it in time. Taken in its incipiency, the Cancer will yield readily to remedial measures. Allowed to burrow in the tissues, it will baffle the skill of the most expert practitioners.

If you have the slightest suspicion that you may have a Cancer, then submit to an examination at once. FIND OUT whether it is a Cancer. Don't stop until you absolutely KNOW. If your family doctor seems in doubt, come to the Mrs. Bridge Cancer Cure. We charge nothing for examinations, and it will take only a few moments of your time.

IF WE FIND THAT IT IS A CANCER, you will not be frightened or coaxed to undergo treatment. We will tell you whether, in our opinion, it can be cured or not. If cases similar to yours have been treated and cured, we will give you names and addresses, that you may satisfy yourself as to the cure, and as to our reliability.

We never promise to cure the incurable. No pay is taken except for service performed at your request. The terms are reasonable, and every cure is effected in as few treatments as possible. You will not be discharged as cured until the tissue is perfectly healed. We watch over you to prevent relapse or recurrence. Diagnoses and applications of remedy directed by licensed doctor of medicine.

OUR CURES ARE EFFECTED WITHOUT RECOURSE TO KNIFE OR BURNING CAUSTIC. We have cured Cancer of the Tongue where surgeons advised that the tongue must be cut out. We have saved hundreds from disfigurement and death. We hope to save thousands more. May we not try to save you?

MINES AND MINING--Past Week's News From the Surrounding Ore Distr

IN THE EARTH.

RARE MINERALS, METALLURGY AND CHEMISTRY.

To Correspondents:

This department is not conducted for pay. Its object is to convey reliable information of interest and value to the public, and it is not for the private benefit of any miner, collector, speculator or prospector. Correspondents are particularly cautioned to take careful note of the statements and injunctions contained in the paragraphs below.

(1.) Specimens must be small and bear a tag giving name and address of sender, and the general—but exact—locality from whence the specimen was taken, also the name of it as nearly as the sender knows. Send, also, with the specimen a clearly-written letter briefly describing the find and what the finder wishes done with it. The letter must be properly dated and plainly signed.

Letter and specimen must be in one package, not in separate enclosures.

(2.) No attention will be paid to anonymous letters or to letters signed merely with initials.

(3.) No examination of samples or specimens will be made in cases where The Times may decide that the specimen and inquiry are not of public interest. This office does not undertake to perform the work of an assay office.

(4.) Inquiries relative to matters of purely personal interests will not be answered.

(5.) When no response to an inquiry made or specimens sent appears in these columns, the inquirer will understand that his inquiry does not come within the purview of this department.

(6.) It is impossible to return specimens, as they must necessarily be destroyed or impaired in the process of analysis.

Rocks and Zeolite.

JOHANNESBURG, Feb. 22.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Have today forwarded by mail some rock samples, which you will favor us greatly by testing, and giving the values, if any. Nos. 1 and 2 we believe to be very volatile, and unless extreme care is exercised no values, we think, could be obtained through the ordinary process of crucible assay. No. 4 may contain values.

Yours truly, G. M.

ANSWER. Have no fears that any of the precious metal values—in any of the rocks submitted—will be volatilized. No. 1 is zeolitic (goes to jelly in acid;) No. 2 is an aluminum silicate. No. 3 ordinary low-grade copper ore (chrysocolla and chalcopyrite.) No. 4 garnetiferous impure trachyte, with traces of zinc. Outside of No. 3, samples are but rocks, of little value, unless assays prove precious metal present.

Phosphate Rock.

OSCEOLA (Nev.) Feb. 20.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I send you in this package a sample of lime rock from the Shell Mountain district. Its peculiar colors puzzle me. If it contains other values, please let me know of them in your "In the Earth." I will thank you for some information on phosphorus and phosphates. I suspect that the sample might carry phosphate. Please give me a test for phosphates such as can be used in prospecting.

Yours truly, B. A. M.

ANSWER. The samples are a massive variety of apatite (phosphate of lime.) In testing for phosphates, the so-called "green color of flame" cannot be relied upon unless the flame is viewed with a background of black cloth, and even then, unless in the hands of a skilled operator the test is a doubtful one; especially so, if the sample is moistened with sulphuric acid as by some authorities advised. The color test is never relied upon by the editor of this department of The Times.

Before starting on a prospecting trip for phosphates, provide yourself with a two-ounce vial of ammonium molybdate solution, and an eight-ounce vial of chemically pure nitric acid. Powder a little of the suspected mineral and place the powder on a porcelain saucer. Pour over the powdered mineral a little nitric acid (enough to handsomely cover it;) when effervescence ceases—which is very likely to occur—and the solution is at rest (say in half an hour,) pour a few drops of the molybdate solution into the mixture. If phosphoric acid is present, a dirty, pulverulent yellow precipitate will soon appear around the edges of the saucer. In view of the fact of the known phosphate rocks of California (amblygonite of Pala, for instance) and of the New Mexico and Nevada Wavellite, it is well to note some very interesting points stated by George W. Stone in "Mineral Resources of the United States, 1906."

"The production of phosphorus has not been heretofore reported as a mineral industry because it was formerly an organic industry—that is, phosphorus was produced from bones and other organic substances. It is only recently that it has been extracted from mineral deposits. The mineral from which phosphorous was first obtained was phosphorite or rock phosphate, an impure fluophosphate of calcium."

Apatite occurs as fluophosphate or chlorophosphate of calcium. Wavellite (aluminum phosphate) is now being utilized in the manufacture of phosphorus near Port Royal, Pa., and the general average of phosphoric acid obtained from the ores—as mined—is not 8 per cent.

Much of the Southern California amblygonite yields over 40 per cent. phosphoric acid.

It is well to repeat that the old method of obtaining phosphorus was from bones. For further reference, consult most any work on chemistry.

Processes for phosphorus from phosphate rock are set forth in quite a number of patents, and nearly all of them are in a prospective stage, so to speak, with the exception of the Readman patent. Harding's patent is coming to the front, however; by this process "pulverized rock phosphate is boiled with sulphuric acid, and the phosphoric acid, free from lime, is filtered out and boiled down to a syrup. This is mixed with granulated carbon, heated in a reverberatory furnace, and then smelted in an electric furnace by electric arcs between the electrodes and the mass. A hydrogen atmosphere is obtained by spraying gasoline into the furnace."

For further information on the subject consult "Mineral Resources, 1906."

Black Sands and Platinum.

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 21.—[To the Editor of The Times:] With this letter I am sending you some black sand, with biotite and magnetic iron ore—this much I know.

It is from near the Pacific Ocean, and about seventeen miles from Los Angeles. Is platinum present in the sand?

I would be glad to know the easiest way of determining the fact as to the quantity of platinum in black sand other than by fire assay? What is the best solvent for it? and what the reagent to precipitate platinum from the solution, and will the precipitating chemicals also send down other metals at the same time?

In other words, I want to find out if the reports are true that there is platinum enough to pay for working in the black sand concentrates from gravel in Southern California and parts of Nevada.

What is your blow-pipe method?

Yours truly, D. F. H.

ANSWER. Much has been written and published of late in monthly magazines and the daily press regarding platinum. It shall be our endeavor to lating to the metal, processes, localities where found, etc.

Dr. David T. Day of the United States Geological Survey has, for some years past, been endeavoring to get at the truth of the so-called black sands of the Pacific Coast and elsewhere, and so far as platinum contents are concerned, he has done a great deal of good and has been successful.

Probably the world's greatest field for platinum will, in the near future, be the Republic of Colombia.

"The platinum deposits of Colombia are comparatively easily accessible for international exportation. Most of the platinum extracted is exported from the Pacific port of Buenaventura, on the Bay of Choco, which is conveniently reached in a few days by steamers sailing southward from Panama City. . . . The value of Colombian platinum was recognized at the beginning of the nineteenth century, by the great German explorer and scientist, Baron von Humboldt, who wrote: 'Platina in grains is only found in two places in the known world, viz., in the Choco and Barbacoas. It is peculiar to certain sedimentary lands that cover surfaces of 600 square leagues.'"

In Northern California and in Southern Oregon platinum is occasionally found in flakes and grains; but the greater per cent. of the platinum—as washed from the black sands—is made up of approximately 80 per cent. platinum with varying percentages of palladium, rhodium, iridium, osmium, iron (chromiferous) and manganese.

It would appear from the experiments of Dr. Day, and other high and truthful authority, that the rock serpentine with chromite grains (chrome iron ore) are good indications for platinum on and near the Pacific Coast. On this theory, San Luis Obispo county should be a good field for the locating of platinum; as, also, the serpentine measures of Plumas county, Cal.

It has been suggested that by drying the black sands, crumbling the balled portions (when dry) in the hands, and with a piece of smooth oilcloth dry concentrating the the sands and then assaying the concentrates would show the value of platinum per 100 pounds or more.

Even by very careful panning with water the black sands of Northern California and Southern Oregon, platinum (by analysis or fire assay) will be obtained from the tailings.

Analysis bears out the fact that in separating the magnetite, with a magnet, from the black sands, some platinum values (in combination with the magnetite, and, likewise, in combination with some of the chromite and titaniferous iron) is taken up by the magnet.

When miners and prospectors obtain concentrates of black sand, platinum minerals and gold, the best method of obtaining money results for metal is to assay (smelt) the concentrates in a furnace, or sell direct to the smelters, even in few pounds lots.

There is no platinum value in your sample of black sand.

Platinum is soluble in no single acid, but it is soluble in aqua regia (one volume of strong nitric acid to three volumes of strong hydrochloric acid—both acids c. p., and not diluted with water.) This solvent, however, would be a costly process, if worked on crude black sands.

There is probably no process to work the black sands direct at a profit.

Notwithstanding the loss of a certain percentage of platinum and gold by concentrating with the magnet or water; the concentrates could be treated with sulphuric acid, sulphate of iron (copperas) obtained as a by-product and sell or smelt the tailings.

The black sands of Northern California and of Southern Oregon could be chlorinated. After chlorination and lixiviation with water, acidulating with hydrochloric acid to hold the base metal chlorides in solution, all of the gold would be precipitated with some platinum values, but coarse gold and platinum would still be in the tailings.

There is really no blow-pipe method for platinum, the oxy-hydrogen blowpipe, of course, excepted.

Native platinum is, somewhat, magnetic. If combined with one-fifth iron content the magnet lifts it; under 4 per cent. it is but slightly magnetic. "It does not amalgamate with quicksilver, and when cold it is not affected by cyanide of potassium."

Space will not permit a reference to the published chemistry of platinum. (Consult works on chemistry and metallurgy.)

"The U. S. Metal Reduction Company" of Seattle, Wash., is now working the black sands of Northern California, near the Klamath reservation, with magnetic machinery.

It would therefore appear that methods of concentration for black sands, by Wilfley and Pinder tables, or the Wetherall Magnetic Separator would be the best way to get at the bigger per cent. of the gold and platinum values in black sands, and smelt the concentrates.

In conclusion, it is well to refer to the occurrence of platinum in the copper-nickel ores in Southwestern Utah and in Eastern Nevada. "Within the last two years two companies have developed in the Bunkerville district, in the northeastern part of Lincoln county, Nevada; considerable supplies of low-grade copper nickel ores somewhat similar to the Sudbury ores and in what is claimed to be a similar geologic condition. Development work to the extent of several thousand feet of drifts and crosscuts have been made in the claims of the two companies, where it is said that the average grade of the ore is 4 per cent. copper, 2.50 per cent. nickel, and one-third of an ounce platinum. This locality is reached by a good wagon road, forty-five miles from Moapa station, on the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad." (Mineral Resources of the United States.)

A Hen's Peculiar Freak.

Tacoma has a freak hen. She is a non-union bird, according to other hens, for she works overtime. Her peculiarity is laying eggs at night.

The hen is owned by M. J. La Vergne, of East Thirty-fifth street. He bought her several weeks ago. At first she absolutely refused to lay eggs, but, as her shyness in her new surroundings wore off, she became good and worked like the others.

La Vergne thought she was going to prove one of the best layers in his flock, but several nights later the family was awakened by an unusual cackling. Thinking a thief was at work, La Vergne rushed to the chicken-house, but found no one, though the hens were making a big noise.

The next morning an egg was found in the new hen's nest. The next night the same performance was repeated. This kept up a week, and always there was a new egg in the hen's nest.

She still is at it, and is proving a valuable layer. But all this is playing havoc with the other hens. Loss of sleep has made them cranky and they have gone on a strike. Eggs are getting fewer in the La Vergne chicken-house every day.

GOLD STAMPEDE IN HACHITA.

MINERS ARE FLOCKING TO LATEST EXCITEMENT.

Comanche's Receiver Will Reorganize Company — Greene-Cananea Works Thousand Men—Tombstone Installing New Pumps—Octave's Annual Meeting.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

PHOENIX (Ariz.) March 12.—The latest mining excitement in the Southwest has its center eighteen miles southeast of Hachita station on the El Paso and Southwestern Railroad, the new district being in the extreme southwestern part of New Mexico, only a few miles from the Arizona line. Hundreds of prospectors and business men have swarmed into the district already, mainly from Douglas and the country between Douglas and El Paso. Two brothers named Clark, lately from Colorado, have been making about $20 a day for some time, panning a curious volcanic formation in which are found flake gold and small nuggets. Their total income is understood to have been only about $500, yet there seems to be an impression that the district is one of great value. The ground around the original find has been staked out for miles, and prospectors are swarming over the nearby hills looking for the mother ledge from which the gold came. Water is extremely scarce, a small supply being available from springs, which have been located by the Clarks, and wells are to be sunk at a couple of points. F. C. Hill of Hachita has staked out ten claims, in which he has found considerable gold, but there seems few signs that the camp will be a permanent one. Not far away is the old Hachita camp, abandoned many years ago.

ANDERSON-APACHE.

Six miles from the new discovery, the Anderson-Apache Copper Company is working twenty men, taking out copper ore for shipment to the Douglas and El Paso smelters. A shaft has been sunk on the property to a depth of 300 feet, and the ore is coming mainly from a drift which has been run under old workings. Manager of the property is Harry Duey, formerly of the Duey & Overlock Company of Bisbee.

COMANCHE'S RECEIVER.

At Silver City last Monday, E. A. Ingram was appointed trustee of the Comanche Mining and Smelting Company. The new receiver expressed no intention of selling the smelter, but proposes, if possible, to reorganize the company, in order that sufficient funds may be secured to pay all indebtedness, thereafter operating the works on an economical basis, for profit which is believed assured.

THOUSAND MEN WORKING.

Dr. L. D. Ricketts, manager of the Greene-Cananea Copper Company, says that he has thoroughly renovated and worked over the company's smelting plant and equipment, nearly 1000 men now being employed at the works and in the mines. He refuses to state a date for a possible reopening of the property. There will be little trouble in starting operations. Though the old hands have scattered, their locations are known, and hundreds of skilled operatives can be secured at a few days' notice. There is a general impression that the camp, when it starts up again, will have very few Americans on the pay roll.

It was reported that the Ronquillo Copper Company has sold the Swansea mine in Cananea district to the Greene-Cananea Company. The Swansea is considered one of the most valuable properties of the district.

EL TIGRE BUSY.

Since the courts have absolutely sustained the Kansas City stockholders in possession of the property of the El Tigre Mining Company, south of Douglas, the utmost activity has prevailed at Tigre camp, where 300 men now are employed. The capacity of the mill has been more than doubled, and the property is said to be a money maker, rapidly repaying its owners the hundreds of thousands of dollars they have spent in the purchase of the mines and in extensive litigation with the Graham faction.

One section of the new concentrating mill of the Moctezuma Mining Company at Nacozari will be ready to start late this month. Reductions lately made in wages have caused the resignations of a large number of American workmen, who are coming across the border, seeking employment.

TOMBSTONE'S NEW PLANT.

Two new pumps, each with a capacity for 1200 gallons per minute, are being placed on the 1000-foot level of the main shaft of the Tombstone Consolidated Company at Tombstone. When the new pumps are placed, the company will be prepared to handle 10,000,000 gallons of water a day. At present, 4,500,000 gallons are being pumped daily. The mill is running steadily, reducing 200 tons of ore a day. At the Emerald shaft, development is in progress on the copper body discovered a few months ago. The winze which has been sunk upon it from the 800-foot level is still in ore.

The product of the Shannon smelter for February was 750 tons of converted copper.

For a while last week, only two furnaces were run at the Old Dominion works at Globe. Despite this, there is a feeling of the utmost hopefulness in the district, and much new development work is being done on the smaller properties near the camp.

OCTAVE MEETING.

In Phoenix last Monday, was held the annual meeting of the stockholders of the Octave Mining Company, representatives being present of nearly all the 1,750,000 shares outstanding. The meeting was a sort of a love feast, the stockholders being very well satisfied with the management of affairs. Invoices submitted show property valued at $4,213,000, within this being included ore blocked out in the mine of estimated value of $2,144,000. The underground improvements at the mine are valued at $800,000, and the plant at about $500,000. The mill is running steadily at a profit and the debts of the corporation are being paid off more rapidly than had been hoped for. The directors were sustained in their intention to erect a large electric power plant at the railroad and it was determined to double the capacity of the mill. At a meeting of the directors, C. E. Miesse of Chicago was reëlected president, and Frank Little of Chicago, secretary and treasurer. The stockholders present banqueted during their stay in the city and later visited the mine.

SUSPECTS SUPERSTITION.

George R. Gwynne has charged Mrs. Abbie Hatch and her sons, George R. and Eugene M. Woodbury, with having looted the treasury of the Superstition Mountain Mining Company and asks that a receiver be appointed for the corporation. In February, 1906, claims in Pinal county, he to receive a cash consideration and 166,666 shares of the capital stock. He says he has received only $200 and asks judgment for $7704, together with restitution of the claims.

A contract has been let for the sinking of a 500-foot shaft on the property of the Copper Queen Company in Agua Fria district near Mayer, Yuma county. The property has 1700 feet of underground horizontal workings. The company is mainly capitalized in Texas and has no connection whatever with the Copper Queen Consolidated Company of Bisbee.

BIG STICK MILL.

E. A. Haggott, representing the Big Stick Gold Mining Company in Santa Maria district, has just purchased for his company the twenty-stamp mill and seventy-five-ton cyanide plant of the Sultan mines and will move them to his company's ground. The Big Stick property is twenty miles from Date Creek station on the Santa Fé, Prescott and Phoenix Railroad.

Near Jerome the property of the North Verde Copper Company was jumped last week by Sullivan, Wellington and Browser, on the ground that the assessment work for 1907 had not been done as required by law, though affidavits have been filed in the County Recorder's office certifying that this work had been completed.

Ten days' operation of a precipitating plant at Goldfield, Mohave county, gave returns of $9000 from seepage water from the tailings pits of the mill. The waste water in the mill carries in solution a considerable percentage of gold. This was discovered by Henry Lovin, who secured a lease of the water and made about $30,000. The company has resumed control of the water and now is said to be making about $10,000 a month from this one source of income.

SIERRA DE COBRE QUITS.

Work has been totally suspended on the Phelps-Dodge Sierra de Cobre mines in Cananea district. For several months, only about eighty men have been employed upon the property. This force has blocked out an immense amount of ore, and has filled the ore bins to the top. The present price of copper does not incline the company toward shipment of ore, so the men have been discharged and the mine closed down.

SMELTER FOR MAZATLAN.

Col. Epes Randolph has lately returned from a trip along the Harriman lines in Northwestern Mexico. He states that a custom smelter will be built at Mazatlan, soon after the arrival of the west-coast railroad at that point. The Southern Pacific is contemplating the construction of a number of branch railroads, penetrating the rich mining districts of the Mexican coast States, where immense ore deposits have been worked since the time of the coming of the Spaniards. Many of these old mines have been robbed of their richer ores and have been worked in the most haphazard fashion, but it is believed that American industry and skill will rehabilitate most of the old property and will work low-grade ores with a large degree of profit.

COWBOY LUCK.

In the vicinity of Railroad Pass, in Northeastern Cochise county, a four-foot ledge, to be traced for several hundred yards, has been located by cowboys, who have brought to Tombstone samples that carry as high as $500 to the ton in gold. Scores of claims have been located in the vicinity of the first strike, and development work is being done. The locality has produced a large amount of gold in pioneer times, mainly by the dry washing of placer ground in the cañons.

Preparations are complete for beginning work on the construction of a 100-ton concentrator, to be placed on the Old Pueblo mine, near Tucson, by the Tucson Consolidated Mining Company. The company is working twenty-six men, and has its main shaft down to a depth of 215 feet.

FIVE HUNDRED MEN.

Five hundred men are being worked on the Shannon mines, near Clifton. The mines and smelter have been put in fine condition, and a 700-ton furnace is available for the increase of a bullion production whenever copper goes up to 15 or 16 cents.

Lack of hoisting capacity is given as the reason for the continued nonuse of the two of the five furnaces of the Old Dominion smelter at Globe. The February output of copper was only 2,225,000 pounds, and the March production is expected to be even less. A sixth furnace is now being put in at the works, and will be ready for operation in about six weeks.

IRON CAP'S FIND.

A late discovery of ore in the Iron Cap mine of the National Exploration Company of Globe is believed to be entirely independent of the surface ledges that have been depended upon, and to be an extension of the Black Hawk ledge. If this be true, it will mean the addition of a long stretch of valuable mineral-bearing ground to the known resources of the district. The new vein will average about 12 per cent. copper across eight feet of ore. If this continues through to the Old Dominion ground, it will mean that the Black Hawk vein is in existence as a blind lead for the distance of over a mile.

LANE'S LUCK.

C. D. Lane, a capitalist whose money was made in the Nome district of Alaska, has purchased a gold mine in Lost Gulch near Globe, for $450,000, and has put eighty men upon the work for development. He states that he will put up a forty-stamp mill as soon as possible.

At a depth of 1600 feet, a vein, hitherto unknown, has been struck in the Octave mine in Weaver district. The ledge averages four feet in thickness and has been developed to the length of 300 feet, the output of ore being run through the mill. The strike is said to be richer than any other ore found in the mine and to assure the success of the extensive workings lately inaugurated on borrowed money.

BULLWACKER'S STRIKE.

Fifty-three tons of gold ore which samples $250 to the ton has been extracted from a sixty-foot drift of the Bullwhacker mine, three miles from Prescott, by Henry Smith and P. B. Werdon, who have a bond on the property from R. H. Burmister. The Bullwhacker is one of the oldest mines around Prescott, but has been almost abandoned for many years.

SNOOZER AWAKE.

Ten feet of ore, carrying about $10 to the ton in gold, has been found in the Snoozer Extension claims, in Hassayampa district, owned by Frank Voucher and W. J. Carney. The claims have three ledges, only the first having been cut thus far in a tunnel, which is being driven to develop all three.

Burnett Goodwin, connected with the Saddle Mountain Mining Company, has stated that work will be resumed at Christmas within sixty days, with a force of 200 men. The company will build six miles of narrow-gauge track from Winkleman to the base of the hillside on which the mine and smelter are located. It is expected that a new smelter will be erected not far from the track and that ore will be brought down to it by way of an endless cable tramway.

Life in Goldfield.

THE SALOON IN THE CAMP.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

In most communities the saloon is merely incidental, accepting thankfully such crumbs as fall from the commercial table. In a mining camp the saloon is the aggressive and controlling factor. Do they aspire to secure a prize fight with the largest purse on record, the saloon-keeper raises a thirty-thousand-dollar purse and realizes the full returns on his investment in the increase in bar receipts during the forty-eight hours preceding and following the event. Two-thirds of the street frontage in the main business block of one of our largest mining camps is occupied by eight saloons. More business transactions are discussed and closed in the saloon than in the stores and offices. The front door key is thrown away when the house starts business and the comfortable, well-lighted interiors offer a standing invitation which meets with a ready and frequent response. During the severe weather of last winter the saloons furnished warmth and shelter to hundreds of men who could not find adequate accommodations elsewhere.

The total capital invested here in saloons, gambling games and the business locations occupied, will not fall short of one million dollars. These houses carry on their payrolls one-fourth as many men as are employed in the mines. This army of employés includes floor walkers, bartenders, porters, dealers, piano players, singers and entertainers of either sex, whose duty it is to see that no "live one" gets away, together with a goodly array of "boosters," who sit into the games at dull moments, betting money furnished by the house, and by a system of play, carefully prearranged, relieving the novice of such money as he cares to risk. The leading saloon is incorporated, and has paid as high as 40 per cent. as a monthly dividend. The stockholders feel that they have a grievance when their monthly remittances drop to 20 per cent. This place operates eighteen games, employing one hundred men, and the big safe contains a "roll" of fifty thousand dollars for the purpose of cashing checks after banking hours.

In considering the abnormal predominance of the saloon in a town whose only resource is mining, it should be borne in mind that the sale of liquor and the business of gambling are closely allied, and that the State of Nevada is the only American community in which unrestricted gambling is legally licensed and openly permitted.

Many of the local gamblers have operated in nearly every State in the Union, and in every mining camp in Alaska, and have come here to make their last stand, philosophically awaiting the first surge of the sea of oblivion, which will soon engulf them and transform their lucrative, romantic and nefarious calling into a tradition of the decadent past.

A well-known mining operator recently lost a few hundred dollars at one of the roulette games. He was refused credit or the privilege of betting on "jaw bone," and soon returned with a bunch of stocks and securities which were placed in the safe as collateral for such losses as he might incur. After five hours' play the house took a transfer of the securities to cover his loss of sixty thousand dollars. The proprietor caught the early morning train for San Francisco, sold the collateral, and was back at the old stand ready for new "customers" the third day following. A saloon, which was offered for sale at fourteen thousand dollars, won exactly that sum the night preceding the day on which the deal was to have been closed.

The floor-walker is an important factor. It is "up to" him to jolly the crowd along, to head off any impending trouble, and to repress with a swift and heavy hand any incipient "rough house" which gets beyond the preliminary stage. He is as much the autocrat as the captain of an ocean liner, and to his tact and diplomacy, backed by his prowess as an all-round scrapper, is due the absence of fatal affrays so common to the old-time camps.

The saloon man realizes the necessity and value of being a "good fellow." In some of the larger houses chairs are provided in which the poor devils whose last dollar has gone the whisky route are graciously permited to sleep away the early morning hours. One of the larger houses furnished a free Christmas dinner to all applicants, feeding fifteen thousand people, at a cost of eight hundred dollars. This expense was fully repaid in increased bar receipts during the following week, and the proprietor of this establishment has been enabled to invest fifty thousand dollars in a new business block, representing a portion of his profits during the past year.

The restriction and regulation of saloons and gambling is an issue which has not yet seriously entered into State or municipal politics. The saloon-keeper and gambler are first to arrive at the scene of any new mining camp or strike. The first building to be erected is invariably a saloon, and the miners and prospectors who stampede to the new district are largely "grubstaked" by the saloon men, who thus acquire substantial mining interests.

A director and heavy stockholder in one of our leading banks was working for wages in a Tonopah gambling-house up to four years ago. His transition from faro bank to national bank was regarded as a matter of course, and as an instance of energy and good luck successfully applied. In a community where bartenders receive eight dollars and gamblers ten dollars for eight hours' work, it is not hard to realize that the merchant, the restaurant-keeper, the laundryman and all other recipients of patronage would strongly oppose any suggestion of change from existing conditions. The correcting influence of the family and of home life is largely lacking, and the regulation and restriction of the liquor business is still far in the future.

The largest saloon in the camp was owned until recently by the Sheriff. Public sentiment and the newspapers were so strong against him that he was compelled to close up the saloon on the main street and to sell out another in the red-light district. This same Sheriff is owner of a block of houses in the red-light district, where graft is also charged against him. One of the many absurd laws of the State of Nevada—and it certainly has more freak laws than all the other States in the Union—is to the effect that any one gambling on Sunday can be fined if he makes a complaint that he has been "buncoed," but the saloon-keeper cannot be prosecuted at all.

The taxes from the saloons and dance halls, including the red-light district, were the means of building one of the finest public school buildings and also making the roads and sidewalks of the camp.

Many "promoters" have invested their clients' checks at the gambling table. This and high-grading at the mines has helped to make one of the liveliest camps ever known, but such nefarious dealings also helped to kill it, especially with eastern people, whose money went for faro instead of stocks or leases.

Monte Carlo has never rivaled this camp, as it was a year ago, in the enormous sums spent in gambling.

Women at the roulette wheel do not escape its influence. Gambling is a contagion. Even the children on their burros, their little fat legs sticking out over the side of the equally fat animal, will talk about "swapping."

WHAT'S SAID IN SAN FRANCISCO.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, March 6.—Our "Reds" are on the run, and all gesticulating jawsmiths caught denouncing the constituted authorities will be "bitten" by plague-infected fleas and banished to Oakland to die. The present good-government officials can arrest the Ruef ringsters for cursing the administration, and the militant unemployed would better be civil, or else pay the popular price for rank heresy. The park commissioners are gayly enforcing an obsolete law prohibiting all gatherings in the public squares, and badgered anarchists know not whither to turn when forbidden to keep off the grass.

There is not a single one wearing the purple we would care to see immolated on the altar of free speech or punished by advocates of the rights of man because vicarious popularity has made him a taxeater. In this city of oppressors and oppressed, officials are now nervous wrecks from fighting plague and getting ready to glad-hand "Bob" Evans. We humbly ask the "Reds" to tackle the Orient, and when a "Baby John" dynamite dose is given Persia's potentate, we petulantly exclaim, "Oh, Shah."

An urgent unemployed problem has shattered the idol of a municipal railway from bay to ocean. Geary street still runs from Lotta's Fountain to the Seal Rocks, and the city still owns it, but for this year at least it will be virgin soil for a people's railway. In the speechmaking of three campaigns, Mayor Schmitz made the municipal dirt fly which was to rid us from the tyranny of the United Railways, but pay dirt was the only kind that ever flew, and now no voice protests the using for the unemployed $400,000 appropriated by Patriot "Jim" Gallagher to build the Geary-street railway.

Iron has entered the soul of Supervisor Allan Pollok, and in his breast where once the milk of human kindness flowed is now a liquid cynicism. Pollok as a new official is eager to help his fellow man, and when the city physician told him the County Jail inmates needed exercise, he promptly authorized their working on the roads. Now he is sorry that he spoke, as the prisoners call him a slave driver and the unemployed say that he is a scab.

Preparations for the reception of the fleet are going along apace, and after Los Angeles has hospitably welcomed it, a second glad hand awaits it here. Many idiotic suggestions as to impossible functions have been squelched, and our greeting bids fair to be simply grand. Market street, in a blaze of illumination and smooth as a dancing floor from East street to Van Ness avenue, will be at its best, and the police will prevent straggling visitors from getting swamped in side-street sloughs.

Rising to the occasion like a trout to the fly, the police commissioners are asking the Supervisors for 100 extra policemen. They say they will need them when the fleet arrives, but they do not state whether the new cops are to protect the sailors from the citizens or vice-versa or both. It may be that they are needed to protect us all from visiting land-sharks.

Daniel O'Connell, a patriot from Massachusetts, who has been with us a breathing time, is hot foot after the public-service corporations. In submitting to the Supervisors a numerously-signed petition for a special election kind of stuff do you think they would turn out?"

"Have the big distillers commenced yet to make denatured alcohol?"

"A great deal of it is now being distilled at Peoria and Terra Haute. It sells for 40 cents a gallon. The farmer with his small still cannot manufacture it to sell cheaper than this if he uses marketable corn, potatoes or beets. But to him the products of his little distillery will be a pure gain if he can learn to use materials that would otherwise go to waste, and if he utilizes the farm labor which he would have to pay anyhow for other purposes.

CAN USE CORNSTALKS.

"Grain freezes by the hundreds of thousands of bushels each year in Montana and North Dakota alone. It doesn't pay to transport it to the big distilleries. All of this spoiled grain can be converted into commercial alcohol on the spot and the waste, or what the distillers sell as brewers' grains, will still be left as a cattle food as good as a muscle and bone builder as the whole grain was itself, although not so efficient as a fattener."

That cornstalks as a source of alcohol supply should be started by our agricultural experiment stations was pointed out by Dr. Wiley. Untold tons of sugar annually go to waste on the cornstalks of our farms—the stalks of sweet corn, field corn and sorghum. Everywhere cornstalks are cured for fodder the sugars ferment and are lost before the cattle are fed with this waste material of the fields.

Inventors who can overcome the technical difficulties of cheaply extracting this sugar from the stalk will, Dr. Wiley said, give the country's future commercial alcohol stills an almost inexhaustible source of raw material. Stalks of sweet corn, field corn and sorghum contain in addition to sugar notable quantities of starch and gum which would be converted into sugar at the distilleries. No other source of raw materials for free alcohol is so abundant as these stalks, the doctor estimated. The only question is how can this material be cheaply extracted.

LESS REVENUE RESTRICTION

Our farmers' small stills, built after Dr. Wiley's model plant, will come under a new class of industrial distilleries provided for in an amendment which Congress last year made to the original "free alcohol law." In these stills only industrial alcohol may be produced, and the daily output must not be over 100 proof gallons—the capacity of Dr. Wiley's projected plant. The Bureau of Internal Revenue has made regulations which will relieve this class of small industrial stills of the many restrictions placed on the large distilleries. Any material may be used, and the still may be of any size, provided not over 100 "proof gallons" are produced per day. But, of course, the smallest still that can manufacture this maximum output will be the cheapest for the farmer. Each such still must be registered, plans of the premises must be filed with the revenue bureau, a bond must be given and the distillery must then be "surveyed" by a government official. After this is done the farmer-distiller may control his own operations almost entirely, merely notifying the revenue collector of his district as to when work is to begin.

DENATURING BY FARMERS.

The farmer can have the "denaturing" of his alcohol done, in any quantity, on his own premises, or it can be sent to a central denaturing bonded warehouse, and there sold for denaturing purposes. If denatured on the farmer's premises it must be so treated under the supervision of the district storekeeper gauger. If shipped to the central warehouse that official must draw it into the barrels in which it is to be shipped, and these must be stamped by him.

The chief difficulty to the farmer who wishes to establish such a still will be the restriction that his alcohol must be distilled "180 proof." This will require a certain kind of still and some special knowledge of its operation. Were there not such restrictions the process would be as easy as moonshining, in which the most ignorant mountaineer easily becomes proficient. A wooden or "pot" still will not answer the purpose, but a "column still," preferably of the "continuous type," will be necessary. It is this latter class of still—whose description is too technical for this article—that Dr. Wiley will erect for his demonstrations.

ALCOHOL LAMPS AND STOVES.

The bureau of chemistry has one of the new alcohol lamps which will be seen in many an American home in the not very distant future. It looks like an ordinary kerosene lamp with a Welsbach gas mantel over the wick. What appears to be the knob for turning the wick up and down is the handle of a little pump which is pressed down two or three times with the thumb just before the lamp is lighted. This action brings a little of the alcohol around the wick holder where it is ignited by holding a match through an opening at the side. The lamp burns with a colorless flame for the first minute or half minute. Another match is then applied to the top of the chimney, just as when a gas mantel is lighted. The alcohol vapor ignites in the same manner as does the gas in the latter and soon heats the mantel to a white heat. The lamp then burns regularly, and with all of the brilliance of a gas mantel, without any further attention as long as any alcohol remains in the bowl.

Alcohol stoves, such as are in general use in Germany, convert the alcohol into a gas which is ignited in burners. They burn with a pale blue flame which is intensely hot and without smoke. If there is any odor about them at all, Dr. Wiley says, it is an agreeable one. Alcohol stoves have been invented also for heating flatirons, soldering irons, crimping irons and for roasting coffee.

ALCOHOL MOTORS.

"It is quite certain that the use of alcohol motors on the farm will become quite common as soon as the technique of construction is practically complete and the price of alcohol is sufficiently low," said Dr. Wiley. "Alcohol can be used for all purposes for which gasoline is employed—the driving of wagons, carriages, stationary motors, water pumps, mowing machines, plows, etc. Very little change need be made in the engine of a motor car, designed to use gasoline, to fit it for the use of alcohol. Gasoline becomes volatile (evaporates rapidly) at a temperature of blood heat 98½ deg. F.) while a much greater degree of heat (158 to 176 deg. F.) is necessary to volatize alcohol rapidly enough for motor purposes. This fact makes necessary a change in the explosion chamber of the engine when alcohol is to be used. This adjustment is especially important in the starting of the machine, as after it is in action the temperature of combustion is quite sufficient to easily produce the necessary gasification. The vapor of alcohol can be more highly compressed at any given temperature without exploding than can the vapor of gasoline."

ALCOHOL WAGON TRAINS.

The Germans use small alcohol motors for driving plows, mowing, reaping and binding machines; also for chopping and grinding cattle food and pumping water. They have developed also many kinds of alcohol automobiles, motor boats and traction engines.

The German army uses alcohol traction engines to draw artillery and trains of heavy military wagons for transporting all sorts of supplies. These alcohol wagon trains pull over the mountain roads and even ford streams. Some of them are drawn by detached traction engines, such as those run by steam on the farms of this country. Others are heavy automobiles with truck bodies on their own frames, and yet with trains of transport wagons hitched on the rear.

Your First Position.

The young man accepting the first position finds that results are what count the most in the world of wage-earners, and that the young man who makes ready promises and does not keep them will not be apt to be favored with an increase of salary when the personnel of the working force is gone over to see which of the men in the employ of the firm are giving efficient service and deserving of recognition.

The young man must make up his mind to accept his first position with one point in view—that he will work all the time he is on duty during business hours, and that he will not allow any portion of the work to lie neglected. The small tasks, he will find, accumulate rapidly, which will make work outside of his regular hours a necessity.

A bad habit to fall into is to grumble all of the time that you are doing too much work for the salary paid. When a young man is hired by a business house it is a plain business proposition—the duties of the position are fully explained, and the employé agrees to do so much work each day for so much pay. If the young man agrees to accept the situation, he also agrees to do the amount of work that belongs to the position, and if he finds there is too much work for the pay, he has the privilege of seeking another situation, the same as the employer has to get another man to do the work if he learns that the young man cannot fill the position.—[Spare Moments.

The President's Talk to the Middies.

Here is a part of one of President Roosevelt's characteristic talks given to some middies at target practice, and told by the Richmond Times-Dispatch. He says:

"Boys, it's the hit that counts everywhere. There is such a thing as honorable failure, but honorable success is better. And do you know, my lads, that success is very much a matter of habit? The habit is usually formed at school, and when once formed it abides. It is true that some boys who were failures at school have succeeded fairly well in after life, but they succeed not because of the failure, but in spite of it, and failure is always hard to overcome.

"On the contrary, you watch the lad who succeeds in all his undertakings at school, in classroom contests, and in field contests, and if you will follow that lad in his after career, you will be apt to find a successful man. It's the habit he has formed of hitting, not missing."

Industrial Independence.

UNFOUNDED CRITICISMS OF THE COURTS MADE BY LAWLESS UNIONITES HELD UP BY INJUNCTIONS.

SOME of the specious claims made by union labor in asserting its understanding of rights and privileges rest on honest differences of opinion, says the San Francisco Argonaut. There is room for argument concerning their justice or their expediency. It is hard to judge the value of methods not fully tested or completely understood. The final effect of compulsory arbitration, the strength or weakness of legal incorporation and responsibility, are still open questions. But there is one assertion made by union-labor leaders in and out of season, with growing frequency and accumulating emphasis, that does not belong in the class of disputed views. It is unfounded in fact, corrupting in influence and criminal in source. Yet it is an assertion that will be reiterated unceasingly through the coming campaign, and indorsed over and over again by union-labor speakers and writers, from Samuel Gompers down to the least in the ranks. Worse than this, for it will prejudice many outside of union-labor affiliations, the assertion will be used by demagogues of every stripe who hope to profit by any stirring of factional impulses.

This unfounded and destructive assertion is the charge that the Federal courts have misused the writ of injunction in labor cases. That the charge is untrue may be shown by the records. The decisions of the courts are reported and published in full. They are open to examination by any one interested. Even the most determined and logical of the union-labor leaders who make the charge, those who write and speak most often and at greatest length, avoid the record in these cases. They do not cite instances, for they can find none to uphold them.

To publish the facts and figures of the record is to put the brand of falsehood on this charge. Going farther back, it is easy to show that the abuse of the writ of injunction in cases affecting union labor is practically an impossibility. An injunction does not deprive labor-union defendants of property. It attempts to restrain and prevent interference with the property of employers, or with workmen employed upon or about the property. The acts against which the restraining order is issued are in themselves unlawful in all countries. When committed they are punishable, but at the expense of time, which is often of greater value than any amount of damages to be recovered. Writs of injunction do not compel defendants to do anything; they command inaction, not action; they aim to prevent the defendants from inflicting injury by interference.

A year ago, when an effort was made to restrict the power of the Federal courts in injunction cases, the Judiciary Committee of the United States Senate considered carefully the bill brought before it for this purpose. At one of the meetings James M. Beck of New York, a lawyer of ability and standing, read from the record of the courts in every reported injunction case and a summary of this statement shows:

That in seven cases the court had refused to issue restraining orders without a preliminary hearing, not deeming the exigency sufficiently great.

That in every case but one where an injunction was issued without a preliminary hearing the court upon a full hearing sustained the order made.

That in every case but one where the issuance of an injunction was reviewed by an appellate court the injunctional decree was sustained, and even in the one exception the injunction was merely modified.

This, in brief, is the record. It shows the utter lack of truth in the charges of labor leaders and demagogues against the Federal courts in this connection. But they will continue to repeat their assertions. All decisions of the courts—all the courts, in fact—are hated by the agitator who thrives on discontent and ill will for orderly progress. It is not necessary here to point out to these friends of anarchy the danger to themselves, as to all the people, in the destruction of the public sentiment, which upholds the courts and sustains the hope of justice. It is enough to make plain the fact that this charge against the Federal courts is without foundation in truth. Union labor men, law-abiding citizens, have not been wronged by injunctions, and in the nature of things cannot be.

Strikes Are Costly.

The frequency with which unionites rush into strikes would seem to indicate that very slight losses result from such industrial disturbances. Strikes, however, are far from economical. They inflict losses in many directions. The men who stop work lose their income, a result far more disastrous to their families than to themselves. The employers who have refused to yield to the unionites' demand that they be allowed to run the business to suit themselves, find production stopped, contracts interrupted and business that should come to them deflected to some other locality. All the members of a community where a strike occurs suffer by the disturbance. The owners of real estate find their houses vacant, storekeepers feel the effect of the reduced money in circulation, manufacturers who have supplied goods for use and sale in the disturbed community find orders countermanded, and less employés needed, even though they may be quite remote from the location of the strike.

A recent dispatch from Rochester, N. Y., announced the settlement of the strike of machinists of the Erie Railroad, which had been in operation for ten months. The strikers lost the contest, after having lost $1,500,000 in wages. The railroad company won the open-shop principle, and only reinstate such men as they want. The men also accept a 10 per cent. reduction. What the several communities between Jersey City and Chicago, where the strike was effective, suffered is not even estimated. Consider what a saving it would have been had the strike leaders been put out of business before they ordered the machinists to quit work.

The strike of employés of the United Railroads of San Francisco is another example of the serious results of such industrial disturbances. The strikers have lost their battle and have lost $1,000,000 in wages. The company has also lost a million of dollars in a business way because of the smaller number of people who have used the cars. The million dollars in wages lost by the strikers has been almost entirely taken out of the business of the city. Merchants, manufacturers and real estate owners have felt the loss. Nor are such losses ever made up. They are absolute.

These exhibitions are enough to show of how much interest it is to every community where a strike is threatened to use the best endeavors to prevent such an industrial disturbance. More strikes are fomented by unionite hotheads, who seek to demonstrate their power and reason for being in office, than by any other agency. The average workman knows how illy he can afford to relinquish his income, for even a brief period, but if he has become a unionite he has not the courage to oppose the schemes of his superior officers. He needs to be saved from his alleged friends. Every community needs to be saved from such near-anarchists and should combine for protection against the same.

Tribute to the Open Shop.

Some three months ago the building laborers of Seattle went on strike as a protest agains the open-shop régime inaugurated by the master builders. The president of the Master Builders' Association, W. J. Waddingham, came down to California, and in San Francisco and Los Angeles reports that he found "scores of prefectly capable bricklayers, lathers, plumbers, carpenters and other mechanics who are well satisfied to work in Seattle at the wages we are now paying. The result of my mission was that we obtained all the help required from Los Angeles and San Francisco, for the time being.

"In going to California for skilled mechanics in the building trades line, the Master Builders' Association and the Builders' Exchange merely adopted a business course which was absolutely justified by the fact that some of the labor unions affiliated with the Building Trades Assembly here had inaugurated a strike and boycott against certain contracting firms who had employed non-unoin labor. These labor unions, when the contractors adopted the open shop rule, declared that we would not be able to get men enough to carry on the work, and we have proved this to be an error.

"In Los Angeles there is an association of employers of labor and merchants pledged to support the open-shop rule, and for this purpose it has raised $100,000. Los Angeles is an open-shop town in all departments, as is well known, the fight being lead for years past by Gen. Harrison Gray Otis, proprietor of the Los Angeles Times.

"I was told by the officers of the Los Angeles organization that the open shop rule had done more for the development of that city and for Southern California than any other circumstance, and wages paid to skilled labor are still high. The men who came in search of work from Southern California are for the most part men who have heretofore belonged to labor unions, but who have been driven from these organizations because they sought work on jobs which were under the ban of the unions. They are not strikebreakers in any sense, but for the most part are men of families who claim the right to take employment wherever they can, to support themselves and those dependent on them.

"The contractors affiliated with the Master Builders' Association and the Builders' Exchange are unalterably committed to the open shop rule in Seattle, and I believe their policy will hereafter be unquestioned. They have not, however, undertaken to scale down wages, nor is anything of the kind contemplated."

Irresponsibility of Unions.

Every capitalist, every labor unionist and every member of that vastly greater but usually unconsidered class, the general public, should read the address on "The Adjustment of Labor Problems and the Policy of Incorporating Unions," delivered by Don C. Seitz, business manager of the New York World, before the recent trust conference at Chicago. It is one of the fairest presentations of the reciprocal duties of employer and employed which it has been our lot to see. Mr. Seitz declares his respect for the labor organization as a business institution, but expresses his belief that the unions are going far beyind reasonable business methods in arraying the relatively small number of organized workers against all other classes of the community. "When one set of men bind themselves together and say that they will only work under certain conditions, involving not only hours and wages, but the manner in which they shall work, and the amount that they shall produce, they become something apart from the community, and, to an extent, a menace. Their motive is simply selfish. Being, therefore, a selfish effort, it should be regulated as such, and the labor unions should be compelled to put themselves in the attitude of the ancient guild and become a corporation." When corporations become lawless the law is able to reach out and take hold of them because of their incorporation, but the labor unions, while wishing to hold employers to responsibility for their acts, have almost unanimously opposed incorporation and its consequent responsibility. The inconsistency of such a position is too obvious to require argument.—[Leslie's Weekly.

Why Not?

A short time since the unionites of New York issued a pronunciamento against Gov. Hughes, because he did not appoint a representative of their organizations upon the Public Service Commission. This leads the New York Commercial to point out the absurdity of the demand as follows:

"And, really, if organized labor was entitled to representation in the personnel of the Public Service Commission, why was not organized capital entitled to like consideration? Why not organized industry? Why not organized trade? Why not organized religion? Why not the organized professions? Such a commission would be about the most wretchedly inefficient body of public servants conceivable, the most illogical and the most ridiculous imaginable!"

The President's Irish Blood.

One of the Washington scribes gives this anecdote of the President:

"A new Congressman called at the White House this morning to pay his respects to the President. With him was his secretary.

"'Yes, I am Dutch and French descent,' said the member in response to an inquiry from the President, who pronounced his name several times.

"'Oh,' ejaculated President Roosevelt, 'So am I.'

"'My mother,' volunteered the Congressman, 'was from Mississippi.'

"'Well, I'll declare,' said the President. 'My mother was also from the South—from Georgia. What a similarity.'

"'And you, sir, of what descent are you?' asked the President, wheeling to the member's secretary.

"'Irish, Mr. President,' responded the secretary.

"'I also have Irish blood in me,' said the President.

"The member and his secretary wended their way out of the White House.

"'It's a good thing,' said the secretary to his member, 'that we didn't have our nigger along with us.'"

The Irish blood which the President here boasts is heard little of. Of course, everybody knows that his mother was a Bullock, of Georgia, but the blood that he is most conspicuously identified with at all times is the Dutch. And it requires only two or three generations back to trace the Dutch names. Pretty soon you come to his grandfather, Cornelius Van Schaack Roosevelt, and then to Jacobus Roosevelt and Annatje Bogard, then to Johannes Roosevelt and Heyltje Sjoerts, then to Nicholas Roosevelt and Heyltje Jans Kunst, and at last to the first of the family in the United States, old Claes Martenszen Van Rosenfelt of Zealand, Netherland, who emigrated to New Netherland in 1649.

But the Irish blood? Theodore Roosevelt's grandmother—the wife of Cornelius Van Schaack Roosevelt—was Marion O'Shea, daughter of John O'Shea of Nenagh, Ireland.—[Louisville Times.

Aiding the Memory.

"Some men on the road write letters to themselves before they get to the next hotel, so they will appear 'important,' when they register and ask for their mail," said a hotel clerk, "but that isn't always the reason. We soon catch on to them, because we see their handwriting on the register and on their mail; and I noticed it once in a man whom I finally got to know very well.

"He wasn't the kind of fellow who cared anything about appearing 'important,' I found out, so I asked him why he did it. The explanation was very simple. He had a miserable memory, and when he was in another town and would think of something he had to do in Columbus he would write it on a slip of paper and mail it to himself. He didn't put the memorandum in his pocket for fear he would forget about putting it there.

"He said he had used the plan for a long time, always writing ahead if there was something in another town he wanted to remember particularly, and said it was the best plan he had ever figured out to keep from forgetting things."—[Columbus Dispatch.

Strong as The Rock of Gibraltar

In our endeavor to keep our city free from the EVIL INFLUENCE of dissension, strife and even violence that accompany union labor dictations.

For Years We Have Fought and given freely of our means to further the interests of "open shop" principles—

The Principle That Guarantees to Every Man recognition of His Individual Ability and Free Scope For Advancement Should His Work so Merit

Last August the Merchant Tailors' Association were called on by the walking delegate to discharge their faithful and competent workmen and employ only those who carried a "union card." They absolutely and positively refused and with the exception of one, who deliberately disregarded his pledged word, have unitedly stood shoulder to shoulder.

Therefore by patronizing any of the members of the appended list you are considering the city's best interests and discouraging both dictation and dishonor.

STANLEY

STANLEY

THE WORLD'S WONDER.

LIFE READER.

STANLEY STANLEY
THE PAST DISCLOSED
STANLEY STANLEY
THE PRESENT ANALYZED.
STANLEY STANLEY
THE FUTURE FORETOLD.
BY STANLEY.

Without a doubt one of the greatest known Clairvoyants in the world today is Stanley the distinguished Clairvoyant and Psychic. Without asking a single question he tells your life as it is, to assist you so you may attain success. No man is born into this world whose work is not born with him.

If you are ambitious; if you wish to be a success; if you are involved in an unhappy love affair, or if you desire to better your financial conditions; if you are in doubt concerning your future and wish to attain that subtle potent magnetic force, that seductive, attractive personal charm so irresistible in its power to dominate and control others, then go at once and consult Stanley.

He positively can and will help you shut your eyes and ears to the vulgar sneers and the idiotic comments of the ignorant and go and test for yourself the truth of these suggestions.

He does not mention all the ills and misfortunes you are heir to; you are acquainted with the facts in your case, let Stanley analyze the matters that are troubling you, find the cause of the trouble and suggest the remedy.

A test reading is not a life reading, when you call on Stanley he will give you a full life reading. A test is of little value when the mind is troubled you need more substantial aid and advice; this is just what Stanley gives you when you call on him for a reliable and intelligent Clairvoyant reading, go to Stanley.

HE SLIGHTS NO ONE IN HIS WORK. ALL ARE THE SAME TO HIM AND HE BELIEVES SUCH IS THE VERDICT OF ALL WHO CONSULT HIM.

BEWARE OF THE PARTIALLY DEVELOPED PSYCHIC.

If you are unable to know the pretender from the fully developed Medium, you should learn the secret from Stanley at once, it is a waste of time and money to counsel with the pretender or partially developed Medium; their advice will misguide you and you often depend upon them to assist you in time of trouble only to find your condition becomes more complicated.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Ladies and gentlemen can visit Stanley without fear of having their confidence betrayed. Unlike the fortune teller and pretender, he asks no fee in advance, and absolutely refuses to accept any remuneration for his readings if perfect satisfaction is not given.

HIS REVELATIONS ARE MOST WONDERFUL.

And acknowledged to be of the highest order, not made to satisfy idle curiosity, but intended to give those who seek the truth a permanent benefit. He does not cater to the superstitions of the ignorant credulous people. If you are in doubt that he can and will perform all he claims feel yourself invited to call and he will give you a more substantial proof of his marvelous power than you have before received from mortal. Stanley has fitted up seven of the finest rooms in the West, three separate reception parlors so arranged that you meet no strangers, with able and trained assistants to assist you at any hour you may call. Readings within the reach of all and if you are not absolutely satisfied when reading is over you pay not one penny, is that not honest? Could anything be more fair? Office hours 10 a.m. to 8 p.m.

Does the above appeal to you? Then consult yourself, not others. You hear the truth and nothing but the truth. No questions asked.

Don't mistake the name and number.

PROF. C. IRVIN ALTHOUSE,
265½ S. SPRING ST., near Third.
THE CELEBRATED RELIABLE PALMIST AND ASTROLOGER.

A resident of Los Angeles for 24 years, and whose work is known throughout this entire land, having made a life study of PALMISTRY AND ASTROLOGY, has convinced hundreds of the best intellects and persons in all walks of life that his remarkable readings and PREDICTIONS FOR FUTURE EVENTS in their lives are unparalleled.

THE PALM shows diseases, love, marriage, divorce, deaths, money, investments, changes, talents, travels, etc., etc., and many other things which cannot be mentioned here.

WITH EACH PALM READING THERE IS ALSO AN ASTROLOGICAL READING.

PROF. ALTHOUSE stands at the very head of the profession, having read more celebrated people than any other reader. His readings, too, must in no wise be classed with those of any other reader now operating in this part of the country, and his skilled work has no comparison with theirs whatsoever."

MME. SCHUMANN-HEINK says: "I was greatly surprised to find how many of your warnings were well founded, and having been prepared for the same, I was not taken unawares. YOUR WARNING regarding an oncoming illness also PROVED A FACT, as not more than ten days later I was at home with a severe attack of la grippe. YOUR READING WAS MOST MARVELOUS."

PAPINTA, actress, writes and says: "Everything has turned out just as you predicted when reading my hand and horoscope. YOU ARE WONDERFUL, and I cannot express myself of what I think about your WONDERFUL TRUE READINGS."

DR. ALEX. J. M'IVOR-TYNDALL, says: "Your work along the lines of Astrology and Palmistry is highly spoken of on all sides."

FREDERICK WARDE says: "Your reading was most satisfactory. Your knowledge and skill in palmistry is REMARKABLE and gave me a much more exalted idea of that science than I have hitherto entertained."

LOUIS JAMES, actor, says: "I wish to say that your reading was ENTIRELY SATISFACTORY." PAUL GILMORE, actor, says: "I want to express to you my keen appreciation of your reading. It is by far the most scientific I have ever had." JULIET CROSBY, actress, says: "Prof. Althouse has given me a most helpful, complete and satisfactory reading." Prof. Althouse also read E. H. Sothern, Admiral Schley, Senator Clark, ex-Gov. Pardee, David Starr Jordan, Gen. Chaffee, Baron Rothschild, Joaquin Miller, Ysaye, Sousa, Edison, Capt. Hobson, Caruso, Josef Hofmann, Huntington, Lillian Nordica, Calve, Julia Marlowe, Modjeska, Sembrich, Gadski, Jefferson, Nat Goodwin, Maxine Elliott, Florence Roberts, Violet Dale, Fritzi Scheff, Fritz Kreisler, Mary Mannering and hundreds of others. These names of NOTED people are merely given because they are PUBLIC persons. It indicates the class of people being read by PROF. ALTHOUSE, together with hundreds of the very best people of Los Angeles—WITH WHOM ALL HIS BUSINESS IS STRICTLY CONFIDENTIAL IN EVERY PARTICULAR.

Intelligent, HIGH-CLASS PATRONAGE SOLICITED—those capable of appreciating the superior qualities of a fine reader.

ASTROLOGY AND THE HOROSCOPE.

PROF. ALTHOUSE is also an experienced practitioner in the science of Modern ASTROLOGY, by which he has made many REMARKABLE PREDICTIONS. The HOROSCOPE IS DECIDEDLY A GUIDE IN LIFE, showing remarkable things when properly cast for YOU INDIVIDUALLY, from the position of the planets at YOUR BIRTH. It indicates the condition of health, or disease; tells all about love—whom to marry and when—describing the marriage partner; shows deaths, divorce; tells about children, speculation, the best time to invest or to push affairs and when to hold on to what has been gained; your talents; your environment; when and where to travel; what to seek and what to avoid; when one will be in danger, of illness, accidents, death, losses, troubles; also of your good periods, coming—giving dates of these events for the future; IN FACT, TELLS EVERYTHING ABOUT ONE'S SELF WORTH KNOWING, being in truth, one of the best investments the world offers. YOUR HOROSCOPE is also a key to the character of OTHERS, and in this respect can be of the utmost use to you.

Beware, however, of HUMBUG READERS.

PROF. ALTHOUSE'S wonderful proficiency in hand reading and casting of horoscopes has brought him a large and successful practice. The most private confidences are reposed in him, and his advice is sought in the most difficult and critical circumstances.

JOHN HENLEY,

THE SUCCESSFUL PSYCHIC.

255 SOUTH HILL.

MANY IMITATE. NONE EQUAL.
All claim to be the best.
HE EXCELS.

Los Angeles' greatest psychic, spiritual life reader, oldest, most reliable spiritualist, business and test seer; readings of the highest order; strange power to help you. Tells just what you want to know, with facts, dates and vocation, when to locate, when to go; about your business, each hope, trouble, fear, wish in love, marriage, business, sickness, change, journeys, friend, enemy, investment, advises and assists you to good conditions, spiritual treatment for development and wealth, cures lost memory, lack of ambition, all weakness, renews vitality, removes evil influences, makes you well and strong again in thought, purpose, feeling, energy. He teaches and develops psychics, psychic's with difficult cases that they cannot handle, consult him.

This famous psychologist can be consulted daily in his magnificent parlors between 10 a.m. and 8 p.m., Sundays 10 to 1.

Remember the name and number.

JOHN HENLEY,

255 South Hill street, near 4th. 15

PERSONAL—

MRS. MASSON,

the noted palmist of London, Eng., may be consulted at 322 S. SPRING ST. (Suite 17,) by those desiring CAREFUL, CONSCIENTIOUS, AND SCIENTIFIC HAND-READINGS FROM ONE OF THE FOREMOST PALMISTS OF THE DAY.

The earnest student and thinker will soon learn, in his investigations along psychological lines, that that which pertains to occult phenomena proper, can readily be distinguished from crude and oft-exposed SLEIGHT-OF-HAND TRICKS, the most common of which is the telling of the subject's name, age, etc., AFTER HE HAS HIMSELF WRITTEN THAT INFORMATION.

PALMISTRY, HONESTLY PRACTICED, WILL NOT tell you your name, but it WILL give you information of considerably greater value in every-day life.

Your vocation, your present line of work, matters of health, marriage and domestic life, financial conditions and ways and means of climbing out of a rut of ill-luck into wide paths of success and prosperity can all be told you through scientific palmistry, WITHOUT A SINGLE QUESTION, WRITTEN OR VERBAL.

MRS. MASSON DOES NOT APPEAL TO IGNORANT SUPERSTITION, BUT TO THE FINEST INTELLIGENCE.

HIGH-CLASS PATRONAGE SOLICITED.
(Daily and evenings; Sundays, 3 to 3.)

MME. LE PIERRO,
PALMIST, LIFE READER.

May safely be consulted on all business affairs. She can and will do all she advertises, and guarantees satisfaction. Don't live just from day to day, but consult a reliable palmist.

MME. LE PIERRO tells your present and future. Your life is like an open book to her. At a glance this psychic can see all without asking any questions. She tells everything you are anxious to know. Business, investments, sickness, marriage, or the profession you are adapted for. Do you wish to be reunited to your family? Locate lost or stolen articles?

Strictly reliable and confidential.

"BIG GOLD FIND EXCITES NOME-THREE STAR $54,000 IN 23 HOURS—BESSIE $1000 PAN—LAKEVIEW AVERAGE $40 PAN—RICHEST PAY IN ALASKA—STAMPEDE—10,000 FIRST BOATS."—Los Angeles Times, Feb. 12-24, 1908.

Four men, $30,000 from 5-foot hole with pick and shovel, where dredge now on ground will start working $30 to $50 gravel; includes the richest portions of a dozen or more of the now famous gold-producing creeks—Mountain, $1,000,000 yearly; Quartz, $500,000 yearly; Rock, $500,000 yearly; Balto, $200,000, and others by hand and other primitive methods. Dredge takes $3000 to $5000 daily on $1 gravel. $10 would yield $10 in dividends to be paid October 20. But dredge starts on $30 to $50 gravel, but $10 gravel will make $10 earn $100 by October, 1908. It looks that way. All we really know yet is that the gold is there and is being taken out by pick and shovel—would a dredge equal to 3000 men do more? We can substantiate every statement we make. Do you want to know more about it?

WE WANT SOME ONE TO ASSIST US IN closing an oil proposition which is nicely started and is absolutely sure to be completed within three weeks.

When this deal is closed we can easily realize $10 for every dollar invested. We own a large tract of oil land that is practically proven by surrounding wells, and we will promote a dozen subsidiary companies on this land during the present year. There is not the slightest chance of our losing our money in this enterprise, and WE WILL GUARANTEE YOU against loss. You must be able to invest $250 to $1000, and be willing to put your shoulder to the wheel. We will not deal with agents as there can be no commission paid. The interest you receive is one-quarter of the entire tract, and, therefore, a like amount in each company formed. Address S, box 158, TIMES OFFICE. 15

WANTED—OWN A FIVE-ACRE HOME IN Coachella Valley with your pin money. A five-acre tract that will yield from $500 to $1000 per acre. Three crops yearly; an abundance of water; ready market. LIVE STOCK FOR SALE—
Poultry, Birds, Dogs, Etc.

FOR SALE—BABY CHICKS OF QUALITY. We are telling you every Sunday about the high class chicks we offer for sale. To a certain extent all chicks of a color look alike when just hatched—that is to say a chick worth no more than 10c looks as fluffy and attractive as one worth 25c, but wait six months—then you'll get an eye opener. You cannot hatch choice stock from inferior eggs—good breeding birds cost money—eggs from them come high—therefore you cannot get prize winner for a dime. You can buy 10c chicks, plenty of them, and that's all they are worth. The statements we make in our advertisements are made in all good faith. If we tell you a chick is worth 20c or 25c you can rest assured that the statement is absolutely true. We place special stress upon this fact for we want you to know that the Taylor method can be depended upon. Your satisfaction is an important asset with this firm. We simply couldn't afford to deceive or misrepresent the value of our chicks for we are here to stay and we want you to help us increase our trade. This is a sufficient sermonette for now. Here are the announcements for this week.

Nearly every day we will receive chicks, but our supply is generally exhausted early, so you should call soon or phone your reservation. You can use Sunset Main 4964 and we will hold chicks until 6 p.m. of the day you call us. You can then be able to make your own selection.

We have some of Gardena's prize winning Buff Wyandottes, they boast of a pedigree and a flock of more even birds for size and pure buff color would be hard to find. These are priced at 25c and they are elegant value, especially if you are looking for extra fancy stock. A full line of Barred Rocks, White Wyandottes, White Leghorns, Orpingtons and a pen R. I. Reds. On Tuesday our first bunch of Pekin and Geese will arrive. Good husky fellows, color and shape and size just right. The Drake in the flock weighs over 12 pounds and the gosling—come in and feast your eyes on them—big independent critters—so tough they can hardly be killed. These goslings are from the best flock in Southern California. We will only be able to secure about 150 of them, so get yours early. You can see our celebrated brooder in operation and they are an exhibit in themselves. All the good poultry food, remedies and necessary utensils for any up to date poultryman. Call around, it will please you and we believe be a profitable visit for you. TAYLOR SEED CO., 203 S. Main st. 15

FOR SALE —"SUCCESS" INCUBATORS SELL THEMSELVES.—Just come and see them that's all we ask, we have the goods and the lowest price, thats why we sell more Incubators than any dealer in Southern California. We own our machinery, have the cheapest rent, have no high salaried officials to support, and no high expense to pay, and we can turn the goods out at a low price. All we wish is a small profit, we depend on making many sales, so far we are selling the Success Incubators just as fast as we can make them. Mr. Meserve, the largest duck man in the south has ordered a 612-egg size, Mrs. Obear of the Obear Hatchery, Whittier, has ordered a 612, Mr. McClean has ordered another 612 and a 340 for his large poultry farm, Clyde J. Moss breeder of Indian Runner Ducks, Corona, Cal., has ordered two of the 200 Success, and many other sales. Come and see the machine and then you will know why they out sell any other large machine. No incubator on earth can beat them hatching. The prices run way lower than any other company asks. Come and see us, we will be glad to show you the way we build them, we make them in the 125, 200, 340 and 612-egg sizes. Sell them on the fairest guarantee than can be made by a reliable company. Come any time. McCLANAHAN'S, 711 S. Main. 15

FOR SALE—"THE HENS THAT PAY ARE the hens that lay" the year around, as ours do. "The most famous White Leghorns in the world;" won first prize at Buffalo, N. Y., and at St. Louis World's Fair; also at Madison Square, New York, winning all specials and medals for best hen, purest color, best head, best hen in the show; also at Great Japanese Imperial Poultry Exhibit for 2 years; have records of 185-191 to 228 eggs in 9 to 12 months; large size and unequaled as layers. Eggs for setting. Improve your flock with one of our beautiful large white cockerels or hens; bred by trap nesting continuously for several years from world's champions for great egg production. Write for best trap nest made. W. W. HOWARD, San Jacinto, Riverside County, Cal. 15

FOR SALE—BROODERS, ALL SIZES AND all kinds, hot water, hot air, round drums, pipe systems, or any kind you want. The Success brooder is the best and the price is less than any other brooder on earth is sold at that will hold as many chicks. We also have several large brooders that are second-hand, most of them are Los Angeles make; take them at your own price; make me an offer. Also two Queens, nearly new, $4 each. We have some second-hand incubators at a low price; they are ready to use. Make your own brooder if you wish; we sell the heaters and lamps, etc., less than you can get them elsewhere; we make everything right in our own factory. M'CLANAHAN, 711 S. Main. 15

PERKINS AUTOMOBILE EXCHANGE.

Largest dealers of slightly used cars in the West. We handle only cars in good running order and of reliable makes. We can save you big money and give you just the car you are looking for. We have at all times the largest assortment of cars that can be found anywhere this side of New York. Come and be convinced. We have the goods and can deliver them, at prices below any other dealer on the Coast. Why? Because we deal only in slightly used second-hand cars of the best makes. You can buy a car from us ranging in price from $200 to $10,000, and you can make no mistake by buying from the PERKINS AUTOMOBILE EXCHANGE. It's a guarantee of fair and honest treatment. All cars guaranteed as represented and you can get nothing better if you buy a brand new car.

CARS FOR SALE.

FOR SALE—Handsome Darracq French touring car. This car is a brand new car and has only been driven from the depot to the garage and will sell for $300 less than car can be bought for in New York City, in order to move it quickly. This is one of the best cars that is in the State of California, and we consider this one of the best bargains ever offered in this city. An examination of this car will convince you that we are right. The car is right and the price is right, and must be sold, as we need the money.

We have on hand two slightly used Knox cars, having been used for demonstrating only. They are practically as good as brand new cars, but will sell them at a greatly reduced price on account of them being slightly soiled, to close out the affairs of the firm who formerly handled this car. These cars are first class in every respect, and the man who is looking for a good car at little money, this is his chance. Will take part cash and the balance on time to reliable parties, as they must be sold at once.

We have just had sent us by the former agent of the Queen Touring Car Company for Southern California, two fine four-cylinder Queen cars, fully equipped, in elegant condition, that we are offering at a greatly reduced price in order to close out the last two cars that they had on their floor, as the agent has left the city and has gone out of the automobile game. We have all the Queen parts for sale, and can take care of you on anything you may want in this line.

We have to offer for the next few days, one of those fine Thomas Flyers that you read so much about in the papers of today. This is a seven-passenger car, fully equipped with lamps, top, Gabriel horn, tire holders, etc. This car is practically a brand-new car, having been driven about 3000 miles, and is in perfect condition in every respect. The owner is going East and will sacrifice this car to move it in the next few days. Now, if you are looking for a big car and a big buy, this is the chance of your lifetime. We got the car. Come in and make us an offer. Money is what talks. This car must be sold within the next three days.

We have an '06 Tourist, with tonneau and turtle back, for sale at a snap. This is an '06 car, not '07, and is new, having been used only about two weeks, and must be sold. This is a fine buy, and we can save you big money on this car. Come quick, as this will not last long at the price we offer it at.

We also have four other second-hand Tourist cars in fine running order, and first-class condition. They are also good buys and must be sold this week.

Good second-hand Premier 4-cylinder car, in perfect repair and running order, a good car for any one not wanting a big car. This is a good hill climber and will be sold at a very low price to move quick; need the money.

We have for sale a fine Peerless touring car; top, speedometer, glass front, extra tire and fully equipped; car bought late last year, '07, in fine condition; car has had best of care. Must be sold this week.

We have an '07 four-cylinder Wayne roadster, in excellent condition. Fully equipped and guaranteed. This roadster has been run less than 3000 miles, and looks and is as good as new. If you are looking for a high-grade roadster, come in and see us on this car.

We have one of those dandy '06 White steamers, in perfect running order, fully equipped with lamps, shock absorbers, extra tires, etc. This car has been slightly used by private family and has had the best of care, and to move this car quickly we will make you a very attractive price. If you are looking for a White steamer, we consider this one of the best buys in the city. Car runs like new and looks like new and is as good as new. Come in and see it.

Lozier roadster, 40-45-H.P. This is the finest gentleman's roadster in the city; large, handsome car, fully equipped. This is one of the bargains you read about, but seldom see; come in and see it; we have it.

We have to offer for the next few days, one of those 40-H.P. Thomas Detroit touring cars, in first-class running condition, with full equipment. This is an '07 machine, and is fully guaranteed.

Good second-hand Locomobile, Limousine, '07 model. This car is fully equipped and has just been repainted. This car is in excellent condition, and is a big bargain.

We also have on hand one model K Winton. This car is in splendid condition, fully equipped and a big bargain. If you are looking for a cheap high-grade car, come in and let us demonstrate this to you.

We have the finest slightly used Pope-Waverley electric in the city; batteries warranted; this is a stylish ladies' car for city use, and must be sold at a great sacrifice; this is your chance; come and be quick.

Fine Baby Reo; this little car is in fine shape, used but a short time, and must be sold at once.

We have also a dandy little Maxwell runabout that we can make you a very attractive price on.

High-power Wayne runabout; this is a fine little car in good condition; has been run less than 300 miles; the price is right.

We have just received from New York one of those 7-passenger Pierce Great Arrow cars, a dandy, fully equipped, glass front and top, at the best price of any Pierce in the city, and must be sold at once.

One of those dandy Stoddard-Dayton 5-passenger cars, best equipped car in town, has everything, and lots of extras; talk about your snaps, well here she is; don't miss it.

Well, we have got one of those large Pullman 7-passenger White steamers in fine and dandy order, as good as new, but at a whole lot less price, and will do anything they can do with any new car of same make, or any other make; car is right, so is the price; fully equipped, with lot of extras.

MINING—

WANTED — INVESTORS WITH $20,000 to investigate the merits of properties having real values approximately $250,000, and speculative values of one million dollars, upward; secured by 4320 acres of patented land in Central Nevada with 400 acres under high cultivation, and two thousand more that can be at little expense. Has river of water running through, with lateral ditches, fences, etc.; alfalfa brings $25 to $25 per ton; potatoes $2 to $3 per 100 lbs., on ranch; can control thousands of acres of good government grazing land at nominal rental; also on place old 10-stamp quartz mill with Pelton water wheel; when repaired can treat thirty tons custom ore at profit of $100 per day. Numerous high-grade gold mines and prospects in operation within a few miles. Ranch company also owns near by thirty claims of free-milling gold ore with good values in silver. Veins are true fissures, varying from one to twenty-five feet in width, and in value from $24 to $446 per ton. All in one of the oldest mining districts in Nevada, 26 miles from railroad now, but will be but eight miles soon. Development consists of shafts and tunnel; enough ore is now and in process of blocking out to keep the present mill continuously at work for all time. Former owner knew little of mining or ranching, according to modern methods; present owners expended all available capital in acquiring property and unwisely refused $60,000 for six of their claims, less than a year ago. The capital now sought will insure this becoming one of the safest and most profitable investments on the Pacific Coast. Maps, reports and assays at hand for inspection by parties having the capital and meaning business. Address OPPORTUNITY, P. O. box 58, Station C, Los Angeles, Cal. 15

THE INTERNATIONAL BROKERAGE EXchange, 403-404-405 Union Trust Bldg.

Transacts a general exchange business in Mexico; incorporates mining and all companies to conform to the laws of the republic and the several States; draws contracts, deeds and all instruments in both Spanish and English and attends to all matters before the several departments of government in Mexico City. Translations of all documents accurately made. We also incorporate companies under the liberal laws of Arizona, thus avoiding a franchise tax, etc. We have competent attorneys here and elsewhere. On our legal staff are Attorneys A. Ordin and Carroll Allen in Los Angeles; Lic. E. Gonzalez, Sonora, Mex., and Lic. Fernando Puga, Mexico City. 15

FOR SALE—A GOLD PROPERTY IN CENtral California. Big ledges of low and medium grade ore, running from $4 to $12 per ton. One ledge over 80 feet wide; shows values clear across its face. 100 inches of water running within 250 feet of the mouth of the tunnel, showing ample water power. The price of the property is $30,000; $3000 on acceptance; balance of purchase price to be paid out of the mine. Remember, this is no poor man's property, but for a company with means here is a mountain of free-milling ore, with water at its base, close to railroad. For report, map and photos, see W. H. TONKIN, 122 West 6th street. 15

INCORPORATE YOUR BUSINESS UNDER Arizona laws. Most liberal in United States. No franchise or annual tax. No public statements required. Stockholders exempt from corporate debts. Hold all meetings and do business anywhere. Any kind of stock can be issued and paid up in property, services or anything of value. Cost very small. Blanks, laws and particulars free. SOUTHWESTERN SECURITIES & INVESTMENT CO., box 285, Phoenix, Ariz. •

NORTHERNERS TRIUMPHANT.

Win the State Championship in Basketball.

Game Most Sensational Ever Played in South.

Spectacular Goal Throwing Delights Crowd.

In the most sensational basketball game ever played in the south, the crack team of the Stockton Y.M.C.A. defeated the Los Angeles Meteors in the Long Beach Theater, last night, and won the championship of the State. The score was 36 to 29.

Spectacular goal throwing, brilliant and lightning-like team work, and strenuous individual playing were intermingled in such a manner as to keep the 500 spectators excited from the beginning to the end of the contest.

Both teams were so eager to win that the first half was interrupted thirty-five times on account of fouls. There were only two or three intentional instances, but the men got into the game with such speed and vigor that fouls were inevitable.

SPECTATORS ELECTRIFIED.

Time and time again the spectators were electrified by beautiful goals thrown from the side lines and center of the field. Wilson, Case, Inglis, Dutton, Rule and Eastman caged the ball on several occasions from almost impossible positions. Inglis was invincible on free throws, ringing thirteen baskets from fouls.

The team work of both fives was executer with wonderful precision. On close work the local men excelled, but on long, accurate passes, the northerners were superior.

Jackson, the Stockton guard, was aggressive to the point of roughness, and Rule lost his head once and kicked at an opponent, but aside from these incidents the playing was clean, though hard.

FOULING INCESSANT.

Stockton assumed the lead early in the game. Two seconds after play began, the Meteors fouled, and Inglis scored on a free throw. Then followed ten minutes of incessant fouling, both sides offending, but the northerners having the advantage on account of Inglis's superb eye for the basket. Toward the end of the half, the play became cleaner and both fives got their team work into action. At the end of the half, Stockton led by the score of 21 to 12.

The second half opened with a dash. The Meteors put in two substitutes, but the Stockton line-up was unchanged. Case's goal from the center of the floor brought the crowd to its feet, and when Golding and Faithful immediately followed with goals from left and right center, respectively, the cheering was deafening. Another epidemic of fouls occurred, and as soon as the play had settled down again, Broderick rang a spectacular basket.

PLAY FAST AND FURIOUS.

As the end of the game drew near, both teams put on more speed and the play was fast and furious. Stockton, however, held the lead and was on top when the final whistle blew.

The victors were awarded a full-sized silver basketball. The presentation was made by Dr. G. F. Fisher of New York.

The Stockton five will play the Los Angeles Spartans tomorrow night on the Los Angeles Y.M.C.A. court.

The line-up:

Meteors.		Stockton.
Wilson	forward	Inglis
Faithful, Starbuck	forward	Rule
Eastman	center	Broderick
Dutton, Golding	guard	Conklin
Case	guard	Jackson

Length of halves, 20 minutes. Goals from field—Inglis, 4; Rule, 3; Broderick, 3; Wilson, 2; Starbuck, 1; Faithful 2; Eastman, 2; Dutton, 1; Golding, 1; Case, 2. Fouls—Meteors, 24; Stockton, 26. Goals from fouls—Inglis, 13; Eastman, 7. Points awarded—Stockton, 1; Meteors, 2.

GUN-DRIVEN IS AN AUTO MAN.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN BERNARDINO, March 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Freeman A. McKenzie, a garage m of Long Beach, if his story is true, was forced at the point of a revolver to drive his car over 200 miles since Friday afternoon, and but for becoming lost in Cajon Pass he would have now been an unwilling traveler on the desert.

Jesse Brown, a guest at the Natick House in Los Angeles, is accused of having used the gun, and in this connection McKenzie tonight told a strange story to the police in appealing for Brown's arrest. According to McKenzie, Brown and a man named Willard engaged him to take them automobiling yesterday afternoon.

He drove to a San Pedro resort for Brown, Willard and two girls. All got into the machine and the journey commenced, McKenzie supposing that a drive of a few miles would suffice them. But Brown finally concluded to go to Los Angeles, and arriving there, he directed McKenzie to speed to Ontario. That place being reached, Redlands was the next destination.

All night they drove, first to one town and then another, Brown, according to McKenzie, placing a revolver to the latter's back and threatening to shoot McKenzie when he objected, and declared he was going to stop.

With death staring him McKenzie says he was compelled to speed through San Bernardino and on to the Cajon. He says he had gleaned enough to understand that Brown was scheming to kidnap one of the girls. Being lost in the Cajon Pass, they returned here, and on the outskirts of the town Brown, Willard and the girls left the machine. McKenzie hurried to police headquarters with his complaint.

The police late tonight arrested James Brown and James Williams, alias Willard, at a Colton restaurant with Miss Rose Taylor and Miss Bessie Cook of San Pedro, but both men escaped. The women were brought here. They corroborate McKenzie's story, but deny that their companions threatened McKenzie with a revolver. They say both men are of wealthy Los Angeles families, but whether their true names are Brown and Williams, the women claim not to know.

McKenzie further claims that when Brown threatened his life in Cajon Pass, Williams slipped a revolver into his hand and motioned for him to kill Brown if the latter tried to ditch him among the mountains.

Stockton Saloonkeepers and Their Friends Moving to Close Every Line of Business on Sundays.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

STOCKTON, March 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Since the reform element closed the saloons on Sunday, the liquor interests and their friends have been casting about for some move that would create a reaction, and today they decided to close everything in the business line in this city on Sundays. About the only places that can do business will be hotels and livery stables, though it is possible that the livery stables may also have to close. One of the special drives will be made against poolrooms and drug stores, the latter being allowed to fill prescriptions, but to eliminate the soda-water and soft-drink trade.

It is believed this move may result in a request at the next election to take up the reopening of saloons on Sunday.

An anarchist meeting, advertised to be held at Philadelphia today, will not be permitted and another meeting which is to be held to celebrate the anniversary of the Paris Commune, will be strongly policed.

rate of interest is in inci- financial flurry which took banks of the city out of lenders. Those with in the banks, finding 1 to 4 per cent. inter- money on mortgage, themselves of this When the money was banks, the depositors be- their 4 per cent. per annum, the banks were glad to accommodate customers at 5 per cent. for large loans and 6 per cent. as the regular rate, small sums not secured in the very best way going as high as 7 per cent. Now the money being loaned, belonging for the most part to private individuals, these turn the thumbscrews down pretty tight on the borrower, exacting generally 8 per cent., and as high as 10, for their accommodations. It has to be confessed that there are a good many mortgages coming due day by day. These were obligations entered into anywhere from two to five years ago. The rates ran as low as 4½ per cent. and seldom ran above 6 per cent. The debtors who are unable to meet these obligations out of their purse find it impossible to obtain money from private sources for less than 7 or 8 per cent., and this involves the payment generally of 1 per cent. commission to the agent who negotiates the loan. It illustrates the beneficial effect of savings banks, not to the extremely wealthy but to people of moderate means. When the savings banks had plenty of money and felt secure in lending most of it on mortgages with the certainty that the depositors would not all withdraw their funds at the end of the given term, the man of moderate means desiring to build a little home for himself or to moderately improve a bit of semi-business property could go to these institutions and get money for from 4½ to 6 per cent. It now costs them nearly double this amount per annum in interest.

The Latest Building Record.

March is opening in a most encouraging way in the matter of new building. As The Times showed in a local article during the past week, the cost of almost every item going into a building is very much reduced from a year ago. The greatest falling off is in wages, and the general reduction in the cost of building is about 30 per cent. The number of deeds going on record, if thoroughly analyzed, would show the making of last payments on property purchased under contract running back in some instances as far as five years. The land being cleared of debt, the owners either having saved money or being able to borrow it, are taking advantage of the low cost of building and securing for themselves a home. There is no better foundation on which to build up a stable society than this. The community where the largest number of home owners and the smallest number of home renters are found is the best community in the country. This influence acts and reacts continually here. The maintenance of the open shop idea gives us a steady industrial pursuit, free under just laws, and this condition draws in here continually all kinds of settlers, including the independent mechanic who wants to be a free American citizen, permitted to manage his affairs and to sell his labor upon his own judgment and not upon some other persons' dictation. The peaceful condition thus maintained encourages all classes of people, mechanics and others, to seek a home in such a community. As long as we maintain this peaceful condition in this city, it will act in conjunction with our ever-memorable and never-too-greatly-lauded glorious climate in drawing the best class of citizens to settle here and hereabouts.

Demand for Improved Property.

There is a notable increase among the agents, according to all reports, for unimproved property. We are getting just now an unusually heavy influx of new people. They are taking up, or have taken up, about all the untenanted houses in this city, and all around, including the beaches. They are coming with their belongings, including their household goods, evidently determined to settle here for good. The demand for lots is partly on the part of those who intend to put up their homes and partly on the part of persons with a little money who procure a lot and proceed to build a little cottage or larger home upon it for rent. There is nothing like the movement of a year ago inside of the city, but it's anything but a condition of stagnation. Indeed, it is an encouragingly active condition of the real estate market, especially for lots of moderate value. Out through the country and through the country towns the demand is more active at the present time than ever in all the past history of Southern California. No statement could be more emphatic than that, but every indication shows the truthfulness of the statement. These towns were never before building so rapidly as they are now. Farm lands were never in such demand as now, and the prospect for a continuous increase in this respect could hardly be better than today.

The Good Advice Continued.

Now, after five months, the Fact and Comment man sees every additional reason to say to the owners of good property in the city of Los Angeles and throughout all Southern California, "Do not throw away with any feeling of discouragement your holdings. Keep all you can at the present time. It is not a really good time now to sell property. We have shown above that there is a fairly good demand. At the same time the other statements as to mortgages coming due and the difficulty of obtaining money for these renewals and the high rate of interest must result in inducing many people to accept anything like a fair price for some property. The instances may not be numerous, but the buyer is keen. He looks around, like a lot of householders at a bargain sale in one of the big department stores, going from office to office and abstaining from making a final bargain until he has made up his mind that he has hit upon about the cheapest thing on the market that day. While this condition continues, the very top prices, really full value, will be difficult to obtain. Of course, there are always buyers in the market in whose minds the ruling idea is to get just what they want, just where they want, and when they have found that, a little more money will not influence their decision. But the mass of buyers are not so much determined upon getting this, that or the other or securing a place here, there or yonder. It is with them really a question of cheapness, and they will buy that which is the biggest bargain. It seems to be reasonable to expect that this money stringency will not last. All the money that ever was in this country is in it today. The banks, from Los Angeles to New York, are almost everywhere increasing their cash funds. They may be conservative for some weeks longer in the matter of lending it, but the time must come when money will be much more easily obtained than now. Then there will be no pressure upon any holder of property to make the slightest sacrifice. He can get accommodated with money at reasonable rates and carry his property over to a time when the market will be better. Just as soon as the pressure to sell ceases, the market will at once be better. Then every one can hold for full prices and get all his property is worth. Remember, the Fact and Comment man has not changed his opinion. It is unalterably fixed still that choice to good to fair residence property in the city of Los Angeles is cheap, much cheaper, than in any other city in the country of the same population, without reference to the many attractions which must bring increasing population here continually, with corresponding active demand for real property.

HANDSOME CARNEGIE LIBRARY IS PLANNED FOR ANAHEIM.

New Home for Anaheim's Public Library, which will occupy corner at Los Angeles street and Broadway. John C. Austin, archit.

The Anaheim Public Library, the gift of Andrew Carnegie, a drawing of which appears on this page today, will be one of the handsomest small public buildings in Southern California, when completed. It will be of the Grecian-Doric order, and will occupy a lot 150 feet square at the corner of Broadway and Los Angeles street. John C. Austin is the architect.

The building will be constructed of concrete to the first-story level, above which it will be of ordinary brick, faced with pressed brick. It will be 81x68 feet in size.

A feature will be the spacious lobby, 18x29 feet, giving access to all departments. This will be reached from an outside porch, supported by Doric columns. Stairs from the lobby will lead to the basement, in which are to be several spacious rooms, such as a museum, lecture-room, lavatories, a stack-room and a workroom. Part of the basement will be left unfinished.

On the main floor, to the left of the entrance lobby, will be a children's reading-room, 23x36 feet. A chamber of equal size on the right-hand side will be used as the general reading-room. Back of the latter will be a reference-room, and to the rear of the children's room the librarians' quarters. A large stack-room will occupy a circular alcove capable of containing 12,000 volumes. This is to be directly over the workroom in the basement, with which it will be connected by a separate stairway.

The building will be heated by a furnace. Oregon pine will be used to finish the interior and buff pressed brick the exterior. The building will cost $10,000.

RESALE AT ADVANCE.

Conway & Kessler report sales as follows: For Charles Scherer, to William M. Schmitz, an eight-room residence, at No. 535 East Sixteenth street, lot 38x160 feet, for $5250. For Hugh Harney, to Alex Fries, an east-front lot, 50x145 feet to an alley, on Vermont avenue, between Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth street, for $1400. This is the second sale of this lot in the last thirty days. Each was at an advance over the former consideration. For William Schmitz, to a local investor, the southwest corner of Cypress street and Vermont avenue, 50x148 feet to an alley, for $2000. For Henry Krenwinkle to Hugh Dryer, a lot on the north side of Forty-eighth street, between Budlong avenue and Beach street, 50x125 feet, for $850.

HANDSOME PASADENA PLACE.

Beautifully-Situated Home Erected in Orange Groves Near the Raymond in Oaklawn Park.

Surrounded by orange trees, in the beautiful Oaklawn Park tract, Pasadena, one block west of the Raymond Hotel, the G. Lawrence Stimson Company has just completed a large plaster house which is a pleasing addition to the many handsome homes in the section. The architecture is a notable change from the now common mission type, and is described by the builders as an example of the latest school of design now much in vogue in England and the Eastern States. There are plain, simple effects, with a general air of quietness in the finish. Red tiles roof the house and large plate-glass windows admit plenty of light and air. The house fronts on Oaklawn avenue, with the rear on Fremont street, and occupies a lot 120x170 feet, the total investment being $25,000.

There are eleven large rooms, three bathrooms, and two extra lavatories. The inside finish is original and effective. The front door opens under a sweeping stairway of Peruvian mahogany, inlaid with ebony, while the hall ends in French windows that swing out on the brick patio. The dining-room, large hall and living-room are finished in Tobasco mahogany. The latter room extends the full depth of the house on the south side. The color effects throughout the inside, harmonize beautifully with the woodwork.

SOUTHWESTERN ACTIVITY.

Numerous Sales of Houses and Lots Around Twenty-ninth and Western Avenue Reported.

Ripley & Lansing report considerable activity around Twenty-ninth and Western avenue, many buyers having purchased homes in the last week or so.

They report sales as follows: Six-room house at No. 2081 West Twenty-eighth street, for J. F. Finley, to Mrs. Clara Claiborne, for $4000. The lot is 50x125 feet. For R. E. Royce to George Campbell, the house at No. 2062 Twenty-ninth place, on lot 50x125 feet, for $4000. The southeast corner of Durango and Twenty-eighth streets, 50x125 feet, for Mrs. Alma Wallace to R. A. Conklin, for $1500. The buyer is planning to improve with a handsome five-room bungalow. A lot on the north side of Twenty-ninth place, 200 feet west of Western avenue, 50x125 feet, for Fred A. Ripley to Charles Liddell, for $1400. The property will be improved with a seven-room two-story residence. A lot, 40x136 feet, on the north side of Montclaire street, 200 feet west of Arlington avenue, for Frank Schonevick to W. H. Titus, for $800. The buyer will improve with a home. A lot on the north side of Twenty-eighth street, 50x135 feet, about fifty feet west of Durango street, to C. H. Abbotts, for Fred A. Ripley, for $1400.

LARGE SUM FOR RENTAL.

Nearly Hundred and Seventy-five Thousand Dollars Will Be Paid for Ten-Year Lease.

The seven-story brick building recently completed at No. 217 South Olive street by R. Fred Vogel has been rented on a ten-year lease to Mrs. W. B. Kellogg of Denver, Colo., for a total rental of $172,900.

It contains 175 rooms, divided into two and three-room suites. The building will be handsomely furnished and will be operated as a high-class hotel and apartment-house. The lease was made by the H. Jerome Toy Hotel Brokerage Company.

The same company also reports the sale of the lease and furniture of the Colonial Apartments, at No. 411 North Grand avenue, for Wm. Bropley to E. N. Workman for $3300. The building contains forty-one rooms, and is well furnished.

IN THE WILSHIRE DISTRICT.

Buyers Purchasing Lots in High-Class Section, and Are Already Improving Purchases.

The Arthur W. Kinney Company reports the sale of a lot on the east side of Wilshire Place, 116 feet north of Seventh street, 56x162 feet, for Cora E. Clark to a local buyer, who is already placing lumber on the ground and will erect a home to cost in the neighborhood of $10,000. The reported consideration is $4500.

The same company has also sold for the Prudential Investment Company to Mrs. Bonibel White a lot, located on the south side of Leeward avenue, 490 feet west of Hoover street. The purchaser will improve the lot with a modern home immediately. The consideration was $1500.

SELLS CARLOAD OF HOUSES.

H. J. Brainerd reports the sale of a carload of ready-made portable houses to Davis Donald of Imperial Valley. The shipment, consisting of one four-room, one three-room and three two-room houses, will be sent out within the next few days. These portable houses are becoming popular in the city, country, seashore and mountain sections.

He is not isolated, either. He is close to Corcoran, a thriving metropolitan town, with excellent school, church and social advantages. He is close to the substantial cities of Hanford, Bakersfield and Visalia.

With all these ideal advantages for so little money, is it any wonder that over $125,000 worth of this land has been sold in the last few weeks?

The writer recently spent several days making an exhaustive personal investigation of the entire district. Many ranchers were interviewed. They were unanimous in their praise of the locality. Having looked carefully into every phase of Corcoran and having gathered facts and figures from every available source, the writer can state emphatically that there are wonderful opportunities in this exceptionally well favored district for aggressive, wideawake people.

Nowhere in California can land so strategically located and possessing so many natural advantages, be purchased for so little money.

The excursion to Corcoran Wednesday night, March 18th, will be in charge of Newport & Milner, general agents for the Security Land and Loan Company, whose offices are at 357 S. Spring street. The members of the above company are the founders, owners and developers of the Corcoran lands 8-room modern home, just completed, on a beautifully terraced corner on West Adams Heights, near Dorchester and St. Andrews, among well-kept homes. All lumber on first floor is in genuine quarter-sawed oak. Imagine the effect of den, dining-room and living-room paneled and beamed solid in quarter-sawed oak. There are homes for sale at $15,000 which have not this finish or elegance; especially designed lighting fixtures; built-in bevel plate glass buffet. French windows, plate glass windows, front door oak and hand-carved with bevel plate glass. Built-in oak writing desk, ceilings heavily beamed. Dining-room in leather, living-room in tapestries. Den in silk, casement windows, French windows, built-in buffet of bevel plate glass, large cemented cellar; fine eastern furnace, piped to all rooms; 4 artistic sunny bedrooms, beautifully tinted in soft shades and colorings; large balcony; hardware of especial design; linoleum on floor in kitchen and pantry; 2 large wardrobes upstairs with built-in hat boxes, drawers, etc., all in cedar and large linen closet; cement porch across entire front.

MANHATTAN PLACE RESIDENCE.

Located on exclusive Manhattan Place, this beautiful residence has the advantage of one of the most aristocratic neighborhoods in the city. The appointments throughout the house are of the highest quality, with specially designed lighting fixtures and beautiful art glass in several places. The floors are of highly-polished quarter-sawed white oak.
Approaching the house over a fine cement driveway, this handsome entrance of oak and bevel plate glass makes an extremely pretty picture. Inside one finds a living-room rather out of the ordinary in finish, containing a mantel extending clear to the beamed ceiling, finished in old gold. The walls are finely paneled. The den, also, contains a large old gold mantel, with mirrors, and here again the walls are paneled in silk and leather; the finish of this room is in mahogany.
The charming dining-room has among its unique features a specially-designed built-in buffet, combining several original ideas; woodwork finished in mahogany; leather paneled walls; beamed ceilings and plate rail. There is a buffet kitchen that is as complete as could be desired. Five big bed chambers, light and well ventilated, finished in ivory, with built-in cedar wardrobes and closets and a modern bathroom are on the second floor.
Lot 60x150, elevated 2 feet above walk; highly improved with trees and shrubs.

BEAUTIFUL NEW MISSION RESIDENCE.

$11,750

Here is an elegant home in the pure mission style, with cement porch extending across entire front. All windows in front of house are plate. A swell entrance of oak and bevel plate glass. Lower floor finished throughout in fine select quarter-sawed oak, put in by day labor with the best workman obtainable.
No expense was spared in construction. House never was occupied, and the paneling on doors, walls and ceilings is perfectly intact. Large dining-room with solid paneled oak walls, with specially designed hand-carved oak buffet, bevel plate glass doors and cut-glass knobs. Pantry just to rear, with a bountiful supply of drawers, shelves, bins and closets, all in ivory; 2 fine old-gold brick mantels, 1 in living-room and 1 in den, with built-in secret drawers, shelves, and bookcase with bevel plate glass doors. There is specially designed paneling on walls of den, and with wood frieze on ceiling make an unusually pretty effect. The walls of den, dining-room, hall and living-room are covered with the best imported tapestries with colors, shades and texture the very finest. It cost twice as much to paint and finish this house as the ordinary, as all woodwork was hand-rubbed with pumice stone, giving it an effect and finish as smooth as glass. The second floor is indeed a feature in this house. 5 large, sunny bedrooms, one of them 21x18, exclusive of a front alcove which is especially designed with pedestals, built-in seats and a French door leading to front balcony. These rooms are tinted in beautiful soft colorings and well supplied with large closets, linen closets, etc., etc.
Also private telephone connecting lower floor with upper. Every appointment in this house is strictly up to date. The cemented cellar contains fine eastern furnace. We can deliver this home for $11,750. Its location is superb, facing a $20,000 house.

FOR SALE—OVERWEIGHT OF COPPER stocks causes mining man to part with palatial residence.

Some person is going to buy my magnificent $22,500 home for just $3000 less money than it is worth, if taken at once. Why? Well, I'm slightly overweighted with copper stocks. This palatial home is in the ultra-fashionable district of Los Angeles, and is so much more elegant than any other offered for sale in this city that detailed description at this time would be unfair. It's going to go—that's all. Half cash or less will handle it, and it's not listed with any real estate agency. If you will ring me up I shall be pleased to show a property that will delight, as surely as seen. [illegible]. If not there, E4149. 3

LARGE LOTS AT SMALL PRICES.
FREE EXCURSIONS.

Manchester Heights lots are the highest-class propertw for the least money on the market today, $35,000 being expended now in street improvements, including concrete curbing and sidewalks, graded, oiled and tamped streets; also street trees planted in the parkways. This highly-developed addition lies just without the city limits of Los Angeles, and has a new $8000 church; lies one block from a $14,000 public school, and has the services of two electric car lines. The elevation gives a clear view of the entire valley surrounding Los Angeles, and of the mountains. Prices $370 to $750. Terms $25 down and $10 per month. You will be surprised to find the large lots we are able to sell at these low prices. Call for free tickets and go out. Office open Sunday.

FOR SALE—
BUSINESS PROPERTY.
HILL-ST. CORNER.
SLIGHTLY IMPROVED.
BUT PAYING ABOUT $150 PER MONTH.
$1100 PER FRONT FOOT.
Opposite corner, which is unimproved, sold for $1500 per front foot over one year ago and you can't buy an inside lot anywhere near this corner for $1250 per foot; now these are cold facts and I am prepared to prove every word in this ad.; this corner would be cheap at $1500 today. You know with what rapidity the city is growing south; now you can readily see that you have made $28,000 the minute you have secured this beautiful large 70-foot corner, and it will only take $35,000 to handle it, and might do better for this man has to have money at once, the only reason for this great slaughter.

THOUSANDS WAITING

To be occupied by members of LA PROSPERIDAD COLONY ASSOCIATION. Become a member now, and get a home for yourself and family on equal terms with every other member. We are taking in 200 to 300 members a month. Our plan appeals to all. This association has an option on 300,000 acres of land in Lower California. Every member has the same opportunity, the same advantage. There is no one to exploit you, because you yourself are the Association. Come and hear about it, or write for booklet and map. Public meetings every Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock, in Symphony Hall, 232 S. Hill street. Offices, 534, 535 and 536 CHAMBER COMMERCE, Los Angeles, Cal. •

FOR SALE—THERE ARE TWO CONDITIONS to consider in buying land, the fertility of the soil and the irrigation facilities. It must have an unfailing Water Supply, otherwise Land is worthless. Not from one ditch that brings the Water from miles away, and that climbs up and down hill, and sometimes brings you Water when there is an overflow. What you must have is an inexhaustible stream or river that cannot and never has dried up. That is what has caused such a demand for Empire Ranch lands. The Kings River flows through it for 9 miles and it is one of the largest and most dependable irrigation streams in the United States. An inexhaustible Water Supply.

FOR SALE—THE UNITED STATES IRRIGATION Congress at Sacramento, placed the cost of irrigating an acre of land at $8. Empire Ranch acres cost $1 per acre to irrigate, and the water is not brought at a great distance from somewhere else. You have the Kings River right on the ranch, through which it flows for a distance of 9 miles, and this is one of the greatest irrigating streams of the United States. It will not take long to pay for your land at this difference in cost of irrigating.

HOLLYWOOD—For Sale, Exchange or Rent.

FOR SALE—
—HOLLYWOOD—
$850—A large corner lot, 60x150; car line.
$3500—Nice 5-room cottage, east front, lot 50x137, near Hotel Hollywood and High School. Hardwood floor and modern in every way.
We have some beautiful homes to sell from $4000 to $40,000. Fine locations, furnished and unfurnished.
$1500—Large lot, 50x140, corner, on car line; just west of Hotel Hollywood. Would take as little down as $250, balance paid every six months at 7 per cent. interest per annum. This is a snap.
We have a few choice lots, well located, near car line and Hotel Hollywood, we would sell at a bargain, and take first mortgages as part payments, and take a mortgage back on the property, or would exchange for 5 or 6-room cottages in Los Angeles, Ocean Park, Hollywood and Pasadena, and assume as much as $1500. Lots are free of incumbrances.

FOR SALE—OR LEASE.
GLEN HOLLY—Hollywood property situate on Ivar avenue, one block north of Prospect avenue, one-half block from Hollywood public library, one block from two churches, one block east of Paul de Longpre's beautiful home, one block south of William Mead's artistic home, opposite ex-Gov. Beveridge's home, two blocks from postoffice, in the center of Hollywood, and in easy reach of Hotel Hollywood; 345 feet frontage on Ivar avenue and 181 feet on Ocean View. The view is high and sightly, and only 350 feet from car line.
The grounds are, with probably one or two exceptions, the most beautiful in all Hollywood—fruits, flowers and old trees of every kind, glen or rose garden, and the home is a nine-room two story house, two bath rooms and every known convenience, and should be seen to be appreciated. Besides the regular street lights it has private electric wires covering the grounds, bowling alleys with two alleys, billiard and pool tables, with room enough for dancing.
The owner has large mining interests in Arizona which require his attention there; hence the property will be sold at a sacrifice, or leased to responsible parties with references. Terms, for either purchase or lease, satisfactory.
Inquire of owner, 701 F. P. FAY BLDG., Los Angeles, Cal. Home phone A3205 or house phone Hollywood E3023.

FOR SALE—
ORANGE GROVES.

There may be two better BARGAINS in orange groves offered in today's paper, but we don't believe it.

We offer a 40-acre grove at Claremont which has 30 full acres of Washington Navels, 10 to 16 years old, and 10 acres of Valencias. Trees are in perfect condition; soil a sandy loam; there are two good houses and large barn on property. Price is only $45,000, will trade for acreage property.

The other grove contains 10 acres, at Ontario, set to Navels, and has 2000 boxes on trees. Perfect condition; trees 14 years old. Property has fine 7-room, 2-story house, also splendid barn. Price $13,500, will trade for $4000 house near Highland Park.

[illegible] Germain Bldg. 15

WANTED—LOAN OF $1500 ON CHOICE NEW well located cottage, with hardwood floors throughout; will pay 8 per cent. and take for 3 years straight; I have for sale choice first mortgages, similar security, for $1000, $1200 and $1500; also fine trust deed for $1500, $2000 or $3000; will make some discount to the right party, but want to deal with private parties or their attorneys; I have also a very fine $500 loan on $1500 security; now, some people have no experience in loaning money, and will not trust any one to loan for them; neither will they be happy with money in bank; for such people I can offer security better than the best bank in the city (and I regard them as all good,) at a much better rate where you can make from $100 up and get your money when you want it—real money. Come in and see me, and if you don't agree with me as to the safety of these loans I'll apologize all around; if you have not learned this winter that nothing is so safe as something with Los Angeles real estate behind it, I will have to summon the earthquake to convince you. One thing more. Are you waiting for snap loans and buys? Well, just get another think on right away; there was never a time when Los Angeles real estate was so high or so stable as right now, and it will never be lower. The knockers used to scare me a little, but they never will again. Money will be a drug before the snow flies again.

R. C. P. SMITH CO.
WEEKLY MARKET NOTES.
Our representative, who is now at Rawhide, is very enthusiastic over the prospects of the camp and he has picked a few of the stocks as being the "best buys" in the district. We will be glad to give our clients the benefit of this advice if they will call at our office or write us for the information. It will not be surprising if some of the properties located in the heart of the camp equal the records made by some of the bonanzas of Goldfield. The stocks we are handling are not on outside or prospective properties. They represent insiders and producers.

The market for the Goldfields during the past week has shown some strength in some of the more speculative issues, notably Daisy and Combination Fraction. The high class stocks have remained about stationary during the week.

Oil stocks have been in fair demand and prices remain at about last week's levels. The better class of oil stocks are being quietly absorbed for investment accounts and in some of the issues the floating stock now in the market is very limited. The purchaser of oil stocks at the present time will be the profit taker of the future. Don't overlook our advice to buy Rice Ranch Oil at present prices. There is another oil investment that we can strongly recommend at the present time, which we will be glad to explain upon request. It is practically a ground floor proposition and will prove to be a splendid money maker for all who get in now. We are in a position to give strictly inside information on this stock, but the action must be taken promptly. We also have a good industrial investment that will appeal to those who do not care for mining or oil securities. Full information upon request.

Peckham Says:
Increase Your Income $2000 A Year.

No need to worry over the future when you can buy land at $100 an acre at Corcoran that is paying profits of $90.00 an acre and even better every year, right now—and I will prove it to you. This land pays these big profits because nowhere in California is land so productive, and yet it is only half way between San Francisco and Los Angeles.

You can raise crop after crop the year round—vegetables in winter, when both Los Angeles and San Francisco markets are anxious to pay fancy prices for them.

Crops at Corcoran are always certain because you have plenty of artesian water on your own property for the cheapest irrigation.

There is no time for idleness there, no time when this land stands idle while expenses run on.

Here you can take profits out of this land every month in the year, and it's all within a mile of a railroad station.

Nowhere on earth can you find a better place to live—or fine land that will bring you better profits.

You can buy this land at $100 an acre now because it has just been opened up to farming, because of the big Sugar Beet Factory now about completed.

Call or send for "Profitable Realty," my monthly magazine, which gives photographs and full information concerning this wonderful country.

Or better still, come in and arrange with me to take you there. That's the best way—seeing is believing.

½ cup warm water. At 6 o'clock p. m. take one quart warm water, add yeast, ½ teaspoon salt, one teaspoon sugar, and flour to make thin batter. At bedtime add more flour and stir stiff. Next morning stir more flour in, till stiffer. Knead and make into loaves. Put in baking pans and let rise (usually from one to two hours,) then bake. Makes four loaves.

BREAD.—(Mrs. W. P. Sibley, Downey.) Put two yeast cakes to soak in pint warm water; when soft stir in flour enough to make moderately stiff batter; cover and leave over night. In morning put 2 sifters flour with 1 heaping tablespoon salt and 4 of sugar, and lard the size of an egg; mix well and warm. Have ready two medium size potatoes mashed in water they are cooked in; pour in flour, yeast and potato; knead well and set to rise; when light knead again and put in pans; let it rise; when light bake ¾ hour or longer.

BREAD.—(Mrs. A. O. Clement, Inglewood.) Put 1 yeast cake to soak in ½ cup lukewarm water; then pare and slice thin 2 medium-sized potatoes, add 1½ cups water and cook soft; put three tablespoons flour into pail; pour potato water while hot onto flour, stirring all the time; then mash potatoes fine and add; when cool (about milk warm,) add yeast cake, cover and set in warm place. (We usually make yeast at noon and let it rise until morning.) Then, in morning, add 2 cups warm water (one can use ½ milk,) 1 teaspoon salt and add enough flour which has been warmed to make rather stiff batter; beat it well, cover closely and set in warm place. When light (it ought to be in an hour or a little over,) add warmed flour to make stiff dough and knead for 10 minutes, or until smooth; let it rise again, then shape into loaves, rubbing tops with butter or lard, and when light, bake. If rolls are wanted, take some of the dough, add 1 spoon of butter; work it in and make out into rolls; rub tops with butter. If graham bread is wanted, take 2 cups of the sponge after it rises the first time, add 2 tablespoons molasses or ¼ cup sugar and stiffen it with sifted graham flour which has been warmed; let it rise same as white bread; then make into loaves. We use a 4-quart pail with a tight-fitting cover to raise our bread in and find it very satisfactory. The quicker bread is baked after it is sponged the better; so we warm the flour to hasten the process.

BREAD.—(Miss Corinne Kengal, No. 159 West Eighth street.) Place 1 tablespoon lard, 1 of butter, 1 of sugar, and ½ tablespoon salt in bowl. Work together, add 1 cup milk and 1 cup boiling water. Mix, then add ¼ cup lukewarm water in which has been dissolved 1 cake yeast, also adding 5 cups flour. Mix thoroughly, add another cup flour. Then knead it until it becomes elastic to touch. Place in bowl and allow to rise over night. Then knead again, place in bread pans. Let dough rise to double its size, then bake in hot oven.

BREAD.—(Miss Emma Gatzke, R. F. D. No. 1, Ventura.) Scald 2 cups milk, cool to blood heat; dissolve one cake compressed yeast in a little water; add 2 tablespoons butter and 2 tablespoons sugar; add yeast liquid to 3 cups flour; let rise 1 hour. Add 4 to 5 cups flour and 2 teaspoons salt; mix stiff; knead half hour. Butter bowl and top of bread; let rise until it doubles in size (1 hour;) knead 10 minutes; shape, lard top, prick it, put in larded tins; let rise one hour; bake in five-minute oven 45 to 60 minutes.

BREAD.—(Mrs. H. Houston No. 701 Front street, San Diego.) One quart sweet milk boiled, then put into stone jar and beat flour into it until a thin batter, then add 1 tablespoon sugar, 1 of salt; let cool; when cool add 1 cake of yeast dissolved in cold water and let stand over night. In morning make it up to a soft dough and knead it well; let it stand about an hour and a half, then put in pans and bake in a slow oven.

BREAD.—(Mrs. Bertha Correll, No. 818 South Figueroa street.) Pare and cook one medium-sized potato; when thoroughly done, strain off water, mash and add a little milk and beat till smooth and light; then add the potato water and more milk, till you have a quart altogether, then strain through a sieve. Add 1 level tablespoon salt, 1 tablespoon sugar, ½ cake compressed yeast or dry yeast; add flour enough to make stiff batter; let rise until nice and light, then add more flour till stiff enough to knead on the board; knead well; let rise to double its bulk; shape into loaves; let rise till light; bake one hour in moderate oven.

BREAD.—(Mrs. C. B. Hampton, Hollywood.) Pare two medium or three small size potatoes, cutting in small pieces. Add lump of butter the size of a walnut, 1 teaspoon salt, 1 teaspoon sugar, 1 quart of boiling water and cook at once. Into ½ pint warm water break ½ cake dry yeast into small pieces. When potatoes are done, mash and rub through a sieve, adding the water in which they were boiled. When this is lukewarm, add the cup of yeast, stir, and beat in well 2 cups of flour. Cover and put in a warm place until night, when add flour to make a stiff sponge. It will require about 2 quarts, and must be added gradually and well mixed. Put in a warm place until morning, and as early as possible knead it down, shape into loaves and put in tins which have been greased on the bottom only. Set in a warm place to rise until nearly level with the tins; have the oven hot and turn down a trifle when you put the bread in. Bake 1 hour or until the bottom of each loaf is a light brown. After taking out of the pans, brush the crusts with butter and rest the loaves against the upturned tins to allow a free circulation of air about them. Do not put away until perfectly cold. This makes 3 medium-sized tins of bread or biscuit. This sponge may be prepared early in the morning or at noon, as desired, for baking next day.

BREAD.—(Mrs. H. T. Webber, No. 826½ East Twenty-first street.) One potato, boiled and mashed with 1 tablespoon sugar, 1 pint flour, scald with 1 pint potato water, salt to taste. When cool, add 1½ cake yeast and let rise over night. Next morning take 1 pint warm water and flour enough to mix it stiff with spoon, when raised work into hard loaf. Let rise again and when light work into loaves. Start this at noon and keep in warm place.

BREAD.—(Katie Barry, San Jacinto.) Put 1 tablespoon lard, 1 tablespoon butter, 1½ teaspoons salt, 1 cup scalded milk, 1 cup boiling water into large bowl. When lukewarm, add 1 yeast cake dissolved in ¼ cup lukewarm water and 5 cups sifted flour. Mix thoroughly, toss on flour board, knead until smooth and elastic, then return to bowl. Cover and let rise to double its bulk; cut down. Shake into loaves; place in greased pans; let rise to double its bulk, then bake in hot oven 45 to 60 minutes.

BREAD AND ROLLS.—(Mrs. R. S. Crowe, No. 1460 West Twenty-eighth street.) Sift 2 quarts of flour into mixing pan, add 1 dessert spoon salt. Put in saucepan to heat 1 pint fresh milk, 2 tablespoons lard, 2 tablespoons butter, ½ cup white sugar, heat to boiling point, then remove and let cool, then add 1 pint warm water; have milk and water lukewarm. Add this to flour, stirring with a spoon. When quite soft, add 1 Golden Gate yeast cake which has previously been dissolved in 2 tablespoons of warm water, mix all together until stiff enough to knead well. Let rise over night. In morning, take on kneading board and roll out. This quantity will make forty rolls and two small loaves of bread. If desired, spread on more butter for rolls. When light, bake in a moderate oven 40 minutes.

BREAD AND ROLLS.—(M. E. Bender, Ocean Park.) Boil 1 heaping cup potatoes and mash through masher into 2 tablespoons flour and 2 tablespoons sugar. Stir into mixture the water in which potatoes were boiled. Put 1 cake yeast in ½ cup tepid water. When soft, and potato mixture is lukewarm, mix and keep in warm place. Make this at noon; at night make a wall of flour in a mixing bowl, add a rounded tablespoon salt to yeast and enough milk and water to make 6 teacups, stir all into batter and sprinkle flour on top. In morning, take out 2 cups of the dough for rolls. Make others stiff, knead about 20 minutes, using teaspoon of lard, put back to raise, when light make into 3 small loaves. When light, bake ¾ of an hour. For rolls, use 1 rounded tablespoon butter, 1 of lard and 1 of sugar, make a very soft dough, and when light make in small round balls till all have been moulded, then take back of hand and make dent in each one, fold over to make a split roll. When very light, bake 15 minutes. Will make 2 dozen rolls.

BREAD, made with milk or water.—(Miss Hazel Flower, No. 315 West Fourteenth street.) One cup milk, 1 cup water, 1 tablespoon butter, 1 tablespoon lard, 1 tablespoon sugar, ½ tablespoon salt, 1 yeast cake, ¼ cup lukewarm water, about 6 cups sifted flour. Place shortening, sugar and salt in large bowl, pour in boiling water and scalded milk. When mixture is blood-warm, add dissolved yeast cake and 5 cups flour. Stir till thoroughly mixed, using knife or a wooden spoon. Add remaining flour, mix, turn on floured board, leaving clean bowl; knead until mixture is smooth, elastic to touch, and bubbles may be seen under surface. Return to bowl, cover, let rise 2 or 3 hours or until 2½ times its size. Turn on floured board, knead, shape in loaves, place in greased pans having pans nearly half full. Let dough rise double its size, and bake in hot oven. Will make very large loaf.

BREAD, two loaves.—(Mrs. Martin Taylor, Colton.) Scant quart sweet milk, just warm; dissolve in it ½ cake compressed yeast and 1 teaspoon salt, warm 2 generous quarts flour. Make well in center and pour in milk and yeast. Work in flour gradually, knead well, set in warm place to rise, well covered, 2 hours in summer, 4 in winter. When risen to twice its size, knead down. Let rise, knead thoroughly, put in pans. When twice its size, bake 45 minutes. Do not have oven too hot.

BREAD WITH COMPRESSED YEAST.—(Mrs. K. Mathias, No. 554 East Twenty-fourth street.) To make 4 loaves of bread, scald 1 pint of milk, add 1 pint of water, and when mixture is lukewarm add 1 small compressed yeast cake, dissolved in ½ cup of warm water, a level teaspoon of salt and 1 of sugar, and sufficient flour to make a batter. Beat continuously for 5 minutes; cover and stand in a warm place for 2½ hours. Then add flour slowly, stirring all the while until the dough is sufficiently hard to turn on a baking board, knead for 15 minutes, divide in loaves; put in greased pan. Brush each loaf with melted butter. Stand in warm place until it has doubled in bulk, then bake 1 hour in moderate oven.

BREAD WITH DRY YEAST.—(Mrs. Kate Mathias, No. 554 East Twenty-fourth street.) To make 2 loaves, soak ½ a dry yeast cake in little warm water at about 5 p.m. At 6 o'clock have ready 1 medium-sized potato, boiled and mashed fine, and about ½ pint of the water in which it was boiled. This should be warm. Add yeast, potato, 1 teaspoon each salt and sugar, and enough flour to make a stiff batter. Beat 5 minutes. Let raise in a warm place until bedtime. It should now be very light. Add ½ pint warm water and flour to make moderately stiff dough. Knead for 15 minutes. Wrap up well, put in a warm place and let raise overnight. Early in the morning mold in two loaves, brush all over with melted butter. When very light, bake in moderate oven 1 hour.

BOSTON BROWN BREAD.—(Mrs. Lena Mead, No. 133 South Burlington avenue.) One cup corn meal, 2 cups graham flour, 1 teaspoon soda, 1 teaspoon salt, mix, then add 1 cup N. O. molasses, 1 pint hot water; mix, put in buttered pail and steam 3 hours, then bake 15 minutes until brown.

BOSTON BROWN BREAD.—(Bessie M. Bugbee, No. 2915 South Figueroa street.) Two cups Indian meal, (yellow preferred;) 1 large cup graham flour, 1 cup New Orleans molasses, 1 teaspoon, even, salt; ½ teaspoon of soda, both stirred in molasses. Stir meal into this, then add 1 cup sour milk, (sweet may be used, and baking powder instead of soda. Put in steamer to steam from 3 to 4 hours. Delicious. May be baked in deep dish for 4 hours if preferred.

BOSTON BROWN BREAD.—(Mrs. James J. Milmore, No. 898 Tremont street, Boston, Mass.) Half cup Indian meal, ½ cup white flour, 2 cups rye meal, 1 scant cup molasses, 1 cup raisins, 1 teaspoon soda, 1 egg, 1 cup milk, 1 teaspoon salt, 1 tablespoon melted butter. Steam in well-greased mould 4 hours.

BOSTON BROWN BREAD.—(Miss Margaret Petiid, Phoenix, Ariz.) Two pounds flour, 3 lbs. rye meal, 2 oz. salt, 2 lbs. yellow corn meal, 3 oz. soda, 1 qt. molasses, 3 qts. water. Bake about 4 hours in cool oven.

BOSTON BROWN BREAD.—(Elsie G. Bradford, Fullerton.) One cup corn meal, 1 cup flour, 1 cup graham; add 2 cups sour milk, 1 cup molasses, 1 teaspoon salt, 1 teaspoon soda dissolved in a little hot water. Beat thoroughly and steam 3 hours. Very nice to steam in baking powder cans.

BOSTON BROWN BREAD, STEAMED.—(Mrs. Alice Watson, No. 133 Hill street.) Mix ½ pint rye flour with ½ pint granulated corn meal, same quantity whole wheat flour; measure level teaspoon of bicarbonate of soda, dissolve it in little warm water and add to it ½ pint New Orleans molasses. Mix and add to 1 pint thick buttermilk; add 1 teaspoon salt, and pour this into dry ingredients. After mixing thoroughly, turn into greased brown bread mould; tie down cover and steam constantly 4 hours. A tin pail will do for mould.

BOSTON BROWN BREAD.—(Mrs. A. A. Farnum, No. 329 Magnolia avenue, Long Beach.) Sift 1 cup rye flour, 1 cup granulated corn meal, 1 cup graham flour, 1 teaspoon salt, 1 heaping teaspoon soda; add 1 cup molasses and 2 cups sour milk. Put in butter tins half full, cover tightly and set in covered iron kettle to boil 3 hours. When done set tins in oven 10 minutes.

BOSTON BROWN BREAD.—(Miss Jessie Jones, Upland.) One heaping coffee cup each of corn, rye and graham meal; sift the 3 together as closely as possible and beat together thoroughly with 2 cups New Orleans or Porto Rico molasses, 2 cups sweet milk, 1 cup sour milk, 1 dessertspoon soda, 1 teaspoon salt. Pour into a tin form, place in a kettle of cold water and boil 4 hours. Put on to cook as soon as mixed. The bread should not quite fill the form. See that the water does not boil to the top of the form. When done remove the lid and set in the oven a few minutes to dry the top.

BOSTON BROWN BREAD.—(Mrs. J. J. West, No. 632 North Wilson avenue, Pasadena.) One cup rye meal, 1 cup Indian meal, 1 cup graham flour, 1 teaspoon salt, 2 Royal or 3½ Rumford baking powder, ¾ cup molasses, 1¾ cups milk or water; measure meal and flour after sifting. Add salt and baking powder and sift again. Add molasses and milk. Turn into well-buttered steamer and steam 3½ hours. Water must boil constantly during cooking. Half cup raisins may be added.

BOSTON BROWN BREAD.—(Mrs. D. Barry, San Jacinto.) One cup sour milk, 1 cup corn meal, ½ cup rye flour, ½ cup graham flour, ½ cup molasses, 1 teaspoon soda dissolved in a little water. Steam 3 hours then brown in oven.

BOSTON BROWN BREAD.—(Miss Catherine Hayes, No. 2222 Sheridan street.) Three cups corn meal, 1 cup flour, 1 cup molasses, 1 cup water, 1 cup sour milk, 1 teaspoon soda. Butter 3 1-pound baking powder cans, fill with batter until 2-3 full; put on the covers and steam 2 hours.

CORN BREAD.—(Miss Catherine Hayes, No. 2222 Sheridan street.) For four loaves take 1 heaping tablespoon sugar, 1 tablespoon butter beaten together; add 1 beaten egg, 2-3 cup corn meal, ½ cup flour, 2 teaspoons baking powder, little salt; enough sweet milk to make thin batter; bake 20 minutes.

BOSTON BROWN BREAD.—(Mrs. F. P. Greene, No. 127 South Johnston street.) One quart of buttermilk or sour milk, 1 tablespoonful soda, 1 tablespoonful salt, 1 cup New Orleans molasses, 1 tablespoonful melted lard. Stir thoroughly, add 4 cups coarsest Graham flour and 2 cups yellow cornmeal. Bake in 2 small deep pans; for first 15 minutes the bread should rise steadily; after this the heat should be diminished gradually, in order not to form a crust too soon.

BOSTON BROWN BREAD.—(Mrs. A. J. C. Saunier, No. 2109 South Hoover street.) One heaping coffee cup each of corn, rye and Graham meal (wheat flour can be used in place of rye,) sift the three together as closely as possible and beat up thoroughly with 2 cups New Orleans or Porto Rica molasses, 2 cups sweet milk, 1 cup sour milk, 1 dessertspoon soda, 1 teaspoon salt, pour into tin pan, place in a kettle of cold water, boil for 4 hours. Put on to cook as soon as mixed. Serve warm. The bread should not quite fill the pan or tin pail with a cover will answer as it must have room to swell. See that the water does not boil up to the top of the pan or stop boiling. To serve it, remove the cover and set in open oven to dry the top and it will then turn out in perfect form.

BRAN BREAD.—(Home Baking Co., Phoenix, Ariz.) Two quarts water, 1 quart bakers' yeast, 2 oz. salt, 4 oz. sugar, 1¼ pints molasses, 12 oz. lard, 2 lbs. bran and enough good strong flour to make a medium stiff dough. A little experience helps.

BRAN BREAD.—(Mrs. A. A. Farnum, No. 329 Magnolia avenue, Long Beach.) Put 2 cups common wheat bran, 1-3 cup molasses, 1-3 cup lard and 2 teaspoonfuls salt in a large mixing bowl. Over this pour 2 cups boiling water, mix thoroughly, then let stand few minutes to cool. Then add ½ cup of white flour and ½ cake magic yeast which has been dissolved in 1-3 cup warm water; put in warm place and let rise over night. In the morning mould and put in pan using enough white flour to keep from sticking to hands. Let rise again and then bake in slow oven. Makes 1 large loaf.

BROWN BREAD.—(Mrs. H. L. Kendall, 1341 Warner street.) One cup molasses, 2 cups sour milk, 3 cups graham flour, 1 cup seeded raisins, 2 teaspoons soda, pinch salt. Bake 1 hour.

BROWN BREAD.—(Mrs. Fred F. Auer, No. 412 East Sixtieth street.) One cup sweet milk, ½ cup sour milk, filled with molasses, 1 cup Indian meal, 1 cup graham flour, 1 cup wheat flour, 1 teaspoon soda, steam 2 hours. Bake 15 minutes in hot oven.

BROWN BREAD.—(Mrs. R. S. Crowe, No. 1460 West Twenty-eighth street.) Three cups graham flour, 2 scant cups of yellow corn meal, 1½ cups white flour, 1 heaping teaspoon of salt. Mix, then add 1½ cups molasses and 3 cups buttermilk or thick sour milk to which add 2 small teaspoons baking soda, foam and add to flour and meal, beat up well and pour into long pan to make a sheet when baked. Bake in moderate oven 40 minutes.

BROWN BREAD.—(Nellie Anderson, Compton.) Two cups sour milk, 1 cup New Orleans molasses, 1 cup honey strained, 1 cup graham flour, 2 cups corn meal, (white,) 3-4 cup white flour, 1 small teaspoonful soda, 1 teaspoonful salt; steam 3 hours and bake 20 minutes in a moderately hot oven.

BROWN BREAD.—(J. A. Tisdale, No. 462 Twentieth street, San Diego.) Two cups corn meal, 1 cup rye meal, 1 cup white flour, ½ cup molasses, 1 teaspoon soda, ½ teaspoon salt, 1½ pints sweet milk. Steam 3 hours. Be sure to boil hard last hour. This is an old New England recipe.

BROWN BREAD.—(Mrs. A. R. Fernald, Orange.) One pint of graham flour, 1 cup corn meal, 1 cup sweet milk, 1 cup sour milk, 1 cup molasses, 1 teaspoon soda, 1 teaspoon salt. Steam 3 hours.

BROWN BREAD.—(Mrs. H. A. Kehler, No. 1333 South Hoover street.) Half cup molasses, ½ cup brown sugar, 1 egg, 2 cups sour milk, 2 teaspoons soda, 1 teaspoon salt, 2 cups graham flour, 1 cup white flour. Bake in moderate oven.

BROWN BREAD.—(Miss McKeon, No. 227 East Twenty-third street.) Two cups rye flour, 2 cups corn meal, 3 cups sour milk, 1 cup molasses, 1 teaspoon soda, a little salt, 1 cup seeded raisins. Steam three hours.

BROWN BREAD.—(Mrs. Cannell, Shorb.) Four cups rolled oats, scant cup molasses, 1 quart boiling water, salt, tablespoon lard. Stir this mixture and set to cool. Then put in yeast dissolved, strain flour enough to stiffen until spoon stands in it. Leave over night and in morning mould into loaves. Bake as ordinary bread.

BROWN BREAD.—(Mrs. Alice Watson, No. 133 Hill street.) To 1 cup each corn and rye meal and graham flour, add 1 teaspoon salt, 2 scant teaspoons soda, 1 cup molasses and 2 cups sour milk. Bake about 1½ hours or steam 3 hours.

BROWN BREAD.—(Mrs. L. B. Holt, No. 283 Bandini avenue, Pasadena.) One-half cup molasses, 2 cups sour milk, 1 teaspoon soda, 1 teaspoon salt, entire wheat or graham flour to make a soft dough that will drop from the spoon.

BROWN BREAD.—(Miss Avis Harsh, No. 511 South Thomas street.) One and a half cups sour milk, 1½ cups Indian meal, ½ cup molasses, 1½ cups rye meal, ½ teaspoon salt, 1 teaspoon soda. Sift dry materials. Mix milk and molasses and add dry materials by sifting. Beat well, place in buttered pail, and steam 4 hours.

BROWN BREAD.—(Mrs. M. E. R., Long Beach.) Sift together 3 cups corn meal, 1 cup flour, 1 teaspoon salt. Stir into this 1 cup molasses, 2 cups sweet milk, 1 cup sour milk in which 1 teaspoon soda is dissolved. Steam 3 hours, then brown in oven.

BROWN BREAD.—(Mrs. D. Barry, San Jacinto.) Six cups cooking molasses, 3 heaping teaspoons soda, 3 of salt and 3 of cloves, 2 quarts boiling water, 1 quart corn meal, 1 quart graham flour, 1 quart wheat flour. Beat soda with molasses until it foams up white, then pour in hot water and mix flour, graham and meal. Pour in greased cans and steam 5 hours, take off lids and bake ½ hour. This will make 3 cans.

BROWN BREAD.—(Miss Kitching, Oceanside.) Two cups graham, 1 cup flour, ½ cup molasses, 1 cup sour milk, 1½ teaspoons soda. Steam 2 hours.

EASY BROWN BREAD.—(Mrs. M. E. Sayler, No. 2301½ Buena Vista street.) Four cups corn meal, 1 flour, 1 cup molasses, 1 level teaspoon soda, salt water to make soft batter. Butter a 2 or 3-quart pail, pour in batter and cover pail with lid. Set in deep kettle in which is hot water to come well up on sides of pail; cover; replenish with hot water as water evaporates. Boil 3 hours, or until done. Set in oven to brown slightly. Good, hot or cold.

INDIANA BROWN BREAD.—(Mrs. W. E. Wells, No. 1015 East Ninth street.) Mix and sift 1½ cups granulated Indian meal, 1 cup graham flour, ¾ cup rye flour. Add to these 1 teaspoon soda, ½ teaspoon salt. Mix and [illegible] 2-3 cup molasses and 2-3 cup sour milk. Beat well together and pour into tins. Steam 4 or 5 hours.

STEAMED BROWN BREAD.—(Mrs. E. E. Angell, Anaheim.) Four cups sour milk, 1 cup molasses, 3 cups graham flour, 2 cups corn meal, 1 cup white flour, 2 teaspoons soda, 1 teaspoon salt, 1 teaspoon baking powder. Steam three hours. Use pound baking powder cans, fill half full of dough. Set in kettle of water, boil 1½ hours. Makes better-shaped loaves to cut from.

STEAMED BROWN BREAD.—(Mrs. W. Porter Roberts, Glendora.) One cup molasses, ½ cup brown sugar, 1 heaping teaspoon soda, 2 cups sifted flour; dissolve soda in little cold water, stir all these well together. Take another mixing bowl, put in 1 cup sour cream and 1 cup sour milk with 1 teaspoon soda, 1 teaspoon salt and 2 cups graham flour; stir all together, add 1 cup seeded raisins, or ½ cup English walnut meats, cut in small pieces, rolled in flour. Mix all well together, put in buttered pail, 2-3 full, or in 3 small moulds and steam 3 hours. Do not allow to stop boiling, as this causes steamed bread to be sticky.

STEAMED BROWN BREAD.—(Miss E. D. Burgit, No. 1659 Cortez street.) Two cups sour milk, 2 cups graham flour, 1 1-3 cups cornmeal, 2-3 cup molasses, 1 teaspoon salt, 1 heaping teaspoon soda; steam 3 hours.

STEAMED BROWN BREAD.—(F. J. O., No. 2768 Raymond avenue.) Stir well together 2 cups cornmeal, 2 cups rye meal, 1 cup flour, 1 of molasses; add ½ teaspoon saleratus, a little salt and enough milk or water to mix rather thin. Pour mixture into tin pudding boiler, tie cover securely and boil 4 hours.

STEAMED BROWN BREAD, without eggs.—(Mrs. C. B. Hampton, Hollywood.) One cup cornmeal, 1 cup rye or graham flour, ½ cup wheat flour, ½ cup dark molasses, 1½ cups sweet milk, ½ teaspoon soda in hot water, ½ teaspoon salt, 1 tablespoon melted butter. Steam two hours and bake ½ hour.

BUTTERMILK BREAD.—(Mrs. C. G. McOmber, No. 1101 North Main street.) For 2 good-sized loaves use 1 quart sour buttermilk, 1 generous tablespoon sugar, 1 level tablespoon salt, 2 tablespoons butter, 1 teaspoon soda; and 2¾ quarts flour. Heat buttermilk to boiling point, stirring frequently to prevent curdling. Put sugar into large bowl and pour hot milk on it. Now gradually sift into this mixture 1 quart flour, stirring all the while. Beat well; then cover and let stand in warm room over night, say from 9:30 p. m. to 6:30 a. m. In morning dissolve soda in 3 tablespoons water and add it to batter, together with salt and melted butter. Beat thoroughly, then gradually beat in remainder of flour, reserving, however, ½ cup for kneading. Sprinkle board with flour, and, turning dough upon it, knead for 15 or 20 minutes. Divide into 2 parts and shape into loaves. Place in buttered pans and put into oven immediately. Bake 1 hour.

Cudahy Ranch

First Choice Subdivision Selling Now
Right Under the Wing of the City

$300 to $500 Per Acre

LOS ANGELES

ONE-QUARTER CASH, BALANCE LONG TIME

FERTILE SOIL AND ABUNDANT WATER.
Cudahy Ranch is probably the largest compact body of improved land in the immediate vicinity of Los Angeles. It comprises 2800 acres, all highly developed. Every farm product profitably grown in this climate thrives there. The soil is a deep, sandy loam. Apples, peaches, apricots and walnuts. all the grasses of this country, all the vegetables, besides the melons and berries, are successfully raised at Cudahy Ranch. The area of the ranch was so vast, the soil so responsive and the water so abundant, that every variety of farm production was prosecuted, not for experiment, but for profit, and with gratifying results. The gardener seeking three to five acres for a substantial living and a good profit need seek no farther. The fruit raiser will find every hope realized at Cudahy Ranch. The city man who knows that outside property must yield big profits on advancing values, while at the same time providing more ideal surroundings for home and family, cannot but be pleased with the offer open to him now in Cudahy Ranch.

FINEST POULTRY LANDS.
Los Angeles is concededly the finest poultry country on the Coast. The industry may be profitably followed at Cudahy Ranch. Either as an independent business or as a side issue, chickens, eggs and turkeys will yield large revenue at Cudahy Ranch. Besides the money saved by growing green foods and grains, the market advantages are superior. The big city is so close and the transportation facilities so convenient that every advantage may be taken of markets and market prices.

FINEST TRANSPORTATION FACILITIES.
Study the little map at the top and consider the railroad situation at Cudahy Ranch. Study the close relationship of the city and the ranch. Notice that Florence Avenue, Manchester Avenue, Pacific Boulevard, Santa Fe Avenue and other popular and familiar thoroughfares strike through or form the boundaries of Cudahy Ranch. Consider that the Whittier electric line passes just north of the property, and that the Salt Lake Route and the Southern Pacific Railway cross it, with stations on the ranch. Remember that there is no portion of this entire 2800-acre ranch from which the heart of the city cannot be reached in from 13 to 25 minutes. Give careful consideration to these facts, and it must become apparent at once that this is not buying farm property after all, but city lots in acre tracts. It is only the question of a very short time when that entire area will be absorbed by this growing city and become a part and parcel of it. Figure out what will result to the owners who replat their acres then into city lots, at the present rate of value increase.

BEST TRUCK GARDENS.
Twenty years ago 20 acres of the Cudahy Ranch were rented at good prices for Chinese truck gardens. The products have made a reputation for quality and earliness. No finer fields of vegetables are to be found than those at Cudahy Ranch. As a further evidence of this, the same Chinamen still rent the gardens, having more than paid for the land by the yearly rentals. You can trust the Chinaman to pick out good soil and cling to it.

GO AND SEE IT SUNDAY.
The Whittier cars run every hour on the even hour from the Huntington Depot, at Sixth and Main streets. Get off at Baker Station, where automobiles wait to take you over the great ranch. If you cannot go Sunday, see me Monday, but do not let the opportunity pass.

SPRING THE TIME TO CURE
Catarrh and All Chronic Diseases Quickly, Cheaply and Permanently

RIGHT NOW is the time for all sufferers from Catarrh and all Chronic diseases to be up and doing. Nature stands ready to aid those who aid themselves.

Sufferers from Catarrh, Deafness, Asthma, Hay Fever, Lung and Throat troubles, should NOW begin treatment in earnest with the assurance that a Cure can be had in one-third the time and for one-third the cost required during the winter months.

Sufferers who must count the COST of treatment may now begin their treatment with the positive knowledge that they can be cured for one-third what it would cost them at any other season of the year. Those who have coughed and wheezed, and hawked and spit all winter should NOW seek a quick and permanent cure. All Nature is kindly—the blood needs cleansing and enriching—the mucus membranes of the head, throat and body are now most susceptible to effective treatment—and Drs. Shores' low rates and acknowledged skill leave no excuse for further suffering.

If you have Catarrh, Asthma, Hay Fever, Lung Trouble; if you are deaf; if you suffer from Chronic Diseases of the Stomach, Liver, Kidneys, Bowels or Bladder—if you are thin and run down; if you have eruptions and sores; if your blood is thin, if you are rheumatic—Now is the accepted time for quick and permanent cures at trifling cost. Drs. Shores' low rates—$3.00 a month, all medicines free—for all Catarrhal Chronic ailments, places the services of Expert Physicians and Specialists within the reach of all.

Do You Have Catarrh?
MANY FOLKS DO HAVE CATARRH AND DON'T KNOW IT. READ THESE SYMPTOMS AND SEE

CATARRH OF THE HEAD AND THROAT
This form of catarrh is most common—resulting from neglected colds—quickly cured with little cost by Drs. Shores' famous treatment.
"Is your nose stopped up?"
"Does your nose discharge?"
"Is your nose sore and tender?"
"Is there pain in front of head?"
"Do you hawk to clear the throat?"
"Do you sleep with your mouth open?"
You can be easily cured now—don't let it run into complications.

THE BRONCHIAL TUBES
When catarrh of the head or throat is neglected or wrongfully treated it extends down the windpipe into the bronchial tubes and after awhile attacks the lungs. Quickly cured with little cost by Drs. Shores' famous treatment.
"Have you a cough?"
"Have you a pain in the side?"
"Do you raise frothy materials?"
"Do you spit up little cheesy lumps?"
"Do you feel you are growing weaker?"
Don't risk neglecting these warnings—stop the disease before it reaches the lungs.

CATARRH OF THE EARS
Catarrh extends from the throat along the eustachian tubes into the ears, causing partial or complete deafness. Quickly cured with little cost by Drs. Shores' famous treatment.
"Is your hearing failing?"
"Do your ears discharge?"
"Is the wax drying in your ears?"
"Do you hear better some days than others?"
"Is your hearing worse when you have a cold?"
Don't neglect this until your hearing is irreparably destroyed.

CATARRH OF THE STOMACH
Catarrh of the stomach is usually caused by swallowing poisonous mucus, which drops from the head and throat at night. Quickly cured at little cost by Drs. Shores' famous treatment.
"Is there nausea?"
"Do you belch up gas?"
"Are you constipated?"
"Do you bloat up after eating?"
"Is there constant bad taste in the mouth?"
Now is the time to be permanently cured. Drs. Shores are curing hundreds every year.

MEN A Special Department for MEN
Drs. Shores maintain a Special Department exclusively for the treatment and cure of all diseases of Men, no matter how caused. You can consult Drs. Shores about the most delicate or embarrassing troubles, with the assurance that you will be given honest advice and skillful treatment, and everything will be STRICTLY PRIVATE AND CONFIDENTIAL. Men who are weak and failing—young men who have been led astray by bad companions—old men who find their sexual vigor gone—the victim of Blood Poison, and all others who need the counsel and aid of experienced and kindly physicians, are cordially invited to consult this department and be advised FREE OF CHARGE. We cure more men than all the "Fake Medical Institutes" in the city combined. No cheap, hired doctors.

So sure is the Cure under DRS. BUILDING.

ARCHITECTS ARE VERY BUSY.

MUCH WORK IS NOW BEING PLANNED.

Pasadena Scientist Church Will Cost One Hundred and Five Thousand Dollars—Bids Taken for the Gerhard Eshman Building on West Seventh Street.

The following details of work planned by the local architects and designers, includes many home jobs, and a few buildings of a public nature. An active time is anticipated in residence work during the coming summer months, occasioned by the reduction in the cost of building materials. The details are from the Builder and Contractor:

Franklin P. Burnham, showed the plans for the proposed Christian Scientist Church, at Pasadena. The latest estimates are that the structure will cost about $105,000. It will be one of the finest church buildings in Southern California. He has the working drawings about complete.

Morgan & Walls have taken bids for the general contract work in the construction of the seven-story and basement building now being built for Gerhard Eshman, on West Seventh street, near Broadway' The structural steel is nearly fabricated, and everything is in readiness for the exterior brick work. The front will have a facing of glazed terra cotta. The same architects have taken bids for the roofing work on the ten-story Kerckhoff Building, at Sixth and Main streets. They have awarded a contract to the Lamson Company, for the installation of a pneumatic tube service in the same building. The same architects have prepared plans for a one-story brick business building, 90x128 feet, to be built on the southwest corner of Seventh and Hill streets, for E. S. Rowley. The work will be done by the day, and the structure will cost about $40,000.

Garrett & Bixby are drawing plans for a one-story brick store building on the corner of Forty-fifth and San Pedro streets, for J. Pillig. It will contain three storerooms, with plate-glass fronts. The walls will be made of sufficient strength to sustain an additional story. The same architects have also drawn plans for a six-room bungalow to be built at South Pasadena for De Forest Howry. It will be of artistic design, and have beamed ceilings, paneled walls, and white-enameled finish.

Frank M. Tyler has drawn plans for a three-story frame apartment-house, to be constructed on the corner of First street and Beaudry avenue, for F. L. Hossack. It will be divided into two, three and four-room suites, each with private bath and kitchen. It will be mission in design, with plastered exterior, composition roofing and staff ornamentation. The inside will be finished in pine. The same architect has also drawn plans for a one and one-half-story nine-room frame residence to be built at Hollywood, for Mrs. L. C. Haynes. It will be complete with modern conveniences. The same architect has also made plans for a six-room bungalow, to be built at San Pedro, for Mrs. R. F. Angel.

A. C. Smith is taking bids for the construction of the Upland school building. Some changes have been made in the plans, which will bring the cost of the building within the amount appropriated for its erection.

R. B. Young has prepared plans of a fine residence to be built on Westmoreland Place near Ninth street, for A. P. Johnson. Work on the foundation walls is now under way. The building will be built under separate contracts.

Lester S. Moore has drawn plans for a two-story frame two-flat building to be erected on Avenue 53, near Pasadena avenue, for A. W. Bond. It will have pine trim, pressed brick mantels, first-class plumbing.

Plans have been prepared for L. W. Blinn for a three-story brick business building to be erected on the north side of Third street, east of San Pedro street. It will have a frontage of ninety-three feet.

C. H. Russell is drawing plans for a two-story eight-room frame residence to be built at Venice, for Mrs. E. Rundle. It will be of modern design, and cost about $3500.

John P. Krempel is drawing plans for a two-story, ten-room frame residence, to be built at Jasmine Park, for A. B. Schmitz. The front porch and chimneys will be finished in artificial stone. He is also making plans for a spacious two-story, ten-room frame residence, to be erected on Arapahoe street, near Tenth street, for George J. Kuhurts. It will be first-class in every respect. The same architect has also prepared plans for a one-story frame store building, to be constructed at North Main and Alhambra avenue, for the Maier Brewing Company. The same architect has also completed plans for a series of buildings to be constructed at Wineville, Riverside county, for Charles Stern & Sons. A bunk-house, 34x46 feet, two brick buildings for workmen's quarters, 48x20 feet, and 38 x60 feet, respectively, containing sleeping rooms, dining hall, kitchen, baths, etc.; a brick store building, an addition to the storage building and also a frame and corrugated iron building, 58x140 feet.

W. H. Kuhn is building a seven-room frame residence at No. 1224 Ventura street.

W. W. Wilcox is planning to erect eight cottages in Colton at a cost of $15,000.

Mrs. Mary Lyman of San Francisco has announced that she will build a four-story apartment on the beach at Long Beach, near the Hotel Virginia, to cost $16,000.

Quayle Brothers have prepared plans for a fine residence to be built on E street, between Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth streets, San Diego, for Judge A. Haines. It will be three stories and basement, and contain ten rooms. It will have a furnace, built-in bookcases, billiard-room, beamed ceilings, hardwood floors and all modern features.

Plans have been prepared by G. D. Boone for a seventy-two-room apartment-house to be built at the corner of Sixth and Robinson streets, San Diego, for Mrs. Archie Crowell, at a cost of $25,000. It will be 100x100 feet, and two stories high.

BUILDING CONTRACTS LET.

The contracts for new buildings let in and about Los Angeles for a week past, for all items to cost $1000 and upward, are as follows:

Daniel G. Grant to Alexander Grant, two-story eight-room frame house, Commonwealth avenue, near Fifth street, $5837. Same owner to J. E. Jean, plumbing same building, $630.

Tucson, Ariz., will possess a large hotel if the plans of a syndicate of which Mr. Steinfeld is head do not miscarry.

Plans for an amusement building, to be built on the Pike at Long Beach, have been prepared by Charles E. W. Moore. They are now being considered by the Board of Public Works of that city.

Fer-Don Offers $10,000.00

Just to prove that the European Medical Experts are the only physicians using the treatments by which Cancers, Tumors and Gall Stones are removed without the use of the knife, $10,000 offered to any other who can produce the same results.

Others claim these treatments, said the Great Fer-Don, but cannot successfully treat by the bloodless method.

The Great Fer-Don has made a startling offer, which is open to all who claim the methods of the European Medical Experts. These imitators who claim to remove tumors, cancers and gall stones by the bloodless methods, and who are getting people into their offices by making them believe that they will be treated by the European Experts, are causing much misunderstanding and disappointment. The European Medical Experts have no offices on Broadway, nor are there anv doctors along Broadway who use their treatments, said Fer-Don last night, and I will give $10,000 to any of these people who can prove they can produce the same results.

"Why, do you know," said Fer-Don, "that when one member of the family of one of these imitators was suffering from cancer, instead of treating him themselves, the man was brought to the offices of the European Medical Experts at 745 South Main street, and the cancer was removed. The name of the man from whom the cancer was removed is Fred Ganridge and he lives at 1216 South Hill street."

Fer-Don also told how Mrs. Cammermon, who lives at Santa Monica, came into the offices of the Experts a few days ago and asked if they were not the same people who were in Salt Lake City last summer. Upon being told they were the same, this lady said: "Well, I want to take treatment from you if you are the same. Last summer you cured two of my daughters at Salt Lake City, Mrs. Elliott, whose husband is connected with the Wilson Hotel of that city, and Mrs. Martin, who lives at 321 South First street, Salt Lake City."

Thousands of people have been cured by the treatments of the Experts of chronic and nervous complaints, and Fer-Don offers another $10,000 to any one who can prove that the names and address of those who are given as benefited and cured are not correct.

Chino Ranch

Rich Land $10 to $250 an Ac

Terms: One-Fourth Cash, Balance in One,
Three and Four Years, at Six Per Cent. Inter

The Chino Ranch is only 32 miles from Los An between Ontario and Pomona, immediately adjoining ea favorable location ensures ranchers a ready market "bumper" crops in many products they can sell all the to best advantage. You can buy Chino Ranch Lands water delivered in cement pipes, for $200 to $250 an acre. O ship of water rights, reservoirs and the entire irrigation system is vested in ers as they buy these lands—a share of water stock is given with every chased. You can buy other Chino Lands, just as good, but not under irriga $100 to $150 an acre. These are in the Chino Artesian Belt, where water in plenty and no well was ever known to fail.

On the easy terms of payment mentioned above, a man can get a start on the Chino Ranch and meet his deferred payments out of the profits from the crops he raises. · We can prove this.

Advantages of Location

The town of Chino is a well settled country town, with good schools, churches, stores, telephone service, etc. The CHINO RANCH lies in and around it. Newcomers have none of the hardships and difficulties to meet which settlers in far-away, undeveloped districts must overcome. The location of the CHINO RANCH is a tremendous advantage in that ranchers find a ready market available for all that can be raised. Another point is this—their location makes thorough investigation of Chino lands and Chino advantages an easy matter for you —at the expense of very little time and effort you can investigate thoroughly. We place every means of doing so at your disposal.

Come in and Arrange to Visit the Ranch with Us

We want you to go out to the Chino Ranch with us. If you are going to buy land anywhere in Southern California you cannot afford to do so without informing yourself thoroughly concerning Chino lands. You will find the proposition a safe one. There is nothing of the experiment about Chino lands—years of satisfactory results and actual experience have proven their worth. These points will be evident to you as you go over the great ranch. Come in and get our special pamphlets, giving detailed facts and figures concerning Chino Products. You will be interested in these and in comparing our statements with the actual conditions you find when you go out to the ranch. If you expect to work your lands this season you have no time to lose. Come in tomorrow.

Chino Ranchers raise a great variety of profitable
We mention a few here, with figures that can be verified.

ALFALFA—Last year Chino Ranchers raised $200,000 worth of Alfalfa. From seven to nine crops are cut from the same soil in a single season. Baled Alfalfa Hay is worth from $12 to $15 a ton on board cars at Chino—the loose product brings an average of $10 a ton. The man who has a comparatively small acreage of Alfalfa at Chino and works it himself can clear $100 an acre every year.

SUGAR BEETS—Last year's crop of sugar beets on the Chino Ranch brought the growers fully $100,000.00. An immense beet sugar factory is operated in the town of Chino. It is possible to make a net profit of from $30 to $75 an acre from Sugar Beets. Many ranchers at Chino nave gotten their start from Sugar Beet culture.

POTATOES—Chino Ranchers raised $70,000.00 worth of potatoes last year. A larger acreage is going in this season. Chino potatoes average about $135.00 an acre for the first crop. The second crop, grown in the same land, the same year, brings almost as much.

WALNUTS—About 800 acres on the Chino Ranch are set out to walnuts. While the trees are developing most ranchers work the soil between the rows of young trees to potatoes and other vegetables. This is the common-sense way of making a profit from the acreage almost from the start. Several recent purchasers at Chino are expert walnut growers who have made successes elsewhere, selling their developed groves at fancy prices and taking up cheaper land at Chino because they know it is fine walnut land.

PEACHES-APRICOTS.—Deciduous fruits produce heavily at Chino. Estimated value of last year's crop $84,000. Peaches average a return of $100 an acre; apricots about $80 an acre. On the Anderson Ranch at Chino last year there was sold from one tree $12 worth of peaches. Apples are also a success at Chino, selling last year from 1¼c to 2¼c a pound. Much new acreage is going into apples this year.

GETS POSTOFFICE JOB.

The contract for the supply of the interior wood finishings of the new postoffice and courthouse building, at North Main and Temple streets, has been awarded to the Southern California Hardwood Manufacturing Company of this city. The bid was $69,000. The material will be either oak or Oregon pine. The work will not be begun for six months. That a Los Angeles firm should compete successfully with eastern and northern mills shows the development of the city. The Southern California Hardwood Manufacturing

If You Want Land—

Admitted to be the Opportunity of a Lifetime

CITY MAN OR FARMER—

Yes, and the newcomer from the East, a great opportunity awaits you.

But first—your confidence.

We are a responsible concern, whose high standing and honesty can be learned at any bank.

The facts here published have been endorsed and proven by every Los Angeles newspaper in editorial or news columns.

We mention this in order to clinch your attention—to satisfy you that this great land opening is a personal affair—yours—and if you do investigate it, you will admit that a few hundred dollars will lay the foundation for independence and fortune.

This sounds good, especially in these days of falling wages and depression.

And it is true—actual independence, actual freedom from money-worry, actual fortune—your chance beyond any possibility of slip or miss.

The land lies in California's richest valley—the great San Joaquin.

It equals the Imperial Valley in all respects and rivals it it in many respects.

It surpasses land now selling at $100 per acre.

Level as a floor—inexhaustible water—deep, rich soil—no water stock to buy, no dry years, no water litigation. Everything you desire, nothing you object to.

It resembles a cultivated meadow with its thick growth of natural grass.

It will produce maximum crops of grapes, melons, sugar beets, barley, corn, wheat, peaches, alfalfa, etc.

One fair crop will pay for the land. Total price is only $25 per acre.

Grapes pay from $100 to $300 per acre. And the land costs only $6.25 per acre down. Figure on that.

The activity now going on is beyond all expectations.

Over 7000 acres already sold—
The hotel already built—
Telephone line being installed—
Thousands of acres being plowed—
New artesian wells being drilled—

Most important of all, two new railroad surveys go directly through the property.

(See reproductions of newspaper headings in upper right-hand corner.)

Whatever survey is utilized, it hits the Big Field Ranch and will increase the value of land several hundred per cent.

Do not hesitate to write or call for full facts, information, maps.

You will not be urged to buy. You are welcome to come and investigate, ask questions, bring friends.

We are taking small parties to the property every day or so.

We do not run big excursions. We want people to investigate quietly—take their time.

Expenses of the little trip are slight. That's the best way to satisfy yourself—go and look, talk with the farmers who are plowing, dig up the soil and examine it.

No man can afford to pass by such a chance.

To pay $100 elsewhere for farm land is to cheat yourself out of $75 per acre. This is the soil you are looking for. It will suit you. You will see its wonderful fertility. It's a dead waste to pay more. When gone, you cannot duplicate it.

You will find many land seekers in our office tomorrow. Come and join the group and learn more facts.

Remember $25 per acre gives you unrestricted choice.

Terms, ¼ down, balance in 3 years.

If the price was tripled it would be a good buy

RANCH LANDS SELL LIVELY.

FARMS IN SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA ATTRACT INVESTORS.

Newcomers Buying Improved and Raw Ground at Good Prices—Three Deals at Riverside—Pomona Grove Changes Hands—Corona Transactions—Hemet Business Brisk.

Considerable activity in country property, particularly in well paying ranch propositions, is reported. In all parts of Southern California there are newcomers investing in ranch property. Some people are buying the raw land, and are setting it out in orange, lemon and walnut trees, or laying the land out as alfalfa farms, truck gardens, and other income-producing plants. Prices are well maintained, as a rule, very few of the better class properties changing hands at a sacrifice.

PASADENA HOME BOUGHT.

Newton W. Claypole of Brookline, Mass., has purchased from George B. Post the residence at No. 350 South Grand avenue, Pasadena, for $37,000. The place is one of the prettiest on the west side and is at present occupied by J. W. Bullock of Cincinnati, O.

THROOP SELLS ENDOWMENT.

Throop Polytechnic Institute realised $30,000 through the sale of the John Wadsworth endowment last week. The property was sold through David Blankenhorn. It is located on Orange Grove avenue and Bellefontaine street, Pasadena, and is 145x200 feet and improved by an old-fashioned mansion. George M. Emery of New York bought the place for his daughter, Mrs. Charles Mortimer Henderson.

RIVERSIDE RANCHES SOLD.

Andrew Briggs of Declez has bought, through J. A. King, the J. H. Noble property on Brockton avenue, Riverside. The purchase is valued at $25,000. In exchange Mr. Briggs gives three houses at Ocean Park, 160 acres of grape land at Declez and the balance in cash.

Mr. Briggs also purchased of Henry H. Raley a twelve-acre orange grove at West Riverside for a consideration of $10,000 cash. J. H. Noble has bought the Robert McFarlane home on West Eleventh street, paying $4500 for the property.

Twenty acres of alfalfa at the corner of California avenue and Adams street, Riverside, was sold by A. Nixon. The purchaser is John Dillon, a Pasadena advertising man.

SALES AT SAN JACINTO.

Mrs. Anna M. Brown has sold a 160-acre tract in the Reinhart Cañon, near San Jacinto, to Chris Pearson of Riverside for $1200. This land was bought by Mrs. Brown about two years ago for $3.25 an acre, and its present selling price is an example of the increasing values in real estate about San Jacinto.

A. J. Waters of Los Angeles has sold a twenty-acre improved tract in the Ramona district, San Jacinto, to A. M. Larson. The land is planted to bearing deciduous fruit trees, and has a water right in the San Jacinto Valley Water Company. The consideration was $3250.

GODDESS CITY GROVES.

J. A. Kennedy has sold his ten-acre navel orange grove on Mountain avenue, between San Bernardino and San José avenues, Pomona, to T. B. Himrod for $10,000.

MANY SALES AT CORONA.

George L. Bush has sold a ten-acre navel orchard grove at Ontario avenue and California street, Corona, to Frank Ardolf for $9000 cash. The deal was made by Bish & McNeil, who also report the sale of a two-and-a-half-acre lemon grove with five-room cottage, and five-acre orange grove on upper Main street, owned by R. R. Groves, who sells to H. R. Ackley of Glendale, consideration, $7000.

W. S. Ritchie has sold a twenty-acre alfalfa ranch in the Auburndale tract near Corona, to Mrs. Anna Kuehl. The ranch has two wells and an eighteen-horse-power pumping plant.

W. H. Jameson has sold a fifteen-acre orange grove at Magnolia and Fullerton avenue, Corona, to R. D. Lamson; consideration about $10,000.

R. R. Groves has bought through the Bush and McNeil agency, a lot 75x150 feet, with five-room cottage at Tenth and Ramona streets, Corona, from Harry Lyman, for $2500.

C. M. Devoe has exchanged a forty acre ranch northwest of Corona for residence property in Long Beach.

HEMET BUSINESS BRISK.

Thompson and Chaffin and W. C. Goodhue of Hemet, made the following sales: To J. A. Binkley, ten acres on Sterling avenue and Hemet street, unimproved, for about $1250. To C. A. Hubert, lot on which the proposes to erect a store building with apartments on the second floor, for about $300. To John Reis of Chicago, ten acres on Berkeley avenue, for $1750. To Loretto Reis Grey of Chicago, ten acres adjoining, price $1750. For W. M. Fisher, twenty acres with house and other buildings, to A. N. Alderman of Santa Ana, near Hemet; the price paid was about $8000. For John Topper to Eugene F. Pierce, of Michigan, five acres near the corner of Devonshire avenue and Buena house and other buildings, for $1700. For G. D. Armstead to J. D. Truxell of Redlands, five acres, unimproved, at Dartmouth street and Whittier avenue; for $1375. For Hubert Hamilton to Joel F. Jones of Redlands, a house and lot in Hemet, for $1000. For W. M. Fisher to H. B. Utigard of South Dakota, twenty acres of alfalfa and young orchard, for $4000.

ACTIVITY AT VENICE.

Work Begun on Thirty-five Thousand-Dollar Bath-house—Large Garage Planned.

At Venice the spring season is opening with unusual activity in building lines. The treasury of the Abbot Kinney Company has been pried open and a number of improvements that had been delayed by the tie-up of the money market have been started.

The contract for the $35,000 bath-house on the ocean front, designed by C. H. Russell, was awarded last week. The building will be almost entirely of glass, two carloads of that material having already arrived. The foundation for the structure and the great plunge, 100x150 feet, were completed last summer.

Work has also been started on a garage that will provide accommodations for seventy-four machines.

The electric theater building on the pier is nearing completion and work has been begun on an aquarium which, it is believed, will eventually become a government station. A commodious clubhouse will also be erected for the convenience of the Cosmos Club, of Los Angeles.

The entire protected portion of the breakwater is being converted into a landing for launches and from this the great crowds will be handled during the visit of the battleship armada. This improvement will cost $4000.

SALE IN DOWNTOWN SECTION.

East First Street Income Property Is Sold for Sixty Thousand Dollars.

An important real estate transaction last week was the sale of fifty feet frontage on the north side of East First street, between Los Angeles and San Pedro streets, by S. S. Federman to S. N. Brown for $60,000. The sale was made through the agency of W. B. Merwin & Co.

The property consists of the lot 50x90 feet, improved with a four-story brick building, occupied on the ground floor by three storerooms, while the three upper floors are divided into eighty-three rooms, rented as apartments. The total income from the building is $421 a month. At the price reported the property changed hands at $1200 a front foot.

ORANGE COUNTY LANDS.

Good Demand for Fertile Farms in Adjoining County—All Buy to Improve.

Jacob Stern reports the following sales: To Dan Carney, 12.7 acres in Orange county, south of Anaheim, for a consideration of $1000 cash. The buyer will improve for a home.

To F. P. Sawyer of this city, two lots in the Stern & Nicholas subdivision, west of Fullerton, containing 25.34 acres, for a consideration of $7500. The buyer will improve with house, barn and well at once and plant to oranges.

To Thomas D. Fanatia, the property at No. 1822 Brooklyn avenue, consisting of a six-room house and lot, 50x140 feet. The consideration was $2750.

To Herman Wirz, ten acres south of Anaheim, for a consideration of $1750. Mr. Wirz will improve with a bungalow and plant the tract to citrus fruit.

To William E. Oliver and Frank K. Haines, the house and lot at No. 796 Mountina street, Pasadena, for a consideration of $1900.

To Mr. Oppenheimer, twenty acres in Orange county, near Fullerton, for a consideration of $6000.

To Dominga Yrene Throop and George W. Throop, thirty acres in Orange county, east of Anaheim, for a improve and plant to oranges and citrus fruit.

To Mr. North, ten acres east of Anaheim, for a reported consideration of $2500 cash. The buyer will begin improvements immediately for a home, and will plant oranges and part in walnuts.

IN JEFFERSON STREET PARK.

Newcomers Buying Homesites in the Southwest—Considerable Building Activity.

The Arthur W. Kinney Company has sold to Mrs. W. H. Williamson a lot on the west side of Second avenue, about 250 feet south of Jefferson street, 40x140 feet, for $825.

Through the same agency, C. P. Krueger has purchased a lot, 40x140 feet, on the east side of Third avenue, about 250 feet south of Jefferson street, for $750. The purchaser has just completed a fine residence on the adjoining premises and bought this lot for additional grounds.

The Kinney Company reports considerable activity in the Jefferson Street Park tract, four new houses being in course of construction. A new business building is under way on Jefferson street, and plans are under way for another.

EAST SIDE SALES.

The Cornell Company has sold for Theodore Christianson to Edward Johanson the property at No. 1548 East Forty-ninth street, for $1800. The lot is 40x135 feet, and is improved with a new four-room cottage.

The same agency also sold for J. W. Spry to Thomas M. Burger the property at No. 1541 East Forty-ninth street. The lot is 40x110 feet, and is improved with a three-room cottage.

Views of New Residences in Los Angeles.

GROWTH.

MODERN HOMES RISE RAPIDLY.

RESIDENCES OF ALL CLASSES BEING ERECTED.

Activity Due to Lower Cost of Materials and Labor, Nearly Twenty Per Cent. Being Saved Compared With Year Ago—Several New Houses Illustrated.

There is a great movement in residence building at present, due in great part to the lower cost of lumber and labor. People who have owned lots for a year or so are now improving their properties.

While the building activity as a whole was less last February than in the corresponding month in 1907, the number of residences did not show the falling off apparent in the other special classifications. In February, 1907, 284 permits for Class D, one-story structures were issued at a total cost of $313,169, or an average of $1102, while last month there were 228 such permits granted at a gross valuation of $227,051, an average of $995, a difference of $207 in the average cost of structure in the same classification. This, expressed in another way, is 18.79 per cent. less. The number of two-story Class D buildings is smaller than last year, but the average cost is nearly as great as a year ago, there being only a slight saving.

Several handsome dwellings have been finished recently. Photograhps of three new houses are printed on this page today.

That of M. S. Gregory, at No. 2340 London street, is one of the handsomest in the northwest section. It is on a lot 130x190 feet, set high above the surrounding country, affording a magnificent view of the mountains and the lowlands, with the city spread out below. This house takes the place occupied by the handsome residence burned last year, and is the third erected by Mr. Gregory within the last few years. There are eight large rooms in the house, finished in Oregon pine with oak floors. On the second floor are three large bedrooms and a bath room.

The surroundings are striking. There are 750 rose trees in the garden, comprising nearly all known varieties.

Frank M. Tyler is the architect of a handsome residence at the northwest corner of Wilshire boulevard and Kingsley Drive, just completed for George F. Getty. There are ten rooms, four and a servant's suite on the first floor, and four bed-rooms and two bathrooms above. The lot is 75x150 feet.

The building is constructed of brick to the second story level, above which it is of cement plaster, over wire lath. The first floor is finished in mahogany, oak and birch, with hardwood floors while the second floor is in white enamel. There is a large billiard room on the third floor. The building cost over $15,000.

The house recently completed by Frank A. Vickrey at No. 341 Andrews boulevard is one of the handsomest in the northwest section. A photograph taken from directly in front is printed with the group on this page. The building has fourteen large rooms. It occupies a large lot, 100x215 feet to an alley, and fronts on Andrews boulevard, a 140-foot driveway. A magnificent view of the city is obtained.

Six large rooms and several small ones occupy the first floor. The library, living room, and dining-room are of exceptional size and are finished in mahogany-stained birch. There are also a large reception hall and a billiard room, the latter being in the popular weathered oak finish. The kitchen is also on this floor. Five bedrooms, three bathrooms and a sewing room all finished in white enamel work, with tastefully decorated walls, are on the second floor.

Great care was taken by Mr. Vickrey in building the house, he supervising every part of the work, which he himself designed.

In the rear are a two-story barn and garage with every convenience and also a small suite of rooms designed to be used by a hired man and his family. The house cost at least $25,000, and this with the price of the lot added, $12,500, brings the investment up to $37,500.

GROWING.

ACTIVE DAYS FOR BUILDERS.

PERMITS FOR THE MONTH SHOW SPLENDID GAIN.

Last Week's Valuation Nearly Twice That of Preceding Six Days While Record for Month Is Greater Than Year Ago—More Activity in Residence Construction.

The building office last week issued 167 new permits, having a total valuation of $244,740, compared with 137 permits, aggregating $133,216, for the preceding six business days. A total of $377,956 is now represented in new permits this month, compared with $387,950 for the same time last March. The number of permits for the month is 304, sixteen more than in the same period of 1907. The valuation is only $9994 under that of last year.

No less than 131 permits were for one-story, class D, frame residences, at a valuation of $142,942. The average cost has increased slightly since the first of the month, whether from an advance in the cost of the building material, or because of more ambitious plans by the builders is not apparent.

The city took out a permit for $20,000 for the workhouse on North Avenue 19. This will be of reinforced concrete, and is the only class A permit issued thus far this month. Class C structures, such as those being built at the business corners in outlying districts, number six permits, with a valuation of $23,982. The classified report, and that by wards, is as follows:

	No. of permits.	Value.
Class A, reinforced concrete	1	$ 20,000
Class B	1	500
Class C	6	23,982
Class D, one-story	131	142,942
Class D, 1½-story	16	30,850
Class D, two-story	25	97,852
Class D, three-story	2	25,000
Sheds	24	3,867
Brick alterations	11	4,640
Frame alterations	87	28,323
Grand total	304	$377,956

Comparison with other years:

BUYS LARGE TRACT.

New Yorker Invests Twenty Thousand Dollars in Chino Ranch Lands.

L. E. Winne of Gloversville, N. Y., has purchased 200 acres from the Chino Land and Water Company for $20,000. The land is located about three and one-half miles east of Chino and is a part of the fertile ranch. The new owner will plant walnuts and alfalfa. He is also drilling two large wells and installing a pumping plant. The purchase was made after Mr. Winne had thoroughly investigated propositions in other parts of the State.

Another sale, closed Friday, is of 120 acres located one and one-half miles southeast of the city limits of Ontario, in the eastern part of the Chino ranch. The buyers are George E. and Fred A. Grawburg of this city. The price was $12,000, or $100 an acre. The owners will plant their entire acreage to alfalfa, sinking a large well on their property. Work on this will be begun at once.

Other recent sales are as follows: Eight and one-quarter acres on Euclid avenue, one and one-half miles south of Ontario, but within the city limits, to Joseph Zesbaugh of Minneapolis, for $1062, or $125 an acre. Eight and one-half acres, adjoining the above, to Frank Zesbaugh of this city, at the same price.

Ten acres located two miles southeast of Ontario, near the east line of the Chino ranch, to Thos. Tucker of this city, for $1000, or $100 an acre. Five acres on the irrigation system, midway between Chino and Ontario, to Mary Laugguth of Los Angeles, for $1000. Ten acres, half-way between Pomona and Chino, to Arthur T. Miller of Pomona, at $125 an acre. Eight and one-half acres, on the irrigation system, to Wm. H. Perdue of Hollywood, for $200 per acre. This is on Euclid avenue within the city limits of Ontario, about a mile and a half south of the business center.

The company also reports the sale of a lot on Central avenue, Chino, to E. G. Schafer, manager of the Chino branch of the Blinn Lumber Company. The price was $400. Mr. Schafer will put up a bungalow.

MONROVIA REALTY ACTIVE.

More Than Thirty-six Thousand Dollars' Worth Changed Hands Last Week.

MONROVIA, March 14.—A total of more than $36,000 worth of realty has changed hands during the week, and serves to show the improvement in realty conditions in Monrovia, since the beginning of the year. Excluding subdivision purchases, it is the largest aggregate for a like period in five months and equal to the amount of all the February sales. From November until March the demand for income ranch property predominated and few transfers of city lots were made. The characteristic of the present market is the activity in home sites sales.

Sales reported for the week ending March 12 are: John Baxter, acting for H. Roberts, sold to W. D. Millard, forty acres of unimproved land in the Sierra Pacific tract, south of Monrovia, for $16,000. The same grantor also sold to H. Hildreth, ten acres of unimproved land in the same tract for $4000. The purchasers will build residences and extensive training stables, it is stated. The tract has recently been supplied with water by deep-well development, and will be planted in alfalfa.

Caverly & Heckman have sold for Frank Gilbert, to H. Musick of Los Angeles, one and one-quarter acres, improved with two small bungalows, on East avenue for a consideration of $4500.

R. B. Price sold to John T. Hughes of Tucson, Ariz., 200 feet of frontage on Highland Place, in the Idylwild subdivision. The reported consideration was $3000. The purchaser will build a residence which will cost $8000.

L. L. Taggart, acting as agent for W. C. Beringer, sold to Miss Jennie Tennyson of Los Angeles, a lot on south Myrtle avenue, for $2000. The purchaser will build a $5000 residence. John Knox sold to Charles S. Field, a banker of Geneva, Ill., one-half acre on North Myrtle avenue, for $2000. The purchaser will build a handsome winter home, which will cost $10,000. O. S. Hacox has sold to Dr. J. S. Allison, a lot on West Lime avenue for $1250. The purchaser will build a $4000 residence. C. E. Slosson has sold for John R. Frye to Ida J. Brink, a lot in the Idylwild subdivision, fronting on Highland Place for $700. The same agent sold for H. E. Bennett to Ida J. Brink, a lot in the Idylwild subdivision, on Highland Place, for $700. C. E. Slosson, for Russel Price, sold to Fred K. Thayer of Christman, Ill., two lots in Oak Park tract, having 100 feet of frontage on White Oak avenue, for $1400, and to Kemp & Culbertson, a lot in the same tract, for $650.

That purely speculative purchases are an unimportant factor in this activity is apparent from the increase of building operations. The investment in new homes during February exceeded $1000 a day. Contracts for this month have averaged $2000 per day so far.

BUYING AND BUILDING.

Burck-Gwynn Company Busy With Lots—Sales and Building Contracts.

The Burck-Gwynn Company reports a steady demand for residence property, especially in the close-in subdivisions, where the prices are slightly higher than farther out, but where there are more conveniences, such as rapid-car service, sewers, gas, electricity, churches, schools and stores. The company reports that it has not only closed numerous lot sales, but also has made building contracts with many purchasers, and is now improving the lots for the buyers.

In Burck's Golden Tract, between Vermont and Redondo avenues, Slauson avenue and Fifty-first street, the following sales have been made: To L. M. Fritz, a lot 60x130 feet, on Fifty-second street, for $875. The company now is at work on plans for a six-room modern bungalow, which will be completed within two months, and will cost $1600. A lot, 40x130 feet, on Fifty-third street, near Vermont avenue, to W. S. Graham, for $675. A lot, 40x128 feet to an alley, on Fifth-fifth street, near Vermont avenue, to F. E. Edmison, for $700. This will be improved with a five-room bungalow. A lot, 40x128 feet to an alley, on Fifty-fourth street to Elizabeth Stammer, for $700. Lot 40x128 to an alley, on Fifth-fifth street, to T. T. Todd, for $700. Lot 40x128 feet, to an alley, on Fifty-fifth street, to L. A. Bailey, for $700. Lot 40x128 feet to an alley, on Fifty-sixth street, to N. B. Edmison, for $700. This property will be improved with a five-room bungalow. Lot 40x130 feet, on Fifty-eighth street, to Roy Maas, for $650. Lot 40x170 feet to an alley, on Fifty-second street, near Vermont avenue, to E. W. Chaney, for $850. The same firm reports in addition to the above that two new five-room bungalows were started last week, making sixteen bungalows built and sold in this tract in the past three months.

The company also states that there is activity along the new boulevard

SANTA FE DEPOT AT CORCORAN. REINFORCED CONCRETE.

View of Handsome Station at Corcoran, recently completed by the Santa Fe Railroad in the new industrial town of Corcoran. The building is 240 feet long, 24 feet wide, not including platforms. It is built of reinforced concrete throughout, of a very substantial design. There are two waiting rooms, and between them is the ticket office. Eighty feet of the length is two stories high, the second floor being occupied by a station master's office, record room, storeroom, etc. There is a freight shed 200 feet long, and forty feet of open shed. C. A. Fellows was the contractor.

Clean Watches With Bread.

Perhaps the most novel use to which bread is put may be seen in the great watch factory at Elgin, Ill., where more than forty loaves of fresh bread are required each day. Supt. George E. Hunter of the watch factory is quoted as saying:

"From the earliest times in the history of watchmaking it has been the custom of watchmakers to reduce fresh bread to the form of dough. This is done by steaming and kneeding. They then use the dough for removing oil and chips that naturally adhere in course of manufacture to pieces as small as the parts of a watch. There are many parts of a watch, by the way, that are so small as to be barely visible to the naked eye. The oil is absorbed by this dough, and the chips stick to it, and there is no other known substance which can be used as a wiper without leaving some of its particles attached to the thing wiped. This accounts for the continued use of bread-dough in the watchmaking in-

TOPICS OF THE STAGE.

Mrs. Patrick Campbell is not making her first visit to California, but I think this will be her initial trip to Los Angeles. The transcontinental tour upon which she is now well embarked is her fourth in America. She has long enjoyed a position of prominence in England, and has created a number of important roles—notably the Mrs. Tanqueray the second, whom she will portray tomorrow night, at her opening performance here. Mrs. Campbell is herself a racial admixture, having an English father and an Italian mother, and is the widow of Sergt. Patrick Campbell, an Irish officer in the British army, killed at the battle of Spion Kop, in the Boer war. She is at present about 42 years of age.

"Necessity put me on the stage," said Mrs. Campbell the other day, to a writer for The Times. "Affairs had reached a point where some certain financial changes were necessary, and I was at a point where I had to decide between being a governess or an actress. I chose the latter vocation. There were two excellent reasons for my dcision; and here they are:" Mrs. Campbell opened a heavy gold locket and showed two miniature portraits. One was that of Miss Stella Campbell and the other that of Allan Urquhart Campbell. Both of these young people, the boy just beyond and the girl just emerging from her teens, are in her company on this tour.

"I walked into a dramatic agent's office," continued the actress, "handed in my name and paid my guinea, just as I had seen other girls do. The agent wrote my name in a little book, and at that juncture a man named Green—how well I remember that name!—entered the office with some immediate demands. He was organizing a company to play the provinces with a play called "Bachelors," by Robert Buchanan. I went on tour with him.

"I worked—Oh, how I worked! But, then, you see, I had two such good reasons. It was so worth while to work for them both. Every little plan and every little thought had for its ultima thule—those two reasons. I was working for my children, to give them the things they had the right to expect, and for which they looked to me. It was a joy, a pleasure, which I cannot adequately express. There was no thought for my own attainment, but success for me meant other great things for them.

"That man Green wanted a 'leading loidy,' cheap—and I was very, very cheap. I received two pounds a week. Later I appeared in pastoral plays at a raise of 10 shillings, and through my work and traveling necessities you may imagine what it meant for me to put by any money while going about and supplying my own gowns on 'two pund ten.'

"Eventually my health broke down under the strain, and when I recovered, I went to the Adelphi and played in a melodrama. Then I contracted typhoid and I was forced to rest for a long while. I eventually returned to the Adelphi, and it was there that Arthur Wing Pinero saw me and picked me for the 'title-role in 'The Second Mrs. Tanqueray.' That was my chance, and it all happened within two years of my cringing debut at the booking agent's office."

This unpretentious event was in the year 1883, and Mrs. Campbell is still carrying about with her a forlornly precious living relic of her early struggles. It is the little white dog, "Pinky-Panky-Poo," old, toothless and almost blind, yet gifted with an unrelenting canine vitality.

"This is what is left of Pinky-Panky-Poo," said Mrs. Campbell, tenderly. "She is seventeen years old now, which is about a century for her species, but she is still as faithful as in the days when we were younger in experience—and in years—together. She is still the fond companion, and if she could speak might whisper many an important histrionic secret which has been whispered to her. In those early days, I had hardly any one to confide in, save poor Pinky. She knew my ambitions, hopes and fears—and all the rest of it. She still stays in the place of honor, and will so remain until her faithful soul passes to dog heaven. The only thing that bothers me is bundling her about. She has reached the sedate age—the years of an easy cushion and one fireside; instead of the helter-skelter, hurly-burly of twentieth-century travel. But I wouldn't leave her behind; I couldn't. We have been together so long that it would be the refinement of cruelty, and I don't believe she'd live two days away from me."

Mrs. Campbell is a tremendously enthusiastic advocate of rooms at normal temperature and fresh air, and has perplexed hotel keepers all over the country by her positive orders to shut all steam heat from her apartments. Likewise her stages must not be heated, in any way, and doubtless in Southern California she will find things absolutely to her liking in this respect, for stages here are seldom artificially warmed from one year's end to the other.

Apropos, there is a humorous story in circulation concerning her experience with two Middle West managers a few weeks ago—which story, by the way, her discreetly polite press-agents seem anxious to suppress.

Mrs. Campbell, on going into the first city in question, sent a personal request to the manager of the theater, asking him to turn all heat off the stage, as artificial warmth not only enervated her, but impeded her voice, as well. The weather was cold, and the manager ignored her petition. On arriving at the theater she discovered the stage at a nice nursery temperature—whereat she promptly opened the wide stage door, kept it open for most of the performance—during a heavy snowstorm—and nearly froze out all the front rows.

At the next stop the local manager, having been warned by the published fate of his fellow, prepared his stage accordingly. Her request came in, as usual, and was ignored—also as usual. She found the stage done to a neat brown turn, and again assailed the stage door. It was not only locked, but was padlocked, with a device of jail dimensions. Not to be circumvented so, the actress stepped upon the stage, took one of her property chairs, and smashed out the two stage windows—sash and all.

Had business warranted, she would doubtless be still in New York; but we are thankful for a "fall-down" in the metropolis. Her pieces here will be for the most part repetitions of well-known plays of problems of emotions, such as "Tanqueray," "Hedda Gabler," "The Notorious Mrs. Ebbsmith," and "Magda." Her only novelties are "Electra," English translation of the noted [illegible] actress, who, with her own company, will appear here during the coming week in a repertoire of modern plays and a transcription of classic tragedy.

and "The Flower of Tamato," a one-act Japanese study which the Metropolitan critics declared to have very little merit.

Local audiences need not cultivate any anticipatory excitement regarding the appearance of Mrs. Beerbohm Tree as Mrs. Campbell's leading feminine support, for that likewise notable actress is too expensive a gem for the thrifty Syndicate to include on a star's transcontinental journey.

Nevertheless her supporting company, which is, of course, English, is spoken of as intelligent and fully acceptable. Ben Webster, her leading man, is said to be an actor of force and distinction.

A POET'S WARDROBE.

Temperamental and Varied Equipment of Costuming Possessed by d'Annunzio.

The wardrobe of Gabriele d'Annunzio shares with his new play, "The Ship," the attention of the Italian newspapers. A Roman reporter, who got an opportunity to look over his stock of clothes, reports that the poet owns seventy-two shirts, 144 pairs of colored socks, some of silk and some of thread; forty-eight pairs of street gloves and twenty-four pairs of white ones; eight umbrellas, including several of violet hue; twenty dozen handkerchiefs, 150 scarfs and neckties, ten house jackets and six pairs of slippers.

There were about a dozen hats of all shapes, evening dress coats, dinner coats, frock coats, waistcoats, fancy and plain. Trousers and shoes are described as innumerable. The purchase of new supplies is described as being a serious business, on which the poet concentrates his artistic faculties, so that nothing may belong to him which is not worthy of him. He also gives up his whole soul to the process of dressing, so that his mind may be completely at liberty when it is over in the consciousness that no mistakes have been made through discord in colors or combinations of inharmonious forms.

THE LOCAL WEEK.

Mrs. Patrick Campbell, surrounded by an all-English company, will commence a week's engagement at the Mason Operahouse tomorrow night.

Her first play will be "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray," which she will play Monday and Tuesday nights. On Wednesday night she will appear in "The Notorious Mrs. Ebbsmith," on Thursday evening as Hedda Gabler, on Saturday evening as Magda, and Friday evening and at the Saturday matinée in her double bill, which is composed of an English translation from the German version of the ancient Greek "Electra," and a Japanese play, "The Flower of Yamato," written for her by the Viscount Gaston D'Humieres.

"Cheer, Boys, Cheer!" English melodramatic novelty, will be presented at Morosco's theater for the week, commencing this afternoon.

A battle between Zulus and British of the regular members of the company and a large number of extra people.

"Cupid at Vassar," musical comedy, by Jules Murray, George Totten Smith, A. Baldwin Sloane, will be presented at the Los Angeles Theater today, with Miss Florence Gear in the principal role. Among her numbers Miss Gear will give a "pianologue," and several other specialties will be introduced.

Henry Arthur Jones's well-known play, "The Middleman," will be made use of this week by the Belasco company, with Louis Stone in the part originally played in this country by E. S. Willard, the distinguished English actor.

Following "The Middleman," the Belasco company will offer Channing Pollock's newest play, "The Secret Orchard," after which an elaborate scenic production of "The Girl of the Golden West" will be put on.

Emmet Devoy and his company of five, in the fantasy "In Dreamland," is head-lined for the Orpheum week commencing with tomorrow's matinée. Devoy plays a young New Yorker, and with the company is Hermione Shone, a well-known stage beauty, who enacts the daughter of Venus.

Two new European acts are the brothers Riego, head and hand balancers, and Kara, the juggler. The list of newcomers is completed by James F. MacDonald, a singing monologist.

Acts remaining from last week are Eleanor Falke, Petching brothers, musical novelty, the comedy act of Armstrong and Verne, and the Curzon sisters, "flying butterflies."

One of the successes of the Ulrich company last season was Edmund Day's play, "Behind the Mask," which is to be repeated this week, commencing with this afternoon's performance.

Harry von Meter will be seen as the secret service officer—impersonated last season by Charles Gunn, while Lillian Hayward, Florence Barker and Myrtle Selwyn will again have their old roles.

John Gresham, wearer of the mask, a retired millionaire, will be played by Arthur Hill.

The bill for the comin week at the Unique includes a pocket edition of the English extravaganza, "Sinbad the Sailor," Maude Beatty taking the title-role. Kate Carlson will play Mamie, Hug Metcalf the Sea Captain, and other parts are allotted accordingly.

The Unique Comedy Company, under the direction of Richard Cummings, will present one of the latter's adaptations, "The Show Girl." Cummings and Willis G. West will look after the humorous end of the act, while Katherine Merley will appear as the mother-in-law. Lola Radcliffe will play the showgirl, with a song-and-dance introduction.

Charles Frohman has secured the English rights of the new French play, "Qui Perd Gagne," which is now being rehearsed by Mme. Rejane at her own theater. "He Who Loses Gains" TRANSFORMATION.

BELASCO PLAY AS AN OPERA.

"LA FANCIULLA DELL' WEST" IS SLOWLY GROWING.

Puccini Chats About His New Music Drama of Early Days in California, Whose Premier Will Probably Be in America a Year from Next Autumn.

"Belasco, whose 'Girl of the Golden West' you are setting to music, is the author also of the play, 'Mme. Butterfly.' Perhaps it was he who proposed his other work to you as a subject for an opera." The query is from a recent Boston Transcript interview with the greatest living Italian composer.

"No, no," Puccini broke in, "the choice of 'Fanciulla dell' West' (that will be the title of the Italian version; the literal translation would be 'La Fanciulla dell' Occidente d'Oro,' a title which seemed not sufficiently theatrical for me) was quite casual. I was in New York and heard Belasco's play at the theater one evening. I saw in it the elements of a passionate opera. Then I went to London, and had a copy of the piece sent to me there. On reading it I was still more impressed, decided to set it to music. So it was in London that I made my final decision. I never changed my mind once it was made up. And then there is in Belasco's drama love, passion, and that atmosphere of freedom for which I have always kept an intimate predilection."

"Then, maestro," I said, "we are to have 'The Girl of the Golden West?'"

"Certainly. Every shadow of doubt has now disappeared. I come now from a conference with Publisher Ricordi and my collaborator, Zangarini. We have already read and discussed together two acts of the libretto, and are satisfied with them. Here and there the librettist will have to make a few sacrifices, so that the action may be developed as I feel it musically in my mind; but this is only a matter of adjustments of small account. With regard to the libretti of my operas I am most exacting. They, indeed, give me a great deal of trouble, and occupy much of my time. It is far easier, I find, to write the music for them. In composing to a libretto I do not generally take more than seven or eight months, and then in a couple of months the orchestration is completed."

"But during this period you will be working very hard?"

"On the contrary, I work for a couple of hours in the morning, then again in the evening from 10 until 1 or 2 o'clock. The presence of some intimate friend affords me a pleasant diversion, when my mind takes a brief repose. I have always had such a facility in writing music that I experience the impression of never having try of the gold fever in California, and the protagonist, Minnie, is a spirited, pure-minded being, who lives, a single woman, in the midst of a crowd of miners who frequent her tavern. Though intensely loved by the 'boys,' her heart has not yet been touched. One day, however, a stranger appears in her tavern, and Minnie is fascinated by him. Out of this meeting the action of the drama arises; it is a drama of redemption and love, exhaling the acrid perfume of the wild California landscape. The opera will run in three acts, the last, however, differing considerably from the American original. Besides that of the protagonist, there will be two big parts—one for tenor (the brigand lover?) and the other for baritone (the sheriff?) and about fifteen less important characters. The chorus, consisting entirely of men, will appear only in the last act."

"What city will have the opportunity of pronouncing the first judgment on the new opera, and when? It is said you are thinking of a foreign theater. Is that your real intention?"

"I very much hope that the 'Fanciulla dell' West' may be completed by the spring of 1909, and, if that should be possible, I do not conceal the fact that I should like it to be performed first of all in New York, because there it would certainly arouse lively interest, as the action takes place in California. Otherwise I should prefer Covent Garden, where the public has always shown great sympathy with my music, and where I should be able to count upon singers of the first rank."

Dramagraphs.

J. M. Barrie is finishing a play which will probably be produced first in New York, with Maud Adams in the leading role.

Charles Frohman is in conference by cable with Otis Skinner, with a view to presenting Mr. Skinner in a Shakespearean repertoire next season.

Lillian Russell will go to London to present "Wildfire" at the end of the current season, and she will open her New York season in this play in the autumn.

Anna Held and her company will give one performance of "The Parisian Model" in Paris, and will then go to London for an all summer run of the piece.

George Cohan's new play will be brought out in Philadelphia on April 6 at the Chestnut Street Operahouse, where he will remain for two weeks.

Ethel Barrymore has received word from her brother, Lionel, who is studying art in Paris, that he is so satisfied with his progress that there is very little likelihood of his return to the stage for some time to come.

"The New Stenographer," a musical comedy by Clifton Crawford, will be produced by Joseph Hart next season, with Carrie De Mar and Mr. Crawford as co-stars.

Virginia Harned will play a stock company engagement in St. Louis this summer, and will try a new play, with the idea of using it for her starring tour next season.

Adeline Bourne, Katherine Stewart, George Ingleton and Langhorne Burton have resigned from Olga Nethersole's company because, according to Louis Nethersole, they were dissatisfied with the number of rehearsals called.

Charles Frohman is shortly to produce "Brewster's Millions" in Paris. The play is already running in this country, England and Australia, and negotiations are going on about its production in Berlin.

The mother of Lillian Albertson arrived in New York from Los Angeles last week to see her daughter in "Paid in Full," at the Astor Theater. During the five years Miss Albertson has been on the stage her mother has never seen her act.

Eddie Foy insists on playing "Hamlet," and will appear for a week in the Shakespeare piece at a New York theater, footing the expense himself. Florence Rockwell is chosen for the role of Ophelia.

Henry Miller has given out the information that he hopes to establish a stock star company in the near future. He has plays by William Vaughn Moody, Percy Mackaye and Ridgeley Torrence.

Klaw & Erlanger and Joseph Brooks have engaged Guy Standing and Theodore Roberts, now starring jointly in "The Right of Way," for a term of years. These actors will continue in their present play next season, but a new piece has been secured for them to be put on whenever "The Right of Way" fails to attract.

Virginia Earl, who has been in vaudeville for the past few seasons, intends to retire from the stage at an early date and go abroad. An auction sale of the furnishings of her country home at Cornwall-on-Hudson, including a large library, and also her stage wardrobe, took place last week and realized a large sum.

George Arlis of Mrs. Fiske's company is looking for a play that shall be a suitable vehicle for him next season. If successful in his search he will be seen at the head of a company next fall. Should he not find a play to suit him by the end of his present tour with Mrs. Fiske, he will probably go to Europe for several months.

Alice Nielsen, it is announced, has received an offer to sing the role of Zerlina in "Don Giovanni" at the opening of the new Colon Theater, in Buenos Ayres, in May. If Henry Russell, who has Miss Nielsen under contract for three more years, will release her, she will be the only American singer to appear at that inauguration. Mme. Tetrazzini and Mme. Melba will be among the singers who will take part in the opening.

Negotiations are now under way between James K. Hackett and Mrs. Leslie Carter, which may result in the latter's appearance in a dramatized and deodorized version of "Three Weeks." Mr. Hackett purchased the rights of the play from Elinor Glynn just before she sailed for Europe. Mrs. Glynn expected at that time that Mr. Hackett would portray the character of Paul, and it is possible that he has changed his mind and consented to do this, providing he can persuade Mrs. Carter to accept a co-starring arrangement.

A friend of Maude Adams tells charmingly something of the contents of the letter that J. M. Barrie sent Miss Adams in gratitude for her gift of the little green jacket Peter Pan wore during his hardy American exploits. Mr. Barrie has hung the little coat upon the wall of the great loft which years ago he bought and turned into a workroom. "I know it stays there by day," ruminates Mr. Barrie, "as well as I know that it goes off upon strange travels by night. It pries into the drawers of my desk, into my innermost secrets—to all of which it is gladly welcome. But how it must gloat as off and away it whisks through the mystery of night to Kensington Gardens."

Writing to the Dramatic Mirror from Vienna, Anne Sutherland-Harding tells of the newest opera written by Franz Lehar, lucky composer of "The Merry Widow." "The Man With the Three Wives" has at last been brought before the public for praise or censure. It must be said that Herr Lehar had greater success when he confined him-fascinating American soprano, who will return to our local concert stage this week after an absence of several years.

Mme. Lillian Blauvelt,

aspires high but falls short. It is neither fish nor flesh. The traditional Vienna waltz, of course, has found a place, but as a whole the opera as a success is in grave doubt. The leading role is played (not sung) by a man from the Deutscher Theater in Berlin. He is Christian by name, but certainly a rank heathen when he attempts to sing. Some criticisms honor him as the man with three tones. I must say I failed to detect one." Isn't Anne the mean critic?

If a man commits some terrible crime and wishes to become obscure, to hide from the world, to lose his identity, instead of flying to some strange and uncivilized country, where he will surely be tracked, why does he not become a chorus man? suggests the Chicago Tribune, editorially. He would never be discovered. No one ever looks at a chorus man; no one knows his name; he might as well be a disembodied spirit. When an opera company comes to town, the principals and chorus girls scatter themselves over the streets and through the hotels, but no one knows or cares what becomes of the chorus man. When the curtain goes up in the evening on the production of the opera, gayly-dressed, laughing, singing chorus girls come dancing on the stage, and, completely hidden by their flying legs and waving arms, somewhere in the far background stands the chorus man. It sometimes happens that the chorus girl in posing needs a knee to sit on, and from somewhere in the back of the stage comes the knee of the chorus man; it supports her for a moment and disappears. The figure of the chorus man may be fat or lean; his voice may be tenor or bass; his hair may be blue and his eyes pink; no one knows. No one ever sees or hears the chorus man. He is as completely shrouded in oblivion as though he had been dead and buried millions of years ago.

From Saranto to Orsanto is one of the finest tours known to any Italian traveler. The road winds along a devious course, affording the most delightful, because the most unexpected, glimpses of the Mediterranean. It was this trip that John Drew's family had taken when it was decided to stop at Orsanto, where a rest might be had and where, perhaps, the delayed mails might catch them. Orsanto has, upon one of its hilltops, one of the most picturesque of Italian inns. It is conducted by a father and a son. Addressing the son, in "his best Italian," Mr. Drew ordered lunch for the party, requesting especially some fresh milk for Miss Drew. Something was muttered by the waiter as he served the lunch, but, thinking it a bit of local obscure Italian, the remark went unanswered. Then it was that Miss Drew discovered the milk to be quite warm. The waiter was recalled, and requested, once more "in Mr. Drew's best Italian," to serve some ice. The amazement of the party is better imagined than described when the waiter replied in emphatic "American-English:" "Why, boss, you might as well ask for a gold mine in this country as a chunk of ice." Father and son, it developed, had lived for years in New Orleans, had made their fortunes and returned to Italy to buy out the little inn that, from the earliest days, had always been the object of their greatest envy.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS.

Archibald Sessions, organist of Christ Church, is soon to begin a delightful European pilgrimage—one which, it is safe to say, has not been duplicated in prospect by any of our artistic travelers here for many a month.

Mr. Sessions has been granted an extended leave of absence on salary, and will spend the entire summer abroad.

He will leave Los Angeles shortly after Easter Sunday, and has passage booked from New York about May 1. Before sailing, however, he is scheduled for concert appearances in St. Louis and Buffalo, N. Y.

One of his principal objects in visiting France is to spend some time with his former instructor, Guilmant. He will also coach with Widor, and intends to return with a large amount of new material.

An item of novel interest is that he will probably bring back from Guilmant's hands a new manuscript copy of an Episcopal communion service which Guilmant has just written. It is said to be very beautiful, and is one of the very few Episcopal services which have ever emanated from the musical invention of a French writer.

Going to England, Mr. Sessions will make a study of English cathedral services with Dr. A. H. Mann of King's College Chapel, Cambridge.

It is reported—though not by the organist himself—that Mr. Sessions has a concert tour arranged through England, and that friends on the continent have sent requests for him to play at various places in France, Germany, Austria and possibly as far eastward as St. Petersburg and Moscow.

During his absence Mr. Sessions will "supply" his place at the Christ Church key-desk by Miss Georgia W. Kelsey, who is a pupil of several eastern organists of note, and of himself.

he has done an immense amount of musical work here during the past few years. His own series of Vesper concerts, which he originated at Christ Church on mid-week afternoons, has been a distinct factor in recital work, and in all more than seventy have been given. At his last concert for this year, which is to be given about April 20, he will be assisted by the Woman's Orchestra, under the direction of Harley Hamilton.

On several occasions Mr. Sessions has made concert tours in this and other States, and has, by invitation, played on the best-known organs in this country.

It is now several years since the light, crystalline voice of Lillian Blauvelt has been heard in a local concert hall, but the remembrance of her dainty singing is still keen, and her welcome, at Simpson Auditorium next Thursday evening, will doubtless be an enthusiastic one. The soprano will be assisted by Albert Rosenthal, European 'cellist of considerable note, and Miss Edith Kellog of Chicago, a promising young pianist.

Since her last appearance here Mme. Blauvelt has had many concert triumphs, and has been a feature of several New York productions, including Joe Weber's locally notable burlesque of "Lohengrin," called "The Magic Knight," in which Mme. Blauvelt impersonated Elsa, the country maiden.

Mme. Blauvelt will sing, Schubert's "Der Hirt Auf Dem Felsen," an aria from Handel's "Rodelinda;" Horn's "Cherry Ripe," Delibes's "Pourquoi," a Verdi "Bolero," and a group of English songs by Moir, Kate Vannah and Liza Lehmann.

The Gemunder Quintette will give a chamber concert at the Raymond Hotel this evening, assisted by Mrs. Walter Raymond, who will sing "Fors e lui," and Mrs. Richard T. Crane, pianist, who will play the Grieg concerto in A minor, op. 16. Mrs. Albert C. Gemunder will play the Godard concerto Romantique, for violin, assisted by the other members of the quintette.

A memorial service for the late Edward S. Fuller, well-known local organist, will be held this afternoon at the First Unitarian Church, No. 945 South Flower street. The address will be made by Dr. Burt Estes Howard, and the musical programme includes the Chopin Marche Funebre, Walter F. Skeele; Barnby's "Crossing the Bar," by the choir of the church; Vieuxtemps "Andante Religieuse," violin solo, by Oskar Seiling; Spinney's organ nocturne, W. E. Strobridge; Sullivan's "Lost Chord," the Euterpean Quartette; Neidlinger's "Life and Death," Charles F. Edson; Batiste's Funeral March, Frank H. Colby, and the Pilgrim's Chorus from "Tannhauser," by the Gamut Club.

Archibald Sessions's next organ recital will be given at Christ Church on the coming Wednesday afternoon. Maude Elizabeth Richards will be the soloist, singing Gounod's "Oh, Divine Redeemer." The organ numbers include a march by Guilmant, four seventeenth century compositions by Pachelbel, Dandrien, Pergolese and Scarlatti, and two pieces by Batiste.

Moore's Fidelia Band, at Eastlake this afternoon, will be heard in a well-arranged programme whose numbers include Thornton's Russian "Carriage Song," Suppe's "Vienna Festival" overture, the ballet music from Sullivan's "Victoria and Merrie England," Kling's "Summer Evening in the Alps," and a selection from Massenet's "Don Caesar."

SINGING ART IN DANGER?

Suggestion That European Standards of Operatic Production Are Lowering Vocal Qualifications.

One of the many causes of complaint against the New York musical critics which M. Chaliapine, the Russian basso, who has just returned to Europe after filling his engagement at the Metropolitan Operahouse, made was that at times his singing was criticised instead of his performance, as a whole, as actor as well as singer, says Musical America.

In a way this marks the difference between this country and Europe. Here we want "singing," there they look more to "general interpretation," and so continue to gladly accept artists, like the tenor Van Dyck, for instance, because of the merit of their performance, as a whole, long after their voices have been sung out.

Mary Garden in some of her interviews has touched on this, perhaps because she herself has to make up histrionically what she lacks vocally.

The prime donne of former years, like Lucca, Patti, Christine Nilsson, Kellogg, Tietjens, thought principally of the music and how to sing it beautifully.

Referring to this, W. J. Henderson, the eminent critic of the New York Sun, and more interpretation, and less and less singing, every year."

Apropos of this, a well-known conductor says:

"Modern interpretation, as far as I can see, consists in the liberal use of make-up and similar material aids to creating an impression. Singers now think more of wigs, grease paint and the details of dress than the actors do."

M. Bonci, who is not only a great singer but a great artist, declared in a recent interview in the New York Mail that the old Italian operas continue to draw because, in spite of their plots, they give opportunity for beautiful singing.

He does not deplore modern music as modern music, but because it offers so much temptation to neglect the sort of study which produces great singers. Today a natural voice and a great amount of dramatic talent supply the years of attention once given to detail and to correct placing of the voice.

Such a voice can be used in modern opera, but never in the older forms, where everything depends upon perfection in singing.

In the modern operas the orchestra hides many vocal shortcomings, while the effects called for are rather dramatic than vocal.

The thing to be protected, M. Bonci asserts, is the art of singing itself, which is in danger.

GOSSIP OF THE FOREIGN STAGE.

BY HAYDEN CHURCH.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Feb. 19.—Put on their mettle, perhaps, by the recent triumphs of their confreres in Vienna, the English composers of musical comedy are getting exceedingly "busy." The "king pin" of the lot, Leslie Stuart, of "Florodora" fame, has no less than three separate scores under way at present, while the composer of "The Orchid" and "The Runaway Girl," Ivan Caryll, has just finished one new musical piece and started work on another, and Lionel Monkton and Paul Rubens both are to be heard from again shortly. Meanwhile, an old acquaintance in this line is about to make another bid for favor in the person of Sidney Jones, who gave us "The Geisha" and "The Greek Slave" but who has put forth only one new work since the production of those two memorable pieces. This was "My Lady Molly," which was not given on the other side of the Atlantic, if one remembers correctly, though it scored a record of something like 300 performances when played at Terry's.

The "book" of Jones's new opera is by Leedham Bantock (whose "White Chrysanthemum" made a hit in the United States,) while the lyrics have been supplied by another veteran, Percy Greenbank, who was responsible for some of the most popular ditties in "The Geisha." Unnamed as yet, the piece is in two acts, and its scene is laid in Persia, the first act being placed "outside the Tortoiseshell Palace," the second act inside it. There also are to be scenes in the desert, with "real" camels crossing the stage, pictures of the slave dhows and slave markets, and all the warm color of the Orient.

The author of this opera, with whom I had a chat yesterday, is enthusiastic about his collaborator's work. "Jones really has surpassed himself," Bantock declared. "He has been working on this score for six months, and nothing he has done previously, not even 'The Geisha,' can compare with it."

If that is the case, the new musical play should be worth waiting for. It is to be produced at the Criterion Theater, as soon as Charles Wyndham's season there closes, or about the beginning of April, and if a success is scored, a special company will be sent out forthwith, first to the United States and later to Australia.

That theatrical tastes vary in England and America has been demonstrated often enough, so, perhaps, success may attend an interesting little experiment which is about to be tried by Charles Frohman. This will consist of the production in London of Austin Strong's playlet, "The Toymaker of Nuremberg," with Albert Chevalier in the name part. Mr. Frohman, it may be remembered, was enthusiastic over this piece when it was submitted to him in manuscript, but apparently it got a chilly reception on your side of the water. What London's verdict will be it will be instructive to see. Chevalier, by the way, has made a great hit in a two-act play called "The House," which is now being done at the Court Theater, the former "Temple of Shaw." The scene is laid in a "model" workhouse, and the thing is a piquant little tract against "municipal socialism," as it frequently turns out. As a pampered inmate of this institution, Chevalier is inimitable and his performance should be seen by playgoers at home.

In the case of Lena Ashwell, "dogged" appears to have "done it." Three times did this actress attempt to set up as a London manageress with a theater of her own, and as many times did ill-chosen plays work her undoing. Evidently, however, it was "three times and out" (of trouble,) for her first offering, "Irene Wycherley," scored so hard that it since has been produced in America, and "Diana of Dobson's," whose author, like Anthony Wharton, is a newcomer, got an enthusiastic reception at the Kingsway this week, and is pretty certain to cross the water in its turn. Either the actress has learned how to "pick winners," or has found somebody capable of picking them for her—at all events she is now on the crest of the wave of success, after many years of waiting and hard work.

"Diana of Dobson's" is the story of a girl in a shop who inherits a bit of money and proceeds to make ducks and drakes of it, with a result that is easily foreseen. Incidentally the first act of the new piece is rather daring—showing us the girl's dormitory at Dobson's, a big drapery shop, with the fair "assistants" preparing to retire. Diana Massingbred (Miss Ashwell) is among them, and her spirit is in rebellion against the wearing sordidness of her life and the vulgar petty tyranny that surrounds it. She has been better educated than her fellows and has all the healthy young woman's longing for luxury, ease and admiration.

As if in answer to her craving, a letter comes for Diana announcing that she has come into a small legacy of $1500 and she determines to have, for once in her life, a real good time. She will have everything that she has wanted—pretty frocks and fun, and for one whole month she will forget all about Dobson's. In the second and third acts, Diana, in her fine feathers, is staying at a hotel in Engadine, and posing as a widow. She is popular and admired by the Honorable Victor Bretherton, an impecunious aristocrat with six hundred a year. Her scale of expenditure naturally causes her to be taken for a woman of means, and Bretherton's aunt is very anxious that he should propose to her. He does, and the girl tells him the exact state of affairs.

The man is considerably disturbed and charges her with having deceived him, and this brings down on his head a very tornado of plain speaking. He is a useless idler, ready enough to sponge on a rich wife, but entirely unable to fight his own way in the everything. Diana and Bretherton really are in love with each other.

The fourth act is again strikingly original, if almost entirely theatrical. The scene is the Thames Embankment at 3 a.m. Bretherton has determined to prove that Diana is wrong, and that he can earn his living. He has for a time given up his income and has started out to make his own way. This attempt has landed him, after three months, ragged and penniless, to sleep on an Embankment bench. Here again he meets Diana, also "broke to the wide," as she puts it, and in the gray morning he again proposes to her and she accepts him. So much for the story of the play, which is acted to perfection at the Kingsway. With artistic conscientiousness rare in a "star," moreover, Miss Ashwell has taken care that every character, however small, should be put into the hands of a competent player—for example, we have Norman McKinnell, whom you saw as the old Boer in "The Shulamite," as a policeman with a few lines to say, in the Embankment scene.

The author of "Diana of Dobson's," Miss Cecily Hamilton, is a young woman whose previous record of success as a dramatist consisted of the production of one curtain raiser. Like the writer of "Irene Wycherley," Miss Hamilton sent another short piece to Miss Ashwell, who did not care for it, but invited her to submit a full-sized play. This she did at once, and acceptance was as prompt as in the case of the Wharton drama. If the actress is not deluged forthwith with the manuscripts of the unacted it will be rather surprising, but if she finds among the lot another "Irene Wycherley" or a second "Diana of Dobson's," the time she spends over them will not have been wasted.

Art and Artists.

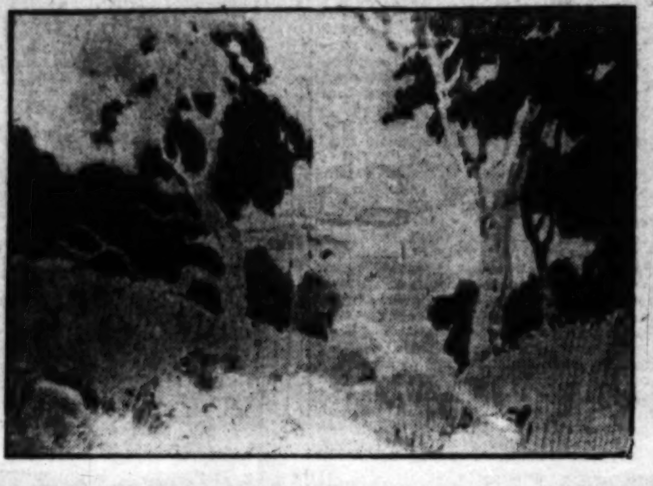
BY ANTONY E. ANDERSON.

Elmer Wachtel.

Tomorrow will usher in one of the most important—perhaps the most important—art event of the year in Los Angeles. This is the one-man exhibition that Elmer Wachtel will hold for two weeks at the Blanchard gallery. It will be the first show of the kind he has yet held in a downtown gallery. Hitherto he has confined his individual exhibitions to his studio among the picturesque hills of West Avenue 43.

If I should say that Mr. Wachtel is one of the strongest painters of landscape that the West has yet produced, I would be uttering a platitude. We all know this to be true. If I said that he is one of the strongest landscape painters of America, a country proverbially happy in its landscape artists, my statement would be equally true. His work has already begun to take rank with the very best of our time—which is, of course, tantamount to saying the very best landscape of any period.

Frederic Remington, who saw Mr. Wachtel's exhibition at Thurber's in Chicago, last spring, declared these pictures were the finest landscapes he had ever seen. And painters are not in the habit of waxing eloquent over the work of brother artists without due cause. Mr. Remington's enthusiasm impelled him to rush out and bring back a buyer. Thus "Spring," a little masterpiece of painting, enriches the collection of an appreciative Chicago man. It should have remained in Los Angeles. Personally, I regret its loss most keenly, for it gave me many delightful quarter hours when it hung in the artist's own studio.



The Portal of the Valley.

From a painting by Elmer Wachtel.

Undoubtedly, if a landscape painter has the "stuff" in him, California is the one place in the world for him to pitch his umbrella. Nowhere else that I know of can he find such an infinite variety of all that is picturesque and beautiful. Nowhere else are mountains and ocean, hill and valleys, sunshine and shadow, arranged with such surprising care for the absolute convenience of the artist. Sublimity crowds his vision on the right, grandeur rises in dazzling splendor at his left. And the tender intimacies of grassy, wooded hollows are found in prodigal profusion everywhere. The landscapist has no need to hunt very far afield for subjects in California—and especially in Southern California.

Few artists are able to compass the sublimity of a brooding mountain or a dreaming hill on a few square feet of canvas. The most of them, striving feverishly with might and main, only succeed in attaining to the theatrical—which is always dangerously near the ridiculous. The thought was there, perhaps, but the performance fails. Never yet have Milton and Michael Angelo had really successful imitators.

The landscape of California is sometimes awesome in its grandeur and sublimity. Many of our painters have felt this inspiring quality, and a few have tried to put it into their pictures. Or rather, to speak with absolute exactness, they have not tried at all, but have gotten it there, be it little or much, because their love and worship have been humble and sincere. Their mastery of tremendous technical difficulties was almost an inspiration in itself—even though it came through long and painstaking labor. For the true artist is first and last and all the time a worker, notwithstanding the popular superstition about his ease of days. The true poet, whether he uses paint or a pen, loafs and invites his soul only when the divine fire burns very low. Always, the dreamer must be feeding that sacred flame. Standing and waiting, he also serves. If true to his trust, he will not be kept waiting too long.

Elmer Wachtel, then, has been a hard and earnest worker, loving nature with his whole soul, studying her, painting her, early and late. He did not reach his present preëminence as a painter at a single bound. He mounted upward by degrees, slow but sure. He fought dragons of circumstance that would have made a less determined man quail and turn back to the road of easier success. But he saw ever before him an ideal of art that would not be denied. He kept on—and won.

Some of the titles of the twenty-eight canvases, a number of them masterpieces, which Mr. Wachtel will show next week, are interesting in themselves, because they give us an inkling of his ideal. "In the Shadow of the Cañon," "The Majesty of the Hills," "The Monarch of the Hills," "The Solititude of the Hills." The grand and the sublime are found in these pictures, with many lesser beauties of tone, color, harmony of lines, delicacy of sentiment.

I will speak of a few of the individual pictures at more length in next week's Art and Artists. The exhibition is free to the the public. No one should miss seeing these unusual canvases.

Mr. Brown's Exhibition.

this month and will continue till the tenth of April. All the pictures are in oils, and are for the most part scenes of Southern California and the Grand Cañon.

Mr. Brown's work is now so well known to the art-loving public of Los Angeles that comment is probably superfluous. We all know that he is an artist of excellent technical training, a close student of nature, a conscientious worker. In his best work his standard is high. A more judicious weeding out of the second-best canvases for the present exhibit, however, would have raised its artistic value to Mr. Brown's usual standard. A number of the pictures are frankly painted to sell.

Among the pictures which have been seen before, both here and in Pasadena, are "Harvest by the Sea," "Sunset After Rain," "Where Spring and Winter Meet," "Moonrise at Sunset," and "Tranquillity"—all examples of the artist's work at his highest and best. It is a pleasure to be able to linger over these canvases once again. "Tranquillity" gives us a sunset on the Pacific as seen from the shore at Laguna. It is perfect in tone and feeling. The long receding wave is painted with wonderful dexterity and understanding. This, and the "Moonlight at Laguna," another marine, in cool tones of green, are among the finest things Mr. Brown has ever painted.

"Santa Anita Wash" is one of the newer pictures. There is good painting of mountains in it. It has a yellowish-green sky. The sunlight falls hotly and blindingly on the alkali dust of the riverbed. "Sycamores" also gives the brilliant light of summer, this time on red-leafed sycamores that are relieved against distant mountains. There are bluish shadows in the foreground. This picture, skillfully painted, renders certain aspects of our long summer with absolute truth.

In "Lupin Fields," a tender haze rests over the vast expanse of purple blossoms. The picture is the record of a mood of dreamy introspection. "A California Pastoral" is very different in sentiment. It is felt in a big, simple way. Scattered sheep graze on a sunlit slope. There is an old gray-green oak to the right. Long shadows fall across the foreground. The earth shows bare in patches, where the sheep have wandered. The distant mountains dream under a greenish sky flecked with floating white clouds.

The exhibition, which is free to the public, is held at the Bentz gallery, No. 49 South Raymond avenue, Pasadena.

International Studio.

The International Studio for March opens with a profusely illustrated article by Selwyn Brinton on the art of the versatile Emil Fuchs in sculpture, medals, and portrait painting. Exceedingly interesting and valuable to our painters of today is the paper on "Raeburn's Technique," with its many beautiful illustrations, by W. D. McKay, R.S.A.

Special articles are devoted to "A Flemish Painted, Franz Courtens," by Fernand Knopff; "A Danish Painter, Peter Severin Kroyer," by George Brochner. Mr. Kroyer's portrait of Bjornson, reproduced in the studio, is especially noteworthy for its dignity and strength. Another special article is that by Alfredo Melani on "An Italian Luminist, Carlo Fornara."

J. Nilsen Laurvik reviews the annual exhibition of the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, while T. M. W. writes of the eighth annual exhibition of the International Society.

A paper on the new color photography, by Mr. Laurvik; some account of recent designs in domestic architecture, studio talk, the lay figure, and the concluding chapter on "Practical Bookbinding," round out a very fine number of the magazine.

ART NOTES.

An exhibition of paintings by C. Dormer Robinson of San Francisco has just opened at the Kanst gallery, No. 642 South Spring street. It will continue for some weeks. Mr. Robinson shows oils and pastels, ten of the one and twenty-three of the other.

The exhibition of water colors which Marion Kavanaugh Wachtel held at Steckel's gallery closed yesterday. A number of these extraordinary good pictures were sold—though all would have been taken if picture buyers really understood their true value.

John W. Nicoll will show some of his recent landscapes and marines at the Hotel Maryland, beginning next week.

The annual exhibition at the Carnegie Institute Pittsburgh, will open on April 30.

Yamanaka & Co., No. 254 Fifth avenue, New York, are showing a comprehensive collection of Japanese color prints.

The National Academy of Design, New York, opened its eighty-third annual exhibition on March 13. The exhibition closes April 13.

The Copley Society, Boston, opened its exhibition at No. 198 Clarendon street on March 10.

PHOTOGRAPH RECORDS BY STAGE FAVORITE

Phyllis Dare,

an actress who devotes to charity the sum of $2000 she [illegible] tographing pictures for her admirers.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Feb. 15.—People in the United States have very little idea of the intense loyalty to their favorites which is one of the best characteristics of the English theatergoers. Once enshrined in their hearts a player is assured of a generous support the rest of his or her career. No better evidence of this intense devotion could be adduced than the story I have just heard of Phyllis Dare, one of the most popular of the younger actresses here. Although she will not be out of her teens for several years yet she has already a large following that guarantees her an immediate success whenever she appears. She it was who took Edna May's part in "The Belle of Mayfair" when that independent American actress quit in a huff because [illegible] was given to Camille Clifford, the erstwhile "Gibson Girl," who was in the same show. Phyllis Dare is now playing in pantomime in one of the provincial towns but will shortly come to London as a full-fledged star.

The story I hear is that, like many other popular favorites here, she has been charging a slight fee for attaching her signature to the many thousands of post cards which are sent to her for that purpose by her admirers. During the year just passed she collected in this way a little short of $2000, all of which she has devoted to relieving poor families which have come to her notice. Some of these fees are said to be as large as $1.25, while others are as small as 6 cents. There is no fixed figure for the prized signature, the young actress using her own judgment in fixing the price in accordance with the applicant's circumstances.

Now in the United States that story would carry with it a very strong suspicion of the press agent's imagination, but I happen to know that it is true. The amount represents thousands of admirers of the little girl scattered all over Great Britain, some of whom have seen her but once in their lives, but who swear by her for the rest of her stage life and who eagerly watch for new post cards of her.

The picture post card mania has reached enormous proportions in England. Some enthusiastic collectors with money to spare even boast of collections running to 6000 and more cards. The public taste inclines to actors and actresses much more than in the United States, and many collectors leave standing orders with their dealers to supply them with new cards immediately upon publication.

Although Phyllis Dare is a big favorite she is by no means the most popular actress with these collectors. That honor must be accorded to Gabrielle Ray, a young actress who appears under George Edwardes's management and who is now playing in the London production of "The Merry Widow." One firm of picture post card makers has issued no less than 300 different poses of this actress and they are still turning out others as fast as they can get her to pose.

Phyllis Dare comes second in the number of poses of her that are on the market. About 140 different ones are now scattered about Great Britain. Her older sister, Zena Dare, a great favorite with the "Johnnies" of London, and now starring with Seymour Hicks, Charles Frohman's London "prodigy," presses her closely for honors, for she looks at one in 130 different ways from the shop windows. Not content with [illegible] two sisters, the industrious post-card publishers have invaded their home and snapped their mother and father and brother, so that the combined family is responsible for 500 cards.

Pyle, I. B. Winslow, Misses Ransom, Greenwood, Ross, Dixon, Randall, McCord, Wood, Halsey, Ornbaum and Sabin.

Mrs. Robert T. Vandervort was the hostess at a prettily appointed bridge party Monday evening at her home on East Colorado street. Tables were arranged for twenty players and handsome prizes were awarded.

Mrs. Joseph Hixon of Arlington Drive gave two charmingly appointed luncheons this week. The first was on Monday and was complimentary to her mother, Mrs. Copeland. On this occasion purple iris was combined with daffodils in ornamenting the table and the guests were Mmes. William R. Staats, H. Page Warden, Frederick Hanchette, Frank Hixon, George Hixon, Irwin and Miss Irwin.

Thursday Mrs. Hixon entertained Mmes. Lloyd Macy, Harrison I. Drummond, Robert A. Rowan, Charles Crans Perkins, John B. Miller, Robert Pitcairn, George Hixon, John Howard Dews, Walstein and Frederick Hanchette.

Miss Madeline Winthrop Barnes was hostess, Thursday afternoon, at a delightful bridge party, at her home on South Grand avenue. It was to her house guest Miss Margaret Whidden. The drawing-room was gay with jonquils and the prizes were unusually pretty, being daintily made silk bags for holding bridge set and score. Those present were Mesdames Gresham, Henry Vilas, Misses Florence Foy, Gladys Gardner, Irene Grosse, Dierrson, Ruth Miller, Genevieve Stehman, Louise Austin, Cora Auten, Cordelia Stimson, Ethel and Mabel Love and Marjorie Bolt.

The informal tea which is given every Thursday at the Valley Hunt Club was a large function this week and the tea serving was preceded by bridge, several tables being arranged in the card room and upon the terrace. Mrs. H. Sinclair presided over the tea table and among those assisting were Mrs. John W. Hugus, Mrs. J. B. Durand and Miss Bates. There were seventy members present and a number of outside guests.

Mrs. H. H. Trowbridge of Palmetto Drive entertained this week with two small bridge parties, one on Tuesday and the other on Thursday. Upon each occasion tables were arranged for twelve players and pretty prizes were awarded.

Mrs. Lee Knight of South Grand avenue was the hostess Saturday at a small bridge party. Tables were provided for eight players only.

The Valley Hunt Club was the scene of a brilliant gathering Saturday evening when eighty members enjoyed the lecture given by Arthur Jerome Eddy upon his personal reminiscences of the great artist, Whistler. A collation was served later.

The members of the Country Club enjoyed another of their delightfully informal dinner dances Saturday evening.

Mrs. Fred Nash of South Madison avenue gave an elaborate luncheon Tuesday in honor of her guest, Mrs. Isaac Ross of Cohoes, N. Y. Violets were used effectively in the ornamentation of the table, and the motif was carried out with corsage bouquets of violets and violet tulle and accessories. In the living-room white roses and asparagus ferns were used for adornment. After the luncheon the guests enjoyed five hundred and prizes were awarded the winners. Those present were: Mmes. Holloway I. Stuart, H. H. Goodrich, R. L. Whitmore, Augustus Gaylord, Charles C. Bragdon, William Douglas Turner, S. P. Sanborn, Carrie Goodrich and Misses Ransom and McHenry.

Mrs. Henry Schlauderman of North Marengo avenue has issued invitations for a musicale on Tuesday afternoon.

Mrs. Harrison I. Drummond Tuesday afternoon gave a bridge party in honor of Mrs. Thomas Curtin of Denver. Four tables were provided, and an Empire fan was awarded the winner at each table. Those participating in the game were: Mmes. C. H. Tulloch, Thomas J. Orbison, Frank O. Wood.

New Discovery Cures Eczema and Eradicates Minor Skin Troubles Over Night.

A few months ago the dispensers of poslam, the new discovery for the cure of eczema, decided to allow the druggists of the country to handle it. Previous to that time it could only be obtained direct from the laboratories.

Since this change in the method of distribution, poslam has met with the most phenomenal success of anything introduced to the drug trade in the last 30 years. All leading druggists, including the Owl Drug Co. in Los Angeles, are now carrying the special 50-cent size recently adopted, also the $2 jar.

This great success is not surprising when it is remembered that, in eczema cases, poslam stops the itching with first application, proceeds to heal immediately, and cures chronic cases in a few weeks. In minor skin troubles, such as pimples, blackheads, acne, herpes, blotches, rash, etc., results show after an overnight application. Experimental samples of poslam are sent to anyone by mail free of charge, by the Emergency Laboratories, 32 West Twenty-fifth street, New York City.

Charles F. Glore, Mrs. Ernest Everez and Mrs. Charles Fernald, guests of Harold Swift, are sojourning at the Metropole.

Claremont.

ON SATURDAY evening the gymnasium had been beautifully decorated by the sophomore girls in their class colors for the annual dove ball. The programmes contained a great variety of dances, from the "Rye Waltz" to the "Three-Step." A clever one-act farce, "An Interrupted Proposal," was presented by several of the sophomore girls in the intermission. There was a large attendance, both of college girls and their out-of-town guests.

Miss Grace Thomas of Pasadena has been visiting friends in town the past week.

Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Parsons, Jr., gave a dinner party Monday in honor of their twenty-eighth wedding anniversary. The guests were Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Parsons, Sr., A. J. West, Miss Mabel West, Prof. and Mrs. D. H. Colcord, Miss Colcord, Miss Miriam Colcord and Mrs. George A. Gates.

Alfred Robertson of Montreal, Can., is a guest of his uncle, William Ferguson. Mr. Robestson is on his way to Vancouver.

Mrs. S. M. Kinney has been entertaining as her guest Mrs. J. W. Deitrick of Riverside.

Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Pratt, who came over from Riverside on Wednesday by automomible, were guests of Prof. E. C. Norton and Prof. A. D. Bissell, classmates of Mr. Pratt at Amherst.

Silver Threads

Among the gold! What a story they tell of fast passing years, and youth and strength. It is woman's duty, for her own sake, and for her husband's and family's sake, to retain her youthful appearance. Her influence, happiness, courage, and health depend very largely upon her personal appearance.

It gives us great pleasure to know that happiness has been restored to many homes by our timely assistance.

You need not fear the "silver threads." Nature has kindly provided a simple, cleanly, and perfectly harmless method of restoring gray hair to its beautiful natural color.

MRS. NETTIE HARRISON'S

Four-Day Hair Restorer

Is a harmless preparation that restores gray or faded hair to its natural color without any inconvenience or disagreeable after effects. Not a dye, cleanly to use; free from sediment or sticky matter. Price, $1 a bottle. All druggists.

If you have any defects of skin, scalp or general health, write me. Correspondence solicited.

We Promise Only What We Can Fulfil

Tailored Suits of Refined Style

From Best Makers, at Remarkable Price Savings

Our New York buyer has sent us the plums only. A varied assortment of women's suits of highest class. Garments of rare elegance, both in style and material. The cloths, imported weaves in plain and novelty effects, and the cut in fashions most desired this season. The suits shown at the left were sketched from models just received. Instead of saying they are worth forty-five to sixty dollars, we prefer to say, judge the values yourself and do not buy unless you consider them most desirable at Monday's price.

Thirty-Five Dollars

During our opening week the people of this city and vicinity so thoroughly commended themselves to us by their prompt and hearty indorsement of our methods, that we feel like doing everything in our power to merit a continuance of the many favors showered upon us. We know you appreciate:

Courteous treatment by experienced salespeople. Fittings given by one most expert in the work. Alterations made in a light, sanitary work room by skilled mechanics. Garments finished and delivered promptly at the hour promised. All this we give, and by so doing gain your confidence—and confidence is the backbone of a solid business.

Forsythe Ideas For Women

TO the woman who wants a garment that is perfection in style, in material, in tailoring, in workmanship—the name "Forsythe" is a guarantee of satisfaction.

Our Spring Models in Forsythe Suits, Coats and waists evidence this. They are authoritative so far as style is concerned—the standard by which tailored garments are judged. And every detail of fabric, coloring and finish expresses that smartness and perfection in design and accomplishment which characterize Forsythe garments.

One of the latest arrivals is an exquisite white serge suit, with collar and cuffs hand embroidered in oriental designs. We have many others just as individual. Visit our Women's Department.

A Skin of Beauty Is a Joy Forever

DR. T. FELIX GOURAUD'S
Oriental Cream
OR MAGICAL BEAUTIFIER

GIVES A FASCINATING AND REFINED COMPLEXION

It is the duty of every woman to preserve her beauty, and even the most beautiful must protect their complexion. A faultless complexion, sweet, pure, and wholesome is something every woman desires and which can be readily obtained by using GOURAUD'S ORIENTAL CREAM. This well known preparation has been highly recommended by physicians, actresses, singers, and women of fashion for over half a century. It renders the skin like the softness of velvet, leaving it clear and pearly white.

GOURAUD'S ORIENTAL CREAM cures Skin Diseases, relieves irritation, soothes and invigorates the skin, beautifies and improves the complexion and cannot be surpassed when preparing for evening attire.

THE SUBSTITUTIONIST.

[Success Magazine:] The poor but …ear-honest young grocer had sold a …ill of goods to the testy old gentle…man, whose daughter he intended to …ener with his hand and shop, and for …he first time in his business career he …was troubled at being obliged to palm …ff "Blink's Codfish" for Jink's," and "U-needa-scrub" when "U-auto-wash-with Soap" was distinctly specified. In …he stony silence with which his stock …rguments were received, he felt a …otally new sensation which must have …een embarrassment.

That evening when the suitor called, …e was met at the door by the old gen…leman, who ushered him into the par…or and, ignoring all hints about Miss Virginia, persisted in eulogizing his …ife's elder sister. The young man …dgeted in his chair, and as he saw …o way to lead to the momentous thing …e had to say, decided to blurt it out …nd have done with it. Had not Vir…ginia said archly, "ask papa—if you …are," and was not "nerve" his prin…cipal asset?

"Mr. Grouch," he began, "I have …ome to ask your consent to my m-m-marrying your daughter."

"I'm sorry," responded the old man pleasantly, "but Virginia's out just at present. In fact, there has been so little demand for her lately that we have decided not to keep her in the future."

"Wh-what!"

"But we have plenty of her Aunt Maria on hand," he continued, persuasively. "She's only forty-seven, and has two sets of teeth that cannot be told from the genuine a little way off. I'll admit that she's not as well known for beauty or vivacity as Virgie, but then she has substantial virtues that need no advertising; for instance, she makes better rag carpets than any other woman in the county."

"B-but I don't want any rag carpets; I prefer——"

"She's very thrifty and saving," the father continued, ignoring the interruption, "and she won't cost you half as much to keep. Suppose you take Aunt Maria; I know you'll like her better than Virginia when you get used to her. Although she's not just what you asked for, I can assure you she is in many respects superior. Just to introduce her, I'll make a special offer. I'll pay for the license and settle for the preacher to get her off my hands. You'll find she's not only just as good as Virginia but considerably

PETTICOAT POLITICIANS.

Win Recruits by Means of Frocks and Feasts.

Social Climbers' Schemes to Attract Peers.

Wily Lipton Again Dodges Matrimonial Net.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

LONDON, March 1—With the opening of Parliament political hostesses resumed their functions of dispensing hospitality and smiles in the interests of their respective parties. Petticoat politicians are far more numerous here than in America, I believe, and they play the game differently. Their motto is "Feed the beasts," the beasts being the men, of course. Bounteous repasts, served by matrons of high social distinction, are often found to be more effective than masculine oratory in strengthening partisan loyalty and winning over desirable recruits.

In this species of campaign the Conservatives have all the best of it. They possess an overwhelming majority in the House of Lords. Most of the wives of the hereditary legislators naturally accept the political faiths of their husbands, though there are a few notable exceptions.

Peculiarly enough these exceptions are not American peeresses. The latter are all wedded to Conservative noblemen and are the staunchest supporters of hereditary distinctions, and all the other things which differentiate a monarchy from a republic. Most of the coroneted dames are Conservatives, and with political hostesses titles count for much. They make it easier for a Conservative to get into society with the big "S" than for a Liberal, and where a man has a wife who is ambitious to meet a duchess or a countess, that consideration is not unlikely to be the determining factor in deciding what party he shall support. Even if the House of Lords were abolished, or its political powers greatly curtailed, the peeresses would still count as valuable political assets.

The Liberals cannot muster a single duchess or marchioness to entertain in their behalf, while the Conservatives can count on half-a-dozen of each—and more at a pinch.

The mainstay of the government in playing the society game is an American woman, to whom I have frequently referred in this correspondence—Mrs. "Lulu" Harcourt, wife of the First Commissioner of Works, who is a Cabinet Minister. If her husband were only a lord she might accomplish a great deal more, but all that a woman can do who lacks a title she may be depended on to perform. She is in great fettle for the fray, and, like the wise woman she is, has provided herself with some wonderful frocks straight from the Rue de la Paix, and new jewels from the Rue de Rivoli. I hear of a white satin princess frock cut with the still popular empire waist, that sounds entrancing. Stiff, rather hard fabrics are again "the thing" in Paris, but Mrs. Harcourt has had the good taste to have hers trimmed with point de Venise and the buttons which adorn the bodice are of brilliants, with pearl centers.

She has extraordinary popularity with her husband's party and never did a woman in so brief a time manage to get so much influence over certain members of the Cabinet. She is very successful in securing appointments for her friends. It is something to her credit that she accomplished all this by thoroughly "straight" means. One need not go back very far to recall the amazing manner in which a fair society woman managed things of the kind, both with the War Office and other departments of the government. There used to be a story that a well-known countess got "places" for half her following of young men from a veteran general by the kisses she gave him. She used to count out most carefully to him the compensations. Small posts she repaid with five, bigger ones with ten, and really handsome ones fetched as many as twenty.

With Mrs. Lulu Harcourt it is a question of the gift of the gab and a certain tenacity and determination of purpose which are bound to succeed. Besides it is her boast that she only recommends "deserving" individuals.

There are plenty of rich "climbers" who calmly take up a "Court Guide" or a "Peerage," and, making a list of names therefrom, calmly proceed to issue invitations to their distinguished owners. Sometimes no notice is taken of such letters; occasionally people accept for the fun of finding out what "the show" will be like; again, hard-up peers and peeresses are sometimes thankful to rub shoulders with rich people, however vulgar, who can give really good "spreads," and they and their hostess become fast friends. The climber thus gets her foot well on the social ladder. Much discretion has to be exercised in the issuing of such invitations. Evidently the rich American who sent the Duchess of Roxburghe a card for a dinner party possessed neither tact nor common sense, and knew nothing at all of the character of her countrywoman. The Duchess is now more exclusive than royalty itself. She has appropriated all the traditions of the Roxburghe family, and gone them "one better." When she received the invitation, it was placed in another envelope by her secretary and returned with the words: "There must be some mistake."

In the telegram which the King sent to Consuelo, Duchess of Manchester, on hearing of the death of Mrs. Ynaga, he said: "I think to your mother, more than to any other American woman, was due the success of the American woman in England. Her charm was inexpressible, and her picturesqueness, especially when attended by her old negress, was delightful."

Mrs. Ynaga was really the first woman from across the Atlantic to take British society by storm. Even she, in her own well-bred way, knew how to advertise herself. Her old negress attendant was her trump card. In the most elaborate and distinctly gaudy draperies, the black woman went about with her. I am told they used to be almost mobbed in the street and when they arrived in private houses Mrs. Ynaga used to be asked to bring in her "slave" that the smart crowds of those days might admire her. It was said that it was this personal attendant who gave to Queen Victoria the idea of having Indian servants in her suite. Indeed in the best set in England the black servant became "the fashion" and was utilized as a butler, footman, "tiger," or page, and considered eminently decorative. King Edward killed the boom when he came to the throne, as one of the first things he did was to pension off all his late mother's Indian attendants and

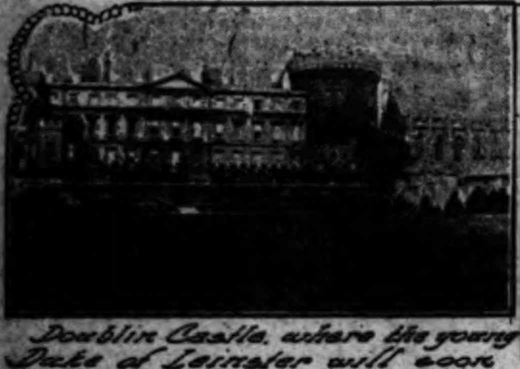
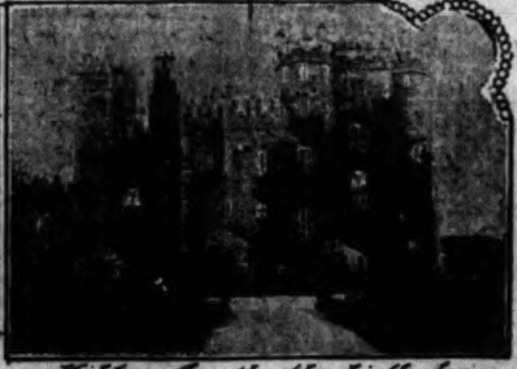
[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

LONDON, March 1.—American girls, or at least those among them who are ambitious to wear the strawberry be-leaved and be-tassled golden coronet of a British duchess, must hurry up. For out of the twenty-seven dukes of Great Britain there are now only two bachelors of a marriageable age. Both are such great partis that the British matron surely will snap them up for her daughters if the fair Americans do not watch out.

The Duke of St. Albans, descendant of the illegitimate son of King Charles II, and the actress, Nell Gwynne is one of these. And now there comes the Duke of Leinster, known as "The Little Duke," because of his long minority.

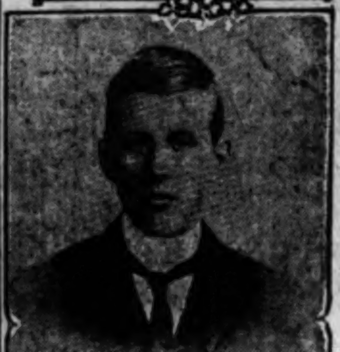


Dublin Castle, where the young Duke of Leinster will soon take up his residence.



Kilkea Castle, the birthplace of the young Duke of Leinster.

Carton House, the Magnificent seat of the Duke of Leinster, Maynooth, County Kildare, Ireland.



His grace of Leinster, Premier Duke, Premier Earl, and Premier Marquis of Ireland.

He succeeded to the title fourteen years ago, and the first day of this March will see him of age, summoned to take his seat in the House of Lords, launched on the gay world of society, and beginning to look around for a wife. Besides his great position as a duke he has also the enviable post of Master of the Horse to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, the Earl of Aberdeen to which he was appointed last month.

This position is a premier one as far as precedence goes in the Royal and viceregal households. The Duke's acceptance of it is an indication that he is a Liberal and Home Ruler in politics and also shows that he is in training to fill the viceregal throne of Ireland, which so many of his ancestors have held.

Should any American girl become his wife she would take precedence of every American woman of title at the Court of St. James, not because of being a duchess, but because of her husband's Mastership of the Horse. The Duke has had a glimpse at the American girl already, for he traveled in the United States for several months.

IS RICH ENOUGH.

There are in England at present three American reigning duchesses and several dowagers. But these brought a good array of dollars to revive the drooping strawberry leaves. "The Little Duke" needs no dollars. He has them a-plenty. He has, moreover, honors galore. First and foremost, his family has been, for nearly a thousand years, to the fore among the powerful nobles of Britain. "The Little Duke" is head of the Geraldines, the Premier Duke, the Premier Marquis and the Premier Earl of all Ireland. When the King of England sends a summons to Parliament addressed to "Our right trusty and entirely beloved cousin, the Most High, Noble and Potent Prince, Maurice Fitzgerald," he will be using a name known in the four quarters of the world. There are thousands of Fitzgeralds, yes, of Maurice Fitzgeralds—in Ireland, in England, in the United States an elsewhere—and they all their hats to the chief of their great family, the "Little Duke" of Leinster.

His Honor, Judge Fitzgerald, who presided over the first Thaw trial, is a Geraldine, and one of the distinguished American members of their powerful Irish clan.

"The Little Duke" is the sixth of that title, the sixth Marquis and the sixth Viscount, the third Baron Kildare, the twenty-fifth Earl of Kildare, and the thirty-first Baron of Offaly by tenure. He has two brothers, Lord Desmond Fitzgerald, now 20, and Lord Edward, 16 years old; a sister, the first born of the family, died in infancy.

Like all his ancestors, the Duke is of delicate physique. The Fitzgeralds, at least, the heads of the family, nearly all died young. His mother, Lady Hermione Wilhelmina Duncombe, daughter of the Earl of Feversham, died when he was 9 years old, when he had been Duke but two years. His father died when only 42. And so the history of the family runs—a brilliant but a short life. The infusion of virile American blood would be a godsend to the Geraldines. There is neither a drop of royal nor American blood in the long annals of the family. The only American connections are by marriage. A cousin by marriage of the Duke's, through the Grahams of Netherby, was Miss Jessie Lowe of Savannah, Ga., and one of the "Little Duke's" maternal ancestors, the famous Pamela, wife of the equally famous Irish patriot, Lord Edward Fitzgerald, married as a second husband, United States Consul Pitcairn of Hamburg, Germany.

The Duke has been most carefully brought up. Although an orphan, his family in its thousand years of honors won, has founded more than a score of the noblest families in the British peerage, and he has had no lack of attention from his numerous kinsmen. His trustees, also relatives, have managed excellently his estates. The Duke's London residence, No. 6 Carlton House Terrace, was some years ago, sold to Mrs. Mackay of New York and California, for a huge sum. Kilkea Castle, County Kildare, where the Duke was born, was also sold, and fetched, with its big estate, $6,000,000.

Carton, one of the most beautiful estates in Great Britain, and a house in Lower Dominick street, Dublin, are now the Duke's houses. Carton is just outside Maynooth, in the County Kildare. It is in Maynooth where the Irish Theological Seminary for priests is situated.

ENORMOUS ESTATE.

There are 11,000 acres of an estate surrounding the mansion. The main entrance is right in the town of Maynooth, and the drive to the house is three miles long through beautiful wooded hills and dales. There are four great waterfalls in the park, many lakes, and a big garden of bamboos. Trees, for years, have been a hobby with the Dukes of Leinster, and the "Little Duke" can wield as good an ax as ever did Gladstone.

His mansion opens on one side into a courtyard, the other sides look out on the park and terraced pleasure From Our Life" Queen Victoria tells happily of her visit to the place, discusses Irish jigs, the Irish bagpipes and the jaunting car.

It is only lately that the "Little Duke" has taken up residence at Carton. He lived in infancy at Kilkea. It was there his mother, known as "the lovely Duncombe," achieved the distinction of going to bed a Marchioness and waking up a Duchess, for the fourth Duke died during the night.

When the present Duke became an orphan, to use an Irishism, he secured three "mothers." This trio is composed of his aunts, Lady Cynthia Graham, Lady Ulrica Duncombe, and Lady Helen Vincent, the latter well known in the United States—all beautiful and all leaders of society.

grounds. The banqueting hall, or dining-room, as it now is called, is the feature apartment of the house. It is of immense length, capable of dining 500 people. The ceiling is concave, with basrelief of vines picked out in gold. It is supported by huge marble pillars. There are fourteen full-length windows opening onto the terrace. The furniture is mahogany, gilded and covered with red morocco. There are two great fireplaces with marble chimney pieces, and on the walls hang a hundred or more magnificent paintings of ancestors.

In the park is a curious cottage, all built of shells to commemorate Queen Victoria's visit to Carton. It is now used as a museum. Family relics are there by the hundred. In "Leaves

From governesses the Duke graduated to tutors always with a maximum of out-door life, for the White Plague the bane of the Geraldines, had him in its dreaded grasp. Later he was sent to Melgrave Castle, where the Reverend the Marquis of Normanby, kept school and taught the scions of wealthy families. Later still the "Little Duke" went to Eton. But his studies were much interfered with by the council of physicians, whom his "mothers" and trustees had engaged by the year specially to watch over him. This council sent him on many sea voyages, either in a specially chartered yacht or else on a regular passenger ship. It was one of these sea voyages to the West Indies and thence to New Orleans and Galveston, which landed the "Little Duke" in the United States. He tried the dry air of arid Texas plains, the pine-lands of Mississippi and later the mountain air of Colorado. He traveled incognito with his tutor, guardian, physicians and valet. The party carried no handles to its names. It was noticed by Americans merely as a bunch of quiet, well-bred, wealthy English tourists and the delicate boy attracted no particular notice.

In the United States, in Canada, in Australia, in South Africa, in Japan has the Duke sought for health. It is believed that he has now found it, perhaps in the United States, for his last year of minority finds him a sturdy strippling, over six feet in height, able alike to study hard and to take part in athletics.

JAPAN AND HER POTTERY.

Scientific Manner in Which Plate Making Is Being Established.

[New York Evening Post:] The Japanese government, to make a single new plate, is expending large sums of money and employing scores of technical and chemical experts. This plate is not a huge steel affair which, as armor on battleships, will resist the high explosives and hardened shells of other nations.

It is possibly an eighth of an inch thick and so fragile that a shot from a bean shooter would smash it into fragments, and yet the making of the plate, Japan believes, is all that interferes with her supremacy in one of the greatest commercial lines.

The plate is not in any sense a secret—millions of them are made openly at Trenton and in New York State and turned out by thousands of tons in Germany. It is simply the ordinary chinaware dinner plate, from which most of the eighty million Americans eat their daily meals.

Yet Japan, although her potteries can turn out the most delicate of eggshell porcelains, the most beautiful of glazes, the most shapely of vessels decorated with exquisite coloring, is baffled by the ordinary kitchen plate. The scientists of Japan know just what the plate is made of, how its glaze is applied, how it is fired and decorated. All that they lack, they think, is the right sort of earth in Japan to duplicate it at a price which would give them the foreign market.

And the Japanese government because it believes that the right sort of clay can be found, or made by combining known pottery material, has followed its usual course of establishing government pottery schools and elaborate clay laboratories.

When Japan wants a particular thing in an industrial line she relies to obtain it almost wholly on one method—the industrial education of her own people to make that thing. First, the Japanese government sends experts all over the world. These experts, often Japan's leading technologists, serve as mere laborers or as unskilled craftsmen in factories of Europe and America, simply to gain information about industrial methods.

The next step is to use this information in the government industrial schools and, with this knowledge as a beginning, to encourage the students and scientists to go ahead in the national shops and laboratories and discover for themselves improvements which trade rivals have not hit upon.

The clay problem in its application to making common crockery ware to compete with foreign potteries has been one of Japan's hardest nuts to crack. The work of investigating Japanese clays and experimenting with different combinations of them is now going on under government assistance in the wonderful laboratories and shops of the department of ceramics in the Tokio Higher Technical schools in the ceramic section of the Arita Art and Industrial school at Saga, and in the plant of the Pottery school at Ishikawaken.

According to Prof. C. R. Richards of Teachers college, secretary of the National Society for the Promotion of Industrial Education, the Tokio school is one of the few places in the world where the study of pottery on a highly scientific basis is possible. On the side of chemical investigation of ceramics, this school ranks with the best of American or European institutions.

In its courses full instruction is given in the technology of clays and earths, glazes, pigments and firing. Especial attention is given also to the development of new wares, and to the combination of earths and compounds for this purpose. At the same time the pupils receive ample shop training in designing, making, decorating and firing porcelain.

In other words, Japan is doing for pottery interests, what she is doing for fisheries, breweries, agriculture, stock raising, chemical and engineering industries—enabling those who are to take part in the development of those industries to learn at home at the hands of the state the best of European and American discovery.

HOW I TOOK MY WRINKLES OUT.

After Massage, Cream and Beauty Doctors Had Failed.

BY HARRIETT META.

Trouble, worry and ill health brought me deep lines and wrinkles. I realized that they not only greatly marred my appearance and made me look much older, but that they would greatly interfere with my success, because a woman's success, either socially or financially, depends very largely on her appearance. The homely woman, with deep lines and furrows in her face, must fight an unequal battle with her younger and better looking sister.

I therefore bought various brands of cold cream and skin foods and massaged my face with most constant regularity, hoping to regain my former appearance. But the wrinkles simply would not go. On the contrary, they seemed to get deeper. Next I went to a beauty specialist, who told me she could easily rid me of my wrinkles. I paid my money and took the treatment. Sometimes I thought they got less, but after spending all the money I could afford for such treatment, I found I still had my wrinkles. So I gave up in despair and concluded I must carry them to my grave. One day, a friend of mine who was versed in chemistry made a suggestion, and this gave me a new idea. I immediately went to work making experiments and studying everything I could get hold of on this subject. After several long months of almost numberless trials and discouragements, I finally discovered a process which produced most astounding results on my wrinkles in a single night. I was delighted beyond expression. I tried my treatment again, and, lo and behold! my wrinkles were practically gone. A third treatment—three nights in all—and I had no wrinkles and my face was as smooth as ever. I next offered my treatment to some of my immediate friends, who used it with surprising results, and I have now decided to offer it to the public. Miss Gladys Desmond, of Pittsburgh, Pa., writes that it made her wrinkles disappear in one night. Mrs. J. E. Black of Yonkers, N. Y., says that when she looks in the glass she scarcely knows herself the improvement is so great, and that her wrinkles are entirely removed. I will send further particulars to any one who is interested, absolutely free of charge. I use no cream, facial massage, face steamings or so-called skin foods; there is nothing to inject and nothing to injure the skin. It is an entirely new discovery of my own, and so simple that you can use it without the knowledge of your most intimate friends. You apply the treatment at night and go to bed. In the morning, lo! the wonderful transformation. People often write me, "It sounds too good to be true." Well, the test will tell. If interested in my discovery, please address Harriett Meta, Suite 536C, Syracuse N. Y., and I will send full particulars.

The Solemn Rabbi's Retort.

A New Orleans woman, well known for her work for charity, recently accepted an invitation to speak at an anti-tuberculosis meeting. On the platform she found herself seated between a bishop and a rabbi, and the tone of the meeting seemed to be rendered extremely solemn by the combination.

In order to lighten the solemnity, she said, turning to the rabbi: "Do you know, I feel as if I were a leaf between the Old and the New Testaments."

The rabbi turned a sad-eye gaze upon her.

"Yes, madam," he said, "and if you will recall, that page is usually a blank one."

Selling "Sacred Dust."

A Japanese of Asagusa makes a fair living by selling the dust of the temple of the Goddess Kwannon, in that city, to which thousands of pilgrims resort daily—bringing, as may be imagined, enough mud to keep his stock in trade constantly renewed. He sells his strange merchandise to people who believe in its sacred qualities and sprinkle it over the patches of ground in front of their houses, under the impression that it brings blessings and prosperity. It is said that a large proportion of his patrons are geisha girls. The dust merchant has pursued his queer vocation since he was 14 years old; he is now 63.—[Leslie's Weekly.

BULLETIN NO. 1

TO STOUT WOMEN

YOU WILL BE SHAPELY AND STYLISH IF YOU WEAR THE FAMOUS

Nemo Self-Reducing CORSET

SOLD THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

Thousands of women on the Pacific Coast are already wearing the NEMO SELF-REDUCING CORSET, though we've never advertised them here. But now, in response to the great and fast-growing demand from dealers as well as wearers, we have decided to publish a series of weekly "Nemo Bulletins" in order that everybody may learn all about the greatest boon ever enjoyed by a stout woman who wants to improve her figure.

The following are all patented Nemo features, which cannot be used in any other corset, and without which the abdomen cannot be reduced with comfort and safety:

The Nemo Self-Reducing Strap, with the new Relief Strap, which positively reduces and firmly supports the abdomen, actually "making over" a stout woman's figure so that her skirts will have to be taken in from three to four inches.

The Graduated Front Steel, which is broad and rigid below (holding the abdomen firmly) and tapers gradually to the top (giving freedom and ease in breathing).

The Double Garter Attachment, which holds the corset snugly down in place, giving a smooth fit and a symmetrical figure.

YOUR DRESSMAKER will advise you to have your new Spring gowns fitted over a Nemo, because it will make her work easier and enable her to give you the best shape you ever had.

No stout woman has ever yet reduced her abdomen, with comfort and perfect safety, by the use of any corset except the NEMO.

and exact. If women will learn those two points and stick to them they will have little or no trouble in acquiring the rest.

"I have been told that I might have been a great artist. That is something I have never believed. I care next to nothing about a painting or sketch that I cannot reproduce with my needle.

"It has always been the case. In store was closed to take a few more stitches on a piece of embroidery that had been given me to fill my time. That was the way I discovered my talent.

"After I had been in that shop a few weeks my embroidery was so much better than that of the other girls that all the customers wanted me to do their work. The demand was so great that the owner of the store me at it all the time.

"After some six months of this sort of maneuvering I woke up and determined to see if I couldn't do something for myself. As a beginning I got a few customers to give me work that I could do at home. When I thought that I had enough trade to keep me going I gave up my place and devoted myself to embroidery.

design, the anxiety to see it completed and have it express the something within my heart to interest me. I am sure it is that love of the work combined with business methods that has brought me success.

"I have always told girls who came to me for work that if they didn't like embroidery not to try to do it. I am a great believer in avoiding misfits. That is the chief reason why so many

He Carried the Watch.

From an eastern city comes a sad story of a pawnbroker. He was enjoying a beauty sleep when a furious knocking at the street door brought him to the window with a jerk. "What's the matter?" he shouted. "Come down," demanded the knocker. "But—" "Come down!" The man of many nephews hastened downstairs the time," said the reveler. "Do you mean to say you knocked me up for that? How dare you?" The midnight visitor looked injured. "Well, you've got my watch," he said.

ASK your butcher to deliver his meat in paper made from pure wheat straw: if he uses the kind made from filthy rags and the pickings from the gutters, your health is in danger.

ARTISTS.

KENYON COX, the painter, also an accomplished writer, is a son of Gen. Jacob D. Cox, Secretary of the Interior in President Grant's first Cabinet, who, after his retirement from the army, became a successful writer on historical and military topics and was for more than twenty years a contributor to the Nation.

Philip A. Laszelo, a celebrated Hungarian painter, has come to the United States to paint a portrait of President Roosevelt for Arthur Lee, a member of the House of Commons. Mr. Lee was at one time military attaché in Washington and became very friendly with the President. When the matter was mentioned to the President through a friend of Mr. Lee in Washington, he was delighted that Mr. Laszelo was going to do the work. Many of Mr. Laszelo's pictures have been exhibited in Europe. He painted the late Pope Leo XIII, King Edward and Queen Alexandra of England, Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria and Cardinal Rampolla. His picture of the cardinal will be exhibited in Pittsburgh at the coming art show in that city.

Prof. Gustav Eberlein, the German sculptor, has recently come to New York with his charming wife, formerly the Countess Hertzberg. He will remain for a time to study the American type and spirit, which he professes to greatly admire. Later, after visiting our prominent cities, he will go to South America to see the placing of statues he has executed for the cities of Buenos Ayres and Montevideo. Prof. Eberlein created many of the great public monuments in Germany and has been decorated several times by his government.

Orrin Peck, an American artist, living in the house formerly occupied by Whistler at No. 35 Tite street, Chelsea, London, is as eccentric as Whistler, though in a different way. He is reported to be a millionaire, but he has most decided views on domestic economy. He dispenses entirely with servants, makes his own bed, cooks his own food, and does his own laundry work. He enjoys the personal friendship of King Edward, who recently visited him at his studio.

being one of the finest landscape painters America has produced, has for several years spent his winters among the Crow Indians painting Indian heads and pictures for the government and for the University of California, which now has about a hundred paintings of the chiefs and leading men of various tribes. In addition, Mrs. Hearst has many of Mr. Sharp's paintings in her private collection, which is one of the finest in the United States.

ARMY AND NAVY MEN.

PAYMASTER CECIL S. BAKER has been ordered to sail from San Diego for Magdalena Bay and relieve Paymaster John S. Higgins from duty on board the battleship Vermont, who will proceed home and settle accounts and wait orders. These orders are issued in order to enable Paymaster Higgins to have his resignation accepted. He was appointed to the pay corps of the navy from Massachusetts in 1902.

The retirement of Col. Joseph H. Willard, Corps of Engineers, will cause the promotion of Lieut.-Col. William T. Rossell to be colonel, Maj. L. H. Beach to be lieutenant-colonel, Capt. James P. Jervey to be major, First Lieut. John H. Poole to be captain, and Second Lieut. Robert S. Thomas to be first lieutenant.

Maj. George E. Pickett, paymaster's department, United States army, who is before the retiring board at San Francisco because of imperfect hearing, is making a hard fight to retain his position in the army. His hearing was defective when he entered the service as a volunteer in 1898, he maintains, and he was made a paymaster with the knowledge that he was somewhat deaf. Maj. Pickett stands high in the esteem of his brother officers. He is a son of Gen. Pickett, who made the famous charge at Gettysburg.

First Lieut. F. A. Ramsay of the Marine Corps, stationed at the Puget Sound navy yard, has devised a new night-signaling outfit, which, it is said, possesses several improvements over those now in use.

Col. M. M. Macomb, Sixth Field Artillery, at Fort Sheridan, near Chicago, and Capt. Harry Burgess, Corps of Engineers, at Louisville, Ky., have been ordered to Washington for the purpose of delivering lectures before the Army War College.

Mr. Asaph Hall of Michigan has been appointed a professor of mathematics in the navy, with the rank of lieutenant, to fill the vacancy caused by the statutory retirement of Prof. Edward K. Rawson on the 21st inst. Prof. Hall is a son of the late Prof. Asaph Hall, for many years attached to the Naval Observatory, and also to the Michigan University.

Brig.-Gen. Ramsay D. Potts, recently promoted from colonel, Fifth Field Artillery, has been assigned to the command of the Department of the Gulf, with headquarters at Atlanta, Ga., as the successor of Brig.-Gen. J. M. K. Davis, who was retired for age January 31 last.

Rear-Admiral William T. Burwell will go on the retired list on July 17, and at the same time will probably relinquish his position of commandant of the Puget Sound navy yard. The retirement of Burwell will cause the promotion of three captains to the rank of rear-admirals. In addition to Capt. Richard Wainwright, there are Capt. R. R. Ingersoll, Evans's chief of staff, and Capt. Seaton Schroeder.

SCIENTISTS.

J. C. PEARSON, magnetic observer of the Carnegie Institution, of Washington, formerly on the magnetic survey yacht, Galilee, has gone abroad to make magnetic observations in the regions of Asiatic Turkey and of Persia, where but little data has hitherto been obtained.

Dr. Henry T. Bovey, dean of the faculty of applied science of McGill University, has accepted the principalship of the Imperial College of Science and Technology, London

Prof. Theodore W. Richards of Harvard has been elected an honorary and foreign member of the Chemical Society, the leading chemical society in Great Britain.

Prof. Frederick Starr of the University of Chicago proposes to make an expedition to the interiors of the Philippine Islands in pursuit of a lost Aryan race. For many years there have existed rumors of a white race of savages who dwelt in the fastnesses of the Philippine jungles. Occasionally is encountered a native who claims to have met blue-eyed, fair-skinned, deep-chested men while hunting game in unfrequented parts of the interior. Filipinos, like other people, have illusions but it is possible that these tales are not altogether figments. Prof. Starr hopes to find out for himself.

Richard Kearton, one of England's most famous naturalists, is about to visit the United States, and his first call will be on President Roosevelt, with whom he has been in correspondence for years and whose enthusiastic admirer he is. He wants to talk over nature-lore with President Roosevelt.

BEAUTIES.

THE Duchess of Devonshire, one of the cleverest, as well as most beautiful women of the present day, takes a very prominent part in the political affairs of her husband. The Duke of Devonshire, who is 75 years old, is one of the wealthiest of the English peers and quite equal to his duties, although he is recently reported as ill in Egypt.

Mrs. George Keppel of London, whose beauty and wit first charmed King Edward, while he was yet Prince of Wales, has finally won the favor of Queen Alexandra, and is now in full favor at court. Until recently the Queen has had no favors for her, though she has attended court functions at the invitation of the King, who has also frequently caused her to be invited with her husband, a son of the Earl of Keppel, to other receptions at which he was to be a guest. The woman's wit and personal charm have finally won the Queen's acknowledgment.

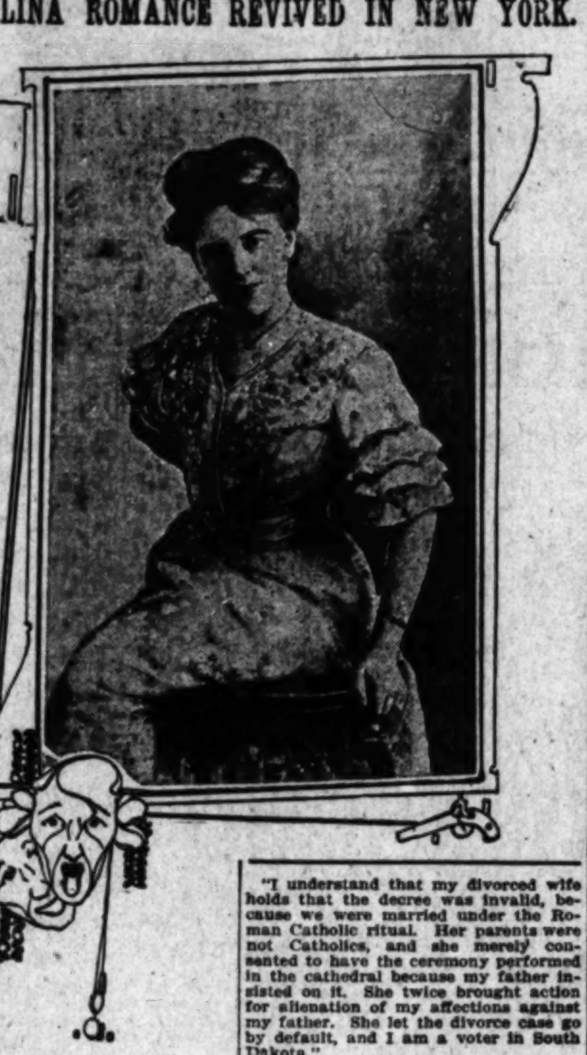
POLITICIANS, STATESMEN.

GOV. HUGHES of New York, during a recent visit to Chicago, addressed the boys of one of the schools. He told them the country reaches out its hands to grab anybody who can give what the country needs. What the American boy wants to learn is to be in the position to be discovered, and to avoid such a dissipation of energy as will prevent making good when the crucial time arrives.

Senator Allison of Iowa celebrated on March 2 his seventy-ninth anniversary, and received the congratulations of nearly all his Senate colleagues and of the members of the Iowa delegation. In the Senate both Democrats and Republicans offered their felicitations. Senator Allison has served thirty-five years continually in the Senate and in another year will have rounded out his sixth term, making a grand total of thirty-six years. He has nearly broken all records of others for length of State service.

Senator Elkins of West Virginia,

CATALINA ROMANCE REVIVED IN NEW YORK.



Mrs. John Fox, Jr.,

second wife of the wealthy young New Yorker, whose first wife refuses to recognize the validity of his divorce.

NEW YORK, March 12.—Back of the marriage in Sioux City of John Fox, Jr., and Miss Teresa Holland of San Francisco, is a romance not only of the newly-wedded couple, but also of Fox and his former wife

After much persuasion Fox told the story of his first marriage: how he ran away with Maud Constance Levien, daughter of Douglas A. Levien, at the time editor of a New York newspaper.

"Miss Levien and I were married," he said, "in Jersey City. It was a runaway match. My father was angry and insisted that a second ceremony be performed in the New York Cathedral. Shortly after the birth of my daughter, my wife deserted me. That was my contention in the South Dakota divorce courts.

"I understand that my divorced wife holds that the decree was invalid, because we were married under the Roman Catholic ritual. Her parents were not Catholics, and she merely consented to have the ceremony performed in the cathedral because my father insisted on it. She twice brought action for alienation of my affections against my father. She let the divorce case go by default, and I am a voter in South Dakota."

It was at Santa Catalina Island, near Los Angeles, that Fox first met Miss Holland. The attraction seemed mutual from the first, and when Mr. Fox saved the life of the girl, it did not take long for their love to be fanned into a flame. Fox was in business at San Francisco, and Honolulu. It was decided that he go to Dakota and obtain a divorce, and his charming bride-to-be promised to wait for him. The couple have gone for a tour around the world.

Mrs. Constance Levien Fox, Jr., married in St. Patrick's Cathedral in this city, in 1893, announces that she does not recognize the validity of the divorce recently granted her husband in South Dakota or his subsequent marriage in Sioux City to Miss Teresa Holland of San Francisco.

Mrs. Fox, who, since her last separation from her husband has been living at Atlantic City, and engaged in literary work, returned to New York to discuss with her family and counsel the recent action of Mr. Fox, with a view of protecting the rights of her self and daughter, Helena, who is living with her grandparents.

wealth of the members of the Senate. It is the honest truth, he says, that many of the men listed in the Senate by these writers as worth all the way form $1,000,000 to $60,000,000 each would be willing to take 10 per cent. of these estimates in cash today. Another Senator, probably as rich as Mr. Elkins, but who would not allow his name to be used, declares that fully one-fourth of the ninety-two Senators have little else than their salaries of $7500 a year. Another fourth of the ninety-two have somewhere between $20,000 and $30,000. The personal fortunes of another quarter of the Senate range between $50,000 or $60,000 and $500,000. Most of this class of twenty-odd, the Senator thought, were worth between $100,000 and $200,000. The other quarter comprised Senators all worth one-half a million, and probably ten or twelve only entitled to be called millionaires, not multi-millionaires, but simply worth from one to ten millions.

Charles Newell Fowler, who has become prominent in Congress in connection with the present financial legislation, was told to leave Yale when a student at that university becaues of its irreligious tone Mr. Fowler's father, a farmer of Illinois, wrote that he was responsible for the loss of his immortal soul" in paying his expenses to remain at such an institution. "If you remain," wrote the old farmer, "expect no more money from me." The Congressman solved his first financial problem then. He finished his course by making his own money.

PEOPLE OF THE COAST.

GEORGE C. BECKLEY, son of Admiral Beckley, has been employed at the Union Iron Works, San Francisco, but has now sailed for Honolulu on the steamship Mannekaia for the purpose of making a thorough study of the boat's machinery, which he helped to construct. Young Beckley proposes to master the problems of engineering and mechanics through the agency of hard personal work.

Edward Burdick of Seattle, who was recently captured with $225 in counterfeit gold coins in his possession is more covered up with tatooed work probably than any other man in the United States. The tattoo work shows that the man has a conception of art peculiarly his own. Both his arms and shoulders are a mass of India ink. The figures shown run all the way from a cross and other religious emblems to a savage panther engaged in devouring a woman. On one arm is a figure labeled the "Rock of Ages." Right beneath it is an over-grown bald-headed eagle sailing through the air with a very contented looking baby clutched in its claws. There is an excellent assortment of female figures and a regular constellation of stars of various shapes and sizes. A few impossible ships are sailing through more impossible seas and an American flag waves its folds gracefully across the right shoulder of the accused counterfeiter. Every inch of the arms of the man are covered with heavy art studies.

Henry Joseph Brewer, the well-known landscape painter of Santa Barbara, has been visiting in St. Louis. Adolphus Busch, the brewer, is a great admirer of Brewer's California landscapes, and a number of his canvases are included in Busch's art collection.

George Parker, for many years assistant postmaster at El Paso, Tex., has come to San Diego to assume a similar position, the vacancy having occurred by reason of the promotion of former Assistant Postmaster Bartholomew to the post of chief.

OVER THE SEA.

LORD CURZON, at the close of the Parlimentary session, will visit Persia to study the working of his already extensive knowledge of Persia, no one else is so well prepared to observe the working of the new treaty which he severely condemned in the House of Lords at the opening of the present session.

The Prince of Wales, probably accompanied by his wife, will represent King Edward at the tercentenary celebration to be held at Quebec this summer. The Prince will go to Canada on a warship, accompanied by a small squadron, partly with the view to enhancing the historic solemnity of the occasion. It is expected that the Prince will visit the chief eastern cities, but he will not stay very long. He will not go very far west.

EXPLORERS.

CAPT. ROALD AMUNDSEN, the Arctic explorer and discoverer of the magnetic pole, says he will never search for the North Pole, but his next voyage will have for its purpose the ascertainment of the ocean's depths in the Far North. He will not follow the beaten path from the Atlantic taken by most explorers, but from Bering Strait he will sail directly north to the polar ice, and during the four or five years he expects to be absent he hopes, by learning the directions of the Arctic flow and something of the currents, to reveal that they have a tremendous influence on ocean currents all over the world, and thus indirectly on climate. He will also make experiments with the northern lights, and for that purpose will carry costly and delicate electrical instruments.

W. Attmore Robinson, a stepson of Prof. Hilprecht of Philadelphia, the celebrated Nippur Library excavator, has just returned from some voluntary exploratory travels in Coppadocia. For three weeks he was engaged in investigations in that very remote and vaguely-known territory, and when he came out of it he carried with him the news of a discovery of a colossal granite eagle, which must have been reared by its Hittite makers somewhere in the neighborhood of a thousand years before Christ. He found this at a place called Tahok-Goz-Koprukoe. When he reported this to the authorities of the Imperial Ottoman Museum they exhibited tremendous interest. Anything that concerns the Hittites is sufficient to make the delvers into the past look up and take notice. Though this race is known to have been very numerous and powerful at one time and to have waged wars with the Israelites, the Egyptians and other people surrounding them, their history is almost a blank. Mr. Robinson is only 20 years old, and has been more disposed to be a man-about-town than a scientist, and his blossoming forth in the latter role has been a surprise to his friends.

CHURCHMEN.

RT. REV. CHARLES T. OLMSTED, bishop of the Episcopal diocese of Central New York, does not believe that a clergyman should be forced to resign his pastorate for asking a pretty young woman of his flock for a kiss. The bishop announced his attitude in this regard in an interview on the subject of the troubles of Rev. E. Warren Spahare of Syracuse. In this he stated that he would stand by Rev. Mr. Spahare, pastor of All Saints' Church, Syracuse, and who, after admitting charges in this direction and presenting his resignation, has withdrawn it and will fight to live down the scandal which has resulted from his reported action.

Dr. Washington Gladden of the First Congregational Church at Columbus, O., recently completed twenty-five years' work at that church.

Bishop H. S. Moore of China, who has recently returned from the Orient, declared at a meeting of Methodist Episcopal ministers in Cincinnati that the "Chinese is infinitely ahead of the Anglo-Saxon," being the "largest-hearted, kindest, most loving people on earth."

Rev. Henry McCallum, in Seattle, has a self-imposed mission of trying to bring to a knowledeg of the truth the men who direct public affairs. He believes that public officials have been too much neglected in the past, and he has adopted this as his peculiar evangelistic work.

ACTIVE WOMEN.

MISS MARY REIDSELLE, formerly of Griswold, Ct., but at present of Nome, Alaska, has given that city $100,000 for its first hospital. She made a fortune in the gold fields.

Miss Rose Fitzgerald, daughter of the Mayor of Boston, has the finest private collection of autographs in Massachusetts. Included in the collection are the signatures of eminent people from all parts of the world, including a number of foreign rulers.

Mrs. M J. Campbell is partner with her husband in the care of an alligator farm in Arkansas. The hides make valuable leather. The farm occupies several acres, and contains 800 to 900 alligators, from tiny babies to full-grown saurians. A large business is done in selling the baby ones. These are mainly hatched in incubators, because the parents are cannibals and eat their offspring. Mrs. Campbell is in special charge of the young alligators, and they come at her call like chickens at feeding time.

Countess von Boss-Farrar, of aristocratic birth and associations, and the wife of a nephew of Archdeacon Farrar, devotes all her time and efforts to the poor and unfortunate of New York's East Side. No respector of creed or sect, she carries sympathy and cheer wherever she finds it is needed, and one of her favorite fields is the Tombs Prison.

Miss Helen M. Pullis has been appointed an immigration inspector on the recommendation of the immigration commissioner at Ellis Island, New York harbor, in order that she may secure special and definite information about the "white slave" traffic.

Mrs. Margaret Rhoades, of North Wales, Pa., who has just celebrated her eighty-third birthday, is said to be the oldest tollgate keeper in point of service in her State. Mrs. Rhoades first began taking toll on the old Springhouse turnpike almost sixty years ago, and for half a century has been in charge of the gate at the junction of the West Point turnpike and the Sumneytown turnpike.

Mrs. Sarah Crossman Hatch, of South Portland, Me., is one of the few real daughters of the Revolution. Her father fought both in the Revolution and the War of 1812, and she is able to recall all the stories her father used to tell her of the Battle of Bunker Hill, where he was wounded twice, of the siege of Boston and of other battles in which he engaged. Mrs. Hatch is 92 years of age.

Mrs. Dosebai C. Jessawalla, who was the first Parsee woman to receive an English education, is now making a tour of the world. The other day she attended a meeting of Parliament attired in her native robes and attracted considerable attention. She has been quite widely entertained in London, several society women having given lavish entertainments in her honor. She is now in her eighty-seventh year. Besides her many other accomplishments she is an expert needlewoman, and is now completing a handsome piece of oriental embroidery which she plans to present to Queen Alexandra before she sails for the West to complete her tour of the globe.

Miss Katherine Dare of London is the first woman in Europe, if not in the world, to follow the precarious occupation of deep-sea diving. She has been unusually successful in her chosen calling, and was recently the guest of honor at a banquet tendered by her employers, after a particularly clever piece of work.

Mrs. Ogden Mills will import a royal fashion to Newport next season when she will take her daily ride behind a pair of cream-colored horses. In order to have a pair of animals ready for any occasion, she has obtained half a dozen of the finest money can buy. They are perfectly matched and of far more striking appearance than the whitest of white horses.

HUMANITARIANS.

MISS ANNE MORGAN, daughter of J. Pierpont Morgan, is interested in the work of factory girls, and a society has been formed, the members being society women of New York and other cities, the purpose of which is to improve the conditions of factories in which girls and women work. The new society is a branch of the National Civic Federation, in which Mrs. Gertrude Beeks is interested. Miss Morgan will be the president of the new society.

Consuello, Duchess of Marlborough daughter of William K. Vanderbilt, is intensely interested in sociological studies, but denies any interest in socialism. "I like to help the poor," she says, "and am greatly interested in settlement work, but this does not make me a socialist."

Miss Sarah Moore of Aspinwall, Pa., has conducted a school among the immigrants who work for the Pittsburgh Filtration Company for about two years. Many of the immigrants already have a high school education in their own language and are more than eager to take up the study of English so as to be able to get along better, while many who are uneducated are taking a lively interest in the studies that are presented to them. Realizing that instruction must of necessity be practical if it continued to interest, the teacher made up some text-books and copy-books which contained some of the everyday phraseology. In them are found such expressions as, "Here comes a train," "Look out for your head," "Get off the track," "Do you want a job?"

EDUCATORS, AUTHORS.

DR. DENTON J. SNIDER of St. Louis is an author better known in educational circles at home and abroad than otherwise. Many people in St. Louis have hardly heard of him, but his description of his foreign travels are widely known in Europe. Though he is nearing his seventieth year, three weighty volumes have been published by him during the past year. Other works are in preparation, including a psychological treatment of biography and nature.

E. B. Johnson, secretary of the University of Minnesota Alumni Association and formerly registrar, has gotten out a directory of the university, the first college directory to be issued in the United States. The book deals with every object, organization and person at present or formerly connected with the institution. The book contains 215 pages of printed matter, and numerous cuts of persons and buildings. The first few pages are devoted to a history of the institution from the founding of the university in 1851. The other matter is gotten up in the style of a city directory. It includes articles on 812 persons who have been identified with the university in an official connection and 424 other items of information. A full athletic record of the university is given for most of the sports offered, including scores for all games. The same is true of the forensic contests, and a full statement of the principal officers of all student activities and their purposes is appended to the proper articles.

Rev. Dr. Horace C. Hovey of Newburyport, Mass., has been requested by the editor of the London Times to prepare for the Encyclopedia Britannica an addition to his former exhaustive treatise on "American Caves." Dr. Hovey is the greatest authority in America on the caverns in the country, of which he has in his life explored 300, including the celebrated Mammoth Cave, in Kentucky, and Wyandotte Cave, Indiana, thirty miles west of New Albany. He is the author of the "Guide to Mammoth Cave," of which 23,000 copies have been sold.

Hall Caine is an extensive Manx land owner, possessing several large farms, having successfulll reclaimed tracts of bog land in the vicinity of Sulby, which have been brought under profitable cultivation.

Seth Low, president of Columbia University, declares that the foundations of his fortune was laid when he was told by his father to "master your business, but do not let it make a slave of you."

Allen Ayrault Green, who has become in the past few years one of the chief champions of child life in imaginative verse and prose, has joined the "authors' reading" ranks. He is an Illinois man, and owns a large tract of virgin

EACH-AND-ALL GROUP—With the Young Folks—Letters and Stories.

Mojonier Photo.

Miss Molly Herlihy,
new member of Each and All.

I feel, pursue it more earnestly than they would individual work.

My understanding is that the Each and All Society is an organization for mutual good. I cannot see that any plan for good could be effective than this one for young stenographers.

M. H. (Los Angeles, Cal.)

This is an excellent plan for the betterment of young stenographers, who are anxious to become proficient in their line of work. After the principles of stenography are mastered, it takes a great deal of dictation practice to readily read and transcribe notes Such a class as is above suggested would furnish this practice and would tend to greatly benefit members.

Knows of a Place.

I have read a very pathetic appeal to members of Each and All Society to send to Mrs. H., El Monte, Cal., information of a locality as cure for asthma. I know of such a place where expenses would be small, if she will write me.

MRS. A. W. O. (Los Angeles, Cal.)

If you will send me a self-addressed, stamped envelope, I will send you Mrs. A.'s address, when you can write her personally.

Regrets.

I am so sorry that the rain kept me from going to Los Angeles. I have been a member of the Deaf Chapter for about a year and a half. When I read in The Times that we were to have a local club meeting I made all preparations to go, but, as I am not in the best of health, and I thought the rain would last all day, I gave up the plan. I was glad it cleared off in the afternoon for the meeting.

I would like to know if the meetings will be continued, for I am very much interested in them, especially the Deaf Chapter. What did they do? How many were there? And were any from Pasadena? It takes more than an hour from my home to reach the city, but I go very often. I have a pin and have enjoyed many letters from eastern members, but it would be so much more interesting to have a club right at home. I hope I can hear from some one concerning this, for I do not know where to direct, but I have hoped and longed for a near-by chapter of the club that I hope it will not be disbanded. I was much disappointed when I found so much of the old club left out of The Times until recently. Hoping that I may hear from some one, I will close, with best regards to the club and its members.

L. M. C. (Pasadena, Cal.)

The meetings will be held regularly with a view of getting all the chapters in thorough working order again, and this will, of necessity, take some little time. One plan is to have these meetings in the afternoon and in the evening alternately, for the convenience of members. The meeting of tomorrow will be in the evening.

Walking—Kodak Chapter?

I would like to meet girls who are studying 'cello and harmony. I am interested in kodak work and would be pleased to organize a Kodak Club.

P. M. F. (Los Angeles, Cal.)

There was a young member present at the meeting inquiring as to those interested in 'cello study. Of course, all these branches come down the head of the musical chapter. If you wish to meet these girls you have only to attend the meeting tomorrow night. As to your suggestion of a kodak chapter, I think it would be perfectly splendid to work this in connection with the walking chapter. If you wish the address of the promoter of the walking chapter I will send it to you upon receipt of a self-addressed envelope.

Still Another Chapter.

I am interested in the Kindness to Animals Chapter of the Each and All Club. If there is one in Los Angeles, I would like to join. If there is not, may we not have one. I will be glad to give anyone of the club members housekeeping hints and helps; also cooking recipes. I have quite a collection of them.

MRS. M. M. (Lancaster, Cal.)

There is no reason in the world why we should not have such a chapter as you mention. You go right ahead in your own vicinity and start one, and you will receive many applications from Each and All members to join your chapter.

Art Chapter.

A number of girls have talked over the prospect of an Art Chapter, and we have decided to form one.

All Each and All members who are interested in art, may get my address from the editor. We propose having a meeting shortly.

E. M. (Los Angeles.)

The notice for your meeting was received too late for publication on Sunday. However, you can set another date, after hearing from members who wish to enlist with the art chapter.

A Member of Invalid-Help Chapter.

I regret very much that I shall not be able to be with you all at your meeting of the E. and A., but sickness and other urgent duties will keep me from being present. Best wishes for success be with you at your gathering. I am a member of the Invalid Help Chapter under the chairmanship of Mrs. Ada Quitzau of Inglewood, Cal. I love to send cheer and help to the shut-ins. As soon as it is convenient will please send me a list of names for the post-card exchange. Also the name or address of A. R. Rheinfels, Germany, for which please find inclosed stamped self-addressed envelope, and since the page has been changed if my name is not on the post-card exchange will you please put it on. Hoping to receive a reply, I am sincerely,

S. S. (Los Angeles, Cal.)

Probably you may find it convenient to attend the meeting which will be held tomorrow evening at 7:30 o'clock. The chapter of which you are a member has a great scope for beautiful work, and I am more than anxious through the guidance of your chairman to have its machinery set to work with the least possibly delay

From a Lonely Old Lady.

It is needless for me to try to tell you how glad I am to again have the page for there are no words in the English language strong enough to express my joy and pleasure.

I want to be a member and have a place at that "big round table." Will I have a welcome? Of all the chapters of Each and All I shall have to ask to join the "Shut Ins," not that I am an invalid, but I have very little use of my right hand, and therefore cannot become a member of the fancy-work exchange, much as I would love to, because I can hardly hold a needle in my hand, and I may not go out unaccompanied for I sometimes get very dizzy. But I do not give up. I have not been anywhere since I left the city, two years ago, except once to the city, and once to the beach. But when I read there would be a meeting of Each and All, and that all members were invited, I did so long to go. I would even be willing to run the risk of a railroad accident, if I could only be permitted the pleasure of seeing so many of the Each and All girls. Only think I have never had the pleasure of meeting one of these dear members yet. Oh dear, how I wish I could go to the meeting. But there is no way for it. I have received two letters from California members and that is the nearest I have ever been to any of them.

I would dearly love to write to all the sad and lonesome ones, possibly I could cheer poor Mrs. A. of El Monte up a little.

I do so love music and would like to hear the members of the musical chapter play and sing. I never yet had a chance to hear any music. I am so glad you are having the members' pictures in the paper for I can get to know them that way. I try my little to live up to the spirit of the society. There is an old invalid gentleman living near us, he is very fond of griddle cakes but they have no sour milk to make them for him so once a week I take him a pail of sour milk. We have two cows and sell the milk, but it takes almost all we get for the milk to buy feed and water to irrigate with. I sour the milk one night in a week and churn the cream for butter. Then I have the milk for the old gentleman's cakes.

"FRANCELLA."

Long, yes; but every word worth having, and these are only extracts of her letter, for I was forbidden to publish all of this dear old lady's letter. She calls herself "a lonely old lady." Is it not worth while, if only for the pleasure it brings to this one heart to have the Each and All page go on and on? What a dear unselfish thought even in the midst of her own loneliness and disappointment to wish to write cheering letters to sad and lonely ones. Just to think, to have to be deprived of such a small thing, which would have given such a great pleasure, as attending a meeting of Each and All members. Such yearning expressed so sincerely. Indeed, if your desire to attend the meeting had only been known in time, surely some way to have had you there would have been planned by the members. But we shall have other meetings, and I take the liberty of prophesying that you shall be the honored guest at one of them.

OUTDOOR CLUB FOR BOYS AND GIRLS.

BY BOBBY CRUSOE.

Although this is scarcely the time of year to get all the enjoyment possible out of a trip to the mountains, the Mt. Wilson trail has its allurements. The trail is not altogether safe after a heavy rain, for one may slip on a muddy place, and many other little things may happen to careless children. But with a careful grown person along the children may have a very pleasant outing and besides have a chance to see snow, which is a curiosity to Native Sons. It frequently snows at the Half-way House, and children may walk this four miles with comparative ease after getting an early start. They may even walk clear to the top, especially if they come prepared to stay all night.

The Old Trail is the only one open to the public. By taking the Sierra Madre car one may get off within two blocks of the foot of the trail and from there walk up as far as you like. Real heavy clothing is not desirable, for the first two or three miles is a very warm walk.

Only when resting for any length of time is it desirable to have wraps. It is best to wear high shoes, for the cold affects the legs, and snow is bound to get into the low-quarters. Nothing is so uncomfortable as snow in the shoes, which melts quickly and leaves cold, wet feet. A heavy coat or light overcoat is all that is necessary, although a flannel or woolen shirt is a great comfort and is the best thing one can wear.

In walking, take off the light overcoat, if you have a heavy shirt, and when resting slip it on again. The best way to carry the coat is to roll it up, tie a heavy cord about each end with enough slack in the middle to throw over the head and one shoulder. The roll may then be carried under the opposite arm and thrown back under the shoulder-blade.

The trip is a good one at any time of the year, but just now has the especial attraction of permitting one to see snow and play in it. There is not always snow to be had, and it is well to watch the papers or telephone some of the information bureaus or railway authorities for information. A dull, cloudy day is generally productive of snow on the mountains, and the next day after such weather, or even on the day itself, is a good time for the trip. Don't attempt it though if it is raining in the lowlands, but a good snowstorm in the mountains is one of the very pretty sights.

A CHILD OF NEVADA.

Her Hammer-Doll and Her Sure-Enough Doll.

A story is told by Mrs. Stewart, wife of ex-Senator William M. Stewart of Nevada, that is most pathetic and interesting. Senator and Mrs. Stewart were taking a long walk over the desert hills not far from their home in Rhyolite. They had wandered some distance from the road, and were passing by a dugout, in front of which stood a little barefoot child, with a big hammer in her arms, singing and rocking it to sleep. Mrs. Stewart asked the child if she was not afraid she would drop the hammer on her little foot and hurt it. "'Taint no hammer, it's my dollie," lisped the child, in injured tones.

Mrs. Stewart asked the child's mother if the little one did not have a real doll to play with. The mother, a very poor and ignorant Italian woman, replied that the only dolls the child had ever had were dressed-up clothespins and the hammer, which she seemed to prefer, possibly because it was larger. Mrs. Stewart could not find a doll in Rhyolite that she thought quite pretty enough for a baby that had never seen a real live one. She immediately wrote to a friend in Washington to send her a pretty doll for the little desert waif. Some days later an express parcel arrived, which proved to be a veritable Noah's ark full of toys, and in a box covered with a glass lid slept the most beautiful dollie that ever was seen. Some fairy godmother must have touched her with her wand. Such beautiful clothes, such tiny, pearly teeth and beautiful yellow curls! Senator Stewart never handled a speech before the Senate with more care than he did that dollie on his way to the dugout. The child was busy making mud pies out of alkali dust when the parcel containing the toys was placed in front of her. She seemed puzzled at first, and handled them timidly, as though not quite knowing what to do with them. The paper wrapping was then taken off the box containing the doll. When the dollie was lifted from the box and opened her big, blue eyes smiling into the eyes of her new mistress, the child gave a gasp and turned pale, her breath coming in quick gasps. She then stretched out her little brown arms and folded the doll to her breast. Again and again she kissed it and sobbed over it; then her little form swayed. Senator Stewart placed her on the ground. She sat there, gazing from her great dark eyes at her doll for a long time; then clasping it closely to her breast, she seemed to mingle her kisses and sobs together. Senator Stewart quietly picked up the hammer and tried to hand it to her. With a look of utter loathing, she drew back from it. After a moment or two she stretched out her little brown hand and pulled a handful of dirt over it, burying it completely.

When Mrs. Stewart bent down to kiss her good-by, the child did not seem to know of the existence of her benefactors.

They left her sitting there on the roadside, her dark eyes seeing nothing but the baby image in her arms. After they had climbed the hilltop they looked back again. Now she was but a tiny brown figure, her dark curls nestling against the blonde ones of her first doll.

Little native of Nevada, never a flower or blade of grass had she seen; her birthright, a dugout under the earth. Desert born and trained, her playground the bleak hills and forbidding gray mountains. Over 'yon,' where the sun shines on that crested peak, are the blue skies of California, where fields of violets and poppies grow. To see those baby eyes when first they shall behold them would be a rare privilege.

THE DOWNFALL OF TEDDY.

BY WILEY COLE, AGE 14.

The eighth grade pupils of Olive-street school are grief stricken over the death of a pet fish, who came to death by falling from the third-story window of the schoolhouse, Teddy was the oldest and wisest of three fishes who lived in an aquarium by the window.

The water, which had to be changed twice every week, was being dipped out. As this work took great skill and strength, a boy by the name of Charles Kendall was requested to do it. When the water was low in the aquarium he lifted the fish out. As he lifted the most precious of them fish it slipped out of his hands and fell to the grounds below. Thus another red man bit the dust.

The boy with remarkable quickness flew down the stairs and to the rescue with a cup of water, but not in time to save life.

This remarkable fish, whose life had been spent in a schoolroom, had acquired great knowledge of geometry and grammar. He is said to be the president of fish. It is broadly thought that his brain was not strong enough to stand the pressure of studies, and he committed suicide. Although he was very smart, he is said to be on a very low scale.

Keeping Gas Broilers Clean.

Almost every one who broils steak in a gas oven has experienced no small amount of trouble in keeping the broiler spotless and shiny, say The Delineator. An easy way out of this is to place the steak on the broiler, and instead of leaving the pan underneath dry, place cold water in it to the depth of two inches. The fat drops into the water and is purified, and may then be skimmed off and used. By this method the pan is never allowed to dry and burn, and the oven is kept free from grease.

After my zinc-lined refrigerator began to grow dingy I treated it to two coats of white enamel paint and it became as good as new, writes a contributor in The Delineator for December. It is the best to plant it in the f so that the refrigerator will dry thoroughly before it is needed for use.

Plunge a quarter of a cup of ri into a pint of boiling water and co for thirty minutes, thoroughly drai thenp lace in a baking dish and a scant cup of cream or rich mi tablespoon of butter, a [illegible] salt, cayenne pepper and grated nutmeg. A dash of curry powder is lik by some, but can be added or omitt at will. Mix this well together, l come to a boil, then crack over eight or ten eggs, set in oven for te minutes, remove and serve.

companies and they make all kinds of souvenirs out of it.

We went down by the vaults, but could not go in, for some one had a short time before stolen several thousand dollars.

That afternoon we took the train and started for the "Sunny Westland," going south to New Orleans. My mother said New Orleans was more like a foreign city than an American River, and on the banks of the river is the French market, which is the largest vegetable market in the world. After we had visited the places of interest we went to the station and boarded the train. After going a few miles the train slowly rolled onto a great barge. This is the second largest barge in the world.

We crossed the Mississippi, train and all, on the barge. Soon we were across ern towns, where the little "niggers" danced to the fetching tune of "Everybody Works But Father" and other such classics (?). Everybody threw money to them and such a scramble you never saw.

On our way we passed the Salton Sea, which has caused so much trouble lately. The water came over the tracks.

Our train was delayed in a little mining town on account of a washout, so we got up early in the morning, about 4 o'clock, to find a good place to eat. We passed many saloons and heard many cowboys singing in them. All around the town you could see signs which said: Hobos, keep moving or sixty days awaits you on the rock pile."

One man tried to get a quarter from the people on the train. He wanted something to drink, I guess.

The track was fixed in a few hours and the train moved on.

In about a day we were in Los Angeles, and gee! but it did seem good.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

THE little boys and girls of the B One grade in Fremont school gave a wonderful exhibition of dramatic work to a visitor last week. This is part of their language work. It is made so interesting for them that uncon-the time just the knowledge Mrs. Dawd—whom half the children call "Mamma"—wishes to impart to them. This entire class is a collection of quick-witted, keen, alert, little people, who enter right into the spirit of everything suggested by their teacher.

"The Bremertown Musicians" is a little story which has been dramatized and is acted out by the children quite naturally. The musicians were animals who were discarded by their masters because they had outlived their usefulness. Zelotta Johnson was the little discarded cat and Mabel Wiles the poor dog, Byron Roesh represented the old donkey and Harry Howell the old rooster. These old discarded animals, according to the story illustrated by the children, were not quite useless after all, for they scared away a band of robbers in a lonely hut in the woods and took possession of it as their own, where they lived happy ever afterward. The four robbers were represented by Reggie Hughes, Frankie Lucas, Arthur Smith and Richard Reilly. All the children who took parts in this play are but 7 years old.

"The Cat, the Rat and the Little Red Hen" is another delightful story which these little ones act. Little Katharine McKelvin takes the leading part, that of the Little Red Hen. These children make their classroom a city of "make-believe;" the room is the city, their little desks their houses, which must be kept in order, and the aisles between the desks are the streets.

The kindergarten class has contributed to the exhibition work, which is to be sent both abroad and to Mexico, a beautiful picture made entirely by the little ones. The picture represents the Easter thought. It shows a little country church down in the right-hand corner, with its door thrown hospitably open. The church is surrounded with shrubbery, which gives an idea of the free-hand work of the children. Easter lilies occupy the center of the picture, and a flock of birds are silhouetted against the sky, signifying the return of the birds. A gorgeous butterfly which, has just emerged from his ugly house, is trying his pretty wings. Froebel's picture, framed in early daisies, is also shown, in honor of his birthday, which comes in April. The picture is, indeed, a creation of beautiful thoughts, associated with Eastertide.

Thirtieth-street School.

The interest of the pupils of Thirtieth-street school is just now centered in athletics, practice games taking up all the spare time of the boys and girls.

Home crafts takes a most important place in the working of the Thirtieth school, this being the first school in the city to hold a public exhibition of this work. The pupils are even now getting ready for a very large exhibition of this kind for the closing of the present school term.

In order to help, and encourage the pupils in this work, the teachers here have formed a club of themselves, and each evening they remain until 5 o'clock, directing and instructing pupils in this line of their work. Mr. Tritt, the principal, is personally directing a class in brass-hammering, modeling and carving, while the girls are being directed in sewing, fancy work, etc., by their teachers.

Under the direction of Mr. Fulton, the school will soon be able to boast of a fine orchestra, composed of violin, trombone, cornet and piano.

The kindergarten class has made a picture representing December, which will be their exhibit of kindergarten

Vernon-avenue School.

The Vernon-avenue School occupies a beautiful new building, which the teachers and scholars have scarcely become acquainted with as yet. This building has been occupied only since the beginning of the year. There is a beautiful grove of apple trees at one side of the building and the children planted thirty black acacia trees in honor of Arbor Day last Friday. The pupils of the sixth, seventh and eighth grades did the planting, each grade planting ten trees. These classes will take entire charge of these trees. The kindergarten tots have also been given a portion of the school ground to cultivate, upon which they are eager to get to work. Just as soon as the ground is leveled they will plant both flowers and vegetables in their plot.

A friend recently made this class of little ones a present of a dainty canary bird which the children promptly named "Fluffy Ruffles." Each Friday some little scholar takes Fluffy home and returns it to the class-room Monday morning.

The pupils of the higher grades are being helped very materially in the new line of historical and geographical work outlined by Mr. Bunker, through a friend of one of the teachers, who has traveled extensively and obtained many beautiful views of historic locations and buildings, which she has presented to the school.

The Mothers' Circle will shortly give an entertainment in the school building, and with the proceds purchase apparatus for the playground. A glee club, composed of about twenty boys is now being formed. This club will take part in the Mother's Circle entertainment.

There is a spare room in the building, in which Miss Bont, the principal, has installed herself teacher. Here pupils who have lost time through sickness or any other cause will be drilled and coached by the principal until they are again able to take up their regular school work.

The A one and B two grades have some very pretty work in the form of pictures representing stories of Columbus. These are exhibitions of hand work which show wonderfully ingenuity on the part of these little ones. One of the Columbus-story pictures shows the three vessels nearing the shores of the New World. The Indian, wigwam and canoe are all there.

The Puritan kitchen is another exhibition of the handiwork of the children. It is shown with Priscilla, as the central figure, gowned in soft gray, with snowy cap and apron. Thelma McMaster, 7 years old, is the little miss who made this artistic kitchen.

Hazel Merrick, also 7 years old, has done some of the best work in weaving. All the children have made caps for their dolls, the prettiest cap being made by Ethel Wilson. Homer Banks is the best six-year-old worker in the room.

Olive-street School.

The Debating Society of the Olive-street school held a meeting last Friday, when the popular topic "Should President Roosevelt Serve Another Term" was discussed. It was a very spirited debate, resulting in the negatives carrying off the honors of the day. Ex-Congressman Joseph Kerr, Miss Quail, teacher of the ungraded class, and Miss Anna Hall, a High School visitor, were the judges. Joseph Hollingsworth, Robert Ramey and Alice King took the negative part of the debate, while Ed Blurock, Marjorie Middleton and Wiley Cole held for the affirmative.

The pupils were addressed by Hon. Joseph Kerr upon the significance of paid to President Roosevelt at the same time.

The fifth, sixth and seventh grades gave a chorus of "The Hemlock Tree" and selected quotations, pertaining to trees, were recited, and national airs sung.

Robert Ramey, one of the pupils, printed on his own little press programmes of the exercises of the day.

Sam Wordy, a pupil of the eighth grade, has made a beautiful Morris chair in the sloyd room of the school, and Frank Lund, a young pupil of the night class, has made a very dainty manicure table for his mother.

Grand-avenue School.

The seventh and eighth grades of the Grand-avenue school united in holding Arbor Day exercises. An interesting programme was given, consisting of quotations and selections relating to the day.

Henry Dwight, the speaker of the day, gave a very instructive and entertaining talk on the great value of our forest trees and wild flowers, and impressed upon the children what a proper use of both meant to the future welfare and beauty of the country.

Pretty Blossoms.

Josephine Frances Knoll is a dainty little maid of 7 years, with dark, curling hair and expressive brown eyes. She is a graceful little dancer and sweet singer. She has often appeared in entertainments given for charitable purposes in the city.

Rosalind Joseph is a little eastern girl, who has come to Los Angeles quite recently. She loves the sunshine and flowers, spending most of the day out of doors. Rosalind is just 6 years old, but she is a dear little woman, the cheering, sympathetic companion of her widowed mamma.

William Plummer is the name of the boy whose personality shows right in his picture, and which you can see is a strong one. He is only 11 years old, and is destined to become a great artist some day. He already has a number of clever charcoal drawings to his credit, and he has also originated several splendid cartoons. On this page today we have printed his story of a trip.

Mrs. John Brooks Henderson.

FEARLESS CHAMPION OF TEMPERANCE, SHE GIVES HER VIEWS WITH CHARACTERISTIC VIGOR.

By Margaret B. Downing.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

Mrs. J. B. Henderson.

ASHINGTON, March 7.—No more stately thoroughfare adorns the capital city than Six- street, concerning which a controversy is raging about ing the name into something impressive. The avenue of Presidents, Executive avenue, ington avenue, have all been sug- d and rejected for various reasons. pride of Sixteenth street, which s the possession of the White , the famous Jackson Square, long list of illustrious mansions oundary Castle, the home of the r Senator from Missouri, and John Brooks Henderson. Boun- Castle rears its massive towers turrets of dark gray granite just the city proper ends and Six- street takes on the name "Ex- d." It is a Norman Gothic hold, as faithfully reproduced as age and material at hand would it. Its chatelaine is one of Wash- 's celebrities. A millionaire sev- times over, a philanthropist of precedent type, the champion of erance, the patroness of art, and earnest promoter of the City Beau- Washington generally takes as delight in Mrs. Henderson as the estate men do in her energetic ure to build up "Sixteenth Street ded" with palaces.

. Henderson is approaching the ed age of man and woman, but working power is stupendous. In th year she keeps up a corre- dence which would do credit to Jeffrey, though her work is all of ical kind. A grande dame by and position, she is a power in ocial firmament. She is active in ropagandas which look to the bet- t of womankind and their com- emancipation from political dom. But most ardently is she rested in the temperance question. wealth, her social prestige and her rkable intellectual force are all ed in promoting the cause un- entire country is pledged to up- the white banner.

am pleased to note the increasing r of what is termed the temper- revolution,' said Mrs. Henderson day last week, in the pleasant ing room at Boundary Castle. the term reminds me of one of most glorious speeches which ham Lincoln ever made. It was ered in Springfield on February 22, After reviewing the material tions of the times he used these orable words: 'Turn now to the erance revolution. In it we shall a stronger bondage broken, a viler ry manumitted, a greater tyrant sed—in it more sorrow assuaged, disease healed, more of want sup- . Even the dram maker and the seller will have glided into other pations so gradually as never to felt the change and will stand y to join all others in the univer- song of gladness. What a noble to the cause of political freedom.' seems now that this hopeful hecy is about to be realized. Much been done, but so much more is pending. It looks like the hand- ing on the wall for the liquor traf- hat women who would have ac- plished so much to bring about this it could urge the measures on to ction. I want to emphasize how h all serious advocates of tem- ance legislation in the States and ritories deplore the way the polit- part of the propaganda is man- . I am unalterably opposed to a d-party ticket, the Prohibition ot on national, State or municipal tions. If we could only eliminate error from our ways, I think the perance cause would triumph from ne to the Pacific Coast and on y inch of American soil.

The temperance vote under the ent conditions goes up in the air. , I would like to place it, and that re the next national election con- es the country, where it will count good. I grant that neither of the great political parties is quite per- , and it is my firm belief that no tical party can ever attain the ideal te. But there is always a choice of didates. One man generally has ter principles than another, and I eve in making the principles to be ld, the guiding star in selecting a itical party. Reformers who reject existing parties and organize new s without the remotest possibility winning their point, resemble very ch the cow who fills the bucket with best of milk only to turn it over the ground. I wish the W.C.T.U. ld emulate the Anti-Saloon League, ich works within the regular party s and works to some purpose. Such reform among the reformers is much be desired and must come about be- the whole prophecy of the great coln is realized. It is noteworthy t those who manage the affairs of anti-temperance element are wise eed. This class acts as a unit un- any and all circumstances and it ts all the force of its influence for individuals rather than for the rties.

Then while the highly respectable ple of the country deplore the rav- s which alcohol has made, they e it out as a rule in deploring ditions at home while the anti- perance element is abroad, active extending and controlling the pri- ry and preliminary caucuses which ecial delegates to various conven- s. These delegates afterward inate candidates for all the of- s from local constable to the Presi- t of the United States. Now if temperance workers would take a from the book of their enemies recognize that one of the candi- es of the two great opposing par- reaches the goal, it would be to ke forward. It frequently happens t candidates put forward on the ular tickets are in favor of prohi- on but because of the folly of put- g up a third or prohibition ticket y receive no support in a source re they have the right to expect

After the crusade in favor of uni- sal temperance decreed by national slation, I believe that temperance Mrs. Grundy's domain is next to heart. After all it does not re- e so much courage to abandon ving wine to dinner guests, for nion is changing since Mrs. Grundy to studying physical culture. In opinion this despotic ruler of the te world has very charming char- eristics. She is well groomed, ar- ic, alive to one's comfort, she has moods for religion and charity and eems to me that it is most fortu- for humanity when Mrs. Grundy ches the roots of its affairs. It been alleged against Mrs. Grundy she has created more drunkards physical and moral wrecks than has ever cured with all her mil- the highest social functions the mediums for evil—slippery paths that lead down grade.

"But in the social as well as the political world the pendulum is swinging around. What society disdained to do for principle is now countenanced for health and because it is the fashion to cultivate the esthetic sense. I rejoice to say that wine drinking at dinners in Washington is on the decline. Wine and liquor are unfortunately still served in the exalted homes, but those who drink too deeply are the smallest minority. The majority of public men and the women who form high official society in Washington, at least, barely touch their wines. Still I should prefer that the hosts had the moral courage to banish wines entirely. But in Washington an important factor of society is made up of foreigners and an indefinite impression prevails in this country that if one of these exalted strangers were compelled to forego wine with his dinner an embarassing collapse or a mental or physical catastrophe would be risked. For this reason hosts who believe in temperance to the exclusion of everything alcoholic yield to the tradition.

"It is to the credit of several European monarchs that they have more moral courage than the great ones of our land. Queen Wilhelmina of Holland is a total abstainer, as is her mother, the Queen Regent during her minority. Queen Wilhelmina has recently sent an eloquent message to the Dutch Parliament urging measures to stem the tidal wave of the drink evil. Queen Sophia of Sweden is the leading organiser of the temperance movements in Scandinavia. Prince Oscar of Sweden is president of the temperance societies and spends much time delivering addresses on total abstinence. It is a noteworthy sign of the times that throughout Europe the habits of rulers in regard to using intoxicants are carefully scrutinized. So bitter is popular disapproval of overindulgence in alcohol that today abstemiousness is the predominant note at every royal, imperial and republican capital. The result is that the rulers who today occupy the thrones of Europe are as distinguished for their temperance both in eating and drinking as their predecessors were the reverse."

About a year and a half ago, Mrs. Henderson bestowed international celebrity upon her name by emptying the contents of her large wine cellars into the gutters which flank Boundary Castle. It is estimated that the amount of wine and liquor destroyed would have stocked several good-sized retail stores. For years the Hendersons were famous as connoisseurs of wines, and their cellars contained the finest assortment to be found in the city. After her fervent conversion to the temperance cause, a consummation brought about by a profound study of hygiene, she was at a loss to dispose of her treasures. "I have been criticised," said Mrs. Henderson, "for pouring out the wines and liquors and some have asserted that I could have sent them to hospitals or sold them and given the money to the poor. The criticism has quite an ancient flavor, but I could not give such poison to hospitals; I should rather kill the poor patients at one fell blow. I could not give such tainted money to the poor and I felt unable to keep the wine on my premises. I showed my contempt by pouring it all into the sewer to run down and mingle with the common poisons of the underground world." Recently Mrs. Henderson has destroyed a most superb collection of Venetian wine glasses and decanters and some exquisite silver drinking flagons and tankards. Nothing that suggests even remotely the flowing bowl may be seen in Boundary Castle. Mrs. Henderson has frequently expressed her disapproval of friends presenting bridal couples with punch bowls and other paraphernalia for the cup that cheers.

Apart from her unique services to the temperance cause, Mrs. Henderson is one of the most interesting women of her time. Her mother, Mrs. Eunice Foote, was the intimate friend and co-worker of Mrs. Cady Stanton in the cause of woman's suffrage. She gave most generously to the fund, and Mrs. Henderson has followed her example. No suffrage convention meets in Washington that Mrs. Henderson does not come forward to bestow social favors, a boon perhaps even more highly appreciated than her generous checks. She gives receptions at the Boundary Castle for the suffragists, with the Marine Band in attendance, and smart society forming the reception committee. Mrs. Henderson in her study of hygiene has become a vegetarian, and her household is conducted on more strictly scientific lines than perhaps any modern mansion in this country. Under the forbidding caption of "poisons," she has expelled tea, coffee, meats of every variety, form of alcohol and drug, and even the fragrant weed. In a home which seems the acme of modern luxury she leads a life which a hermit of the desert could emulate. She sleeps in the open all the year through. Her cot is made on a veranda and is as simple as an anchorite's. In the winter her sleeping raiment somewhat resembles an Eskimo outfit, and, being made up of soft and costly furs, might vie with a Parisian costume in the matter of cost. Even the servants at the Henderson castle have to conform to the laws of hygiene, and no compromise on the subject of meat, liquors or tobacco is permitted even the most faithful retainer. If he falls from grace on any count he gets his dismissal.

Mrs. Henderson is a native of New York, the daughter of Judge Elisha Foote of Poughkeepsie. After her marriage to John Brooks Henderson, prominently identified with Missouri politics as member of the Legislature, Presidential elector, member of the convention to determine the question of secession, and afterward United States Senator, she resided in St. Louis. During her residence in that city she organized the St. Louis School of Design, which still flourishes, and has accomplished excellent work. Mrs. Henderson has written on many subjects, and on all entertainingly and with characteristic force. Among her later writings are the "Aristocracy of Health," "Practical Cooking and Dinner Giving," and "Diet for the Sick."

A Pigeon Loft.

HOW A WOMAN MAY CONDUCT ONE WITH PROFIT.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

The price of a pigeon loft is eternal vigilance. If a woman purposes to conduct such an industry, she must be willing to give to it the greater part of her time and her concentrated attention. With this investment of self, a woman may hope to succeed with a very small capital. If with this she have a special aptitude for the work—a real understanding of the needs of the creatures under her charge—she will gain from the undertaking itself all the pleasure and recreation required. There is always a zest in the association with life and growth, and a pigeon loft is all flutter and stir and little homelike noise. It soon grows to be a world of continual interest and change to the caretaker whose heart is in her work.

The expense of a plant depends entirely upon the size of the buildings and the rarity and extent of the stocking. The first thing to consider is the pen, as all stock should be housed and well housed from the beginning. The shed should be warm, commodious and cleanly in arrangement, with well-aired lofts and grassed-over runways. One woman in the Middle West has made use of the following proportions for her small plant: Through the center of a fifty-foot lot she has caused a well defined ten-foot runway to be cut, building, on each side, lofts 8x20 feet in dimension. Another arrangement was recently found by the writer, in good practical use. The plant consisted of 2000 birds, the lofts being built 16 feet square and 6 feet in height and laid out systematically with four-foot runways. There are twenty lofts in the establishment, each one accommodating 100 birds. This plant, started with eleven pairs of selected stock, increased in six months to the astonishing number of 1500 healthy breeders. Eight or nine pairs of birds in a year is considered a very good breeding record for one couple, but often a larger production is made.

The preparation for nesting is one of the most important parts of the business and should have the thorough supervision of the owner. The best nesting boxes are made from discarded oil cases—the large size with dimension for two cans of oil. The price of these cases is 60 cents per dozen. A partition should be made through the center of the case, giving two compartments, each twelve inches square. This partition is necessary, as each pair of birds will require two compartments—one for hatching and one for laying, since laying begins as soon as the process of hatching is completed. A board which can be removed at will should be used for the front or door of the box. To the lover of nature, a visit to a pigeon loft is full of interesting surprises. It probably is not generally known that the parent birds divide work with exact equality, while the eggs are being incubated—the mother setting eight hours and the father taking her place turn and turn about. After the eggs are incubated, the father continues his interest in the offspring by taking turns with the mother in feeding. At nesting time, great pains should be taken with the material provided. The birds should be given strong, stiff grass or wild weeds, for they reject anything limp or broken. This nesting material should be placed in an open crate in the park, where the mating birds can make their own selection. It is the custom of pigeon fanciers to procure from cigar manufactories refuse tobacco stems, which they mix with this strong grass, straw or weed foundation. These stems prove infallible exterminators of insect pests, and cost about 25 cents per sack. Care should be exercised in the building of runway fences, which should be made of two-inch mesh wire netting, stretched to the height of eight feet or more.

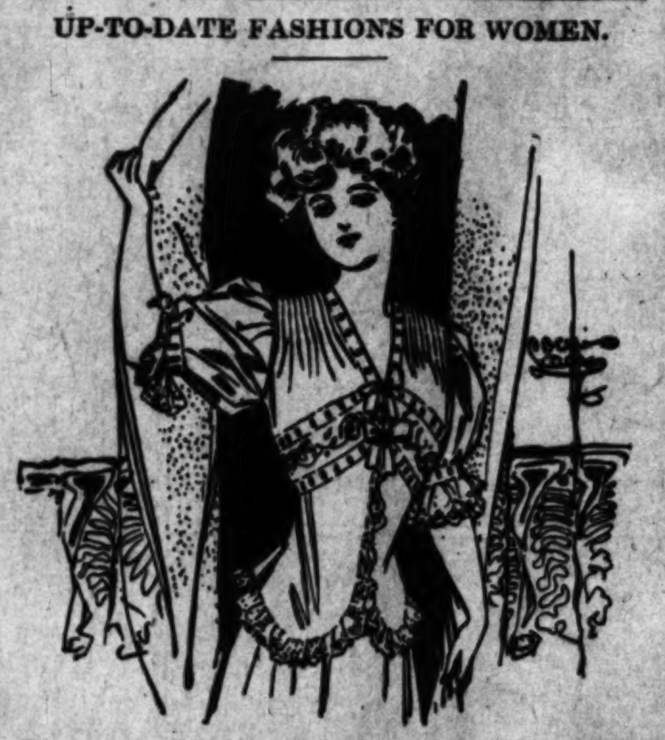
So much for the preparation, now for the stock. Following is a good buying list:

20 pr. common stock for squab raising 50c. per paid	$10.00
10 pr. homers, $2 per pair	20.00
10 pr. English runts, $2 per pair	20.00
10 pr. hen pigeons, $2 per pair	20.00
5 pr. pouter pigeons, $2 per pair..	10.00
5 pr. fantail, $2 per pair	10.00
Total	$90.00

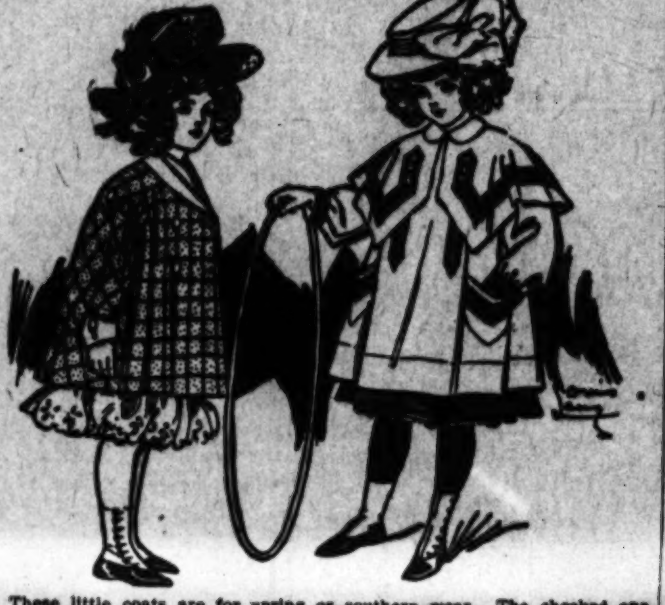
The number of pigeons must be varied to suit the size of the establishment, the above being only an estimate. The price varies materially in different localities. In the selection of birds for practical purposes, one finds that a cross between the Homers and English Runts gives the greatest satisfaction—the result being a large, handsome bird of excellent value in the squab market. The common stock, however, gives good value for squab raising, as it is most prolific and less subject to ills. In the question of expense, the food supply is a great factor. The woman who can raise her own field of grain is fortunate and has solved the problem of large profit. The food most in favor with the fancier is small red wheat and cracked or crushed corn. No whole corn should be given, as it renders the birds temporarily blind and often causes death. With the baby birds, death is inevitable, if the whole kernels are swallowed, and great care should be taken because of the peculiar manner of pigeons in feeding their young. The parent bird fills its crop with grain, drinks all the water possible and then proceeds to minister to its nestling. The small bird thrusts its bill down the parental throat, and, by a convulsive effort of the old bird, the little crop is filled. Thus, it is easy to be seen, that whole corn fed to the flock must necessarily bring death to the young. Next to proper food, the pigeon must have pure, fresh water. If possible, have the runways well grassed and supplied with running water. If a moving stream is not obtainable, good troughs should be furnished that can be thoroughly cleansed and refilled at stated intervals. Keep always a good supply of stock salt in the pens, and throw in fresh greens—Swiss chard, lettuce, fresh-cut grass or cabbage leaves—every day. If one has an aptitude for the business, very good results may be gained from a small stock. One woman who started with twenty-two birds found her first year's increase counted up to 1700 salable pigeons. The market price for squab fluctuates with locality and season, but the scale is from $2 to $6 per dozen. Fancy strains for breeding purposes bring much higher prices. One other important point: Establish your business on or near a car line, where you can hold yourself in touch with the city markets. If possible, secure a number of reliable buyers before beginning operations and put yourself in communication with higher-grade hostelries and catering establishments. In this way you will assure yourself of reliable trade and standard prices.

GRACE ADELE PIERCE.

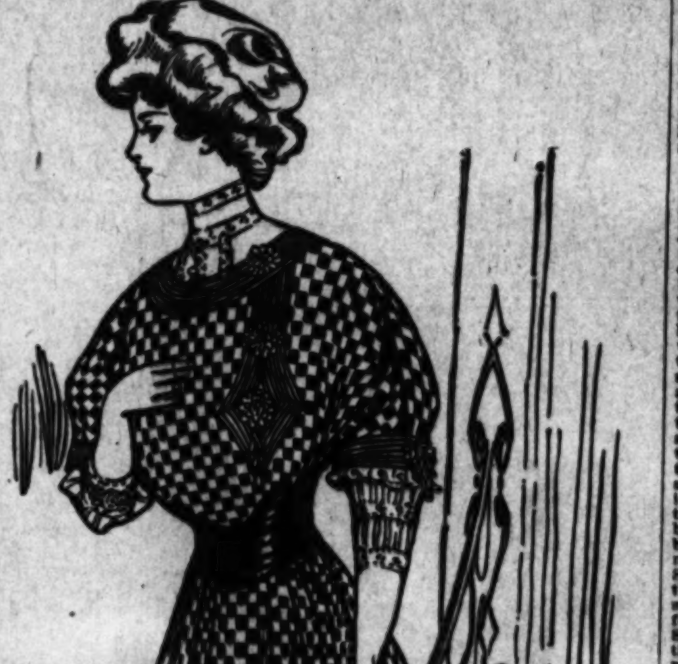
UP-TO-DATE FASHIONS FOR WOMEN.



This pretty French morning jacket of sheer white lawn is cut Empire fashion, with a girdle of figured lawn between two rows of beading run with ribbons. The lower part is cut circular with just flare enough to give a graceful outline. The edge is stitched a little when finishing which gives a ripple effect. Fine Val. lace is used to trim the edge and sleeves.



These little coats are for spring or southern wear. The checked one is red and white with cuffs and collar of white, and pipings and buttonholes of plain red. The other one is of natural pongee trimmed with bands and stitching of navy blue.



A favorite combination of black and white is in the checker board design, like the sketch above. The skirt is pleated and finished with a plain hem. The waist is made in jumper fashion and trimmed with black braid and flower-like ornaments made of loops of black soutache. The girdle closes in the back and is of black satin.

New Ways of Serving Codfish.

The homely codfish is one of the best helps for breakfast, says the cooking department of The Delineator, because it can be served in so many ways. For one, cream a cupful of it while you are baking some large potatoes; when they are soft cut them lengthwise, take out the center and mix with the fish; then fill the shells again, heaping them well, and put them back to heat. Or, if you own those useful things, little brown baking-dishes, put some creamed codfish in each one and fill them up with mashed potato and brown in the oven; an egg beaten with the potato will make it very light.

Codfish croquettes are always nice. Mix the hot cooked fish and freshly mashed potato as usual, then add a beaten egg and drop the soft mixture in spoonfuls on to a little flour, just rolling each one over in it; fry in deep, hot fat, till they are like fritters.

Quaint Fashions in Millinery.

Horsehair hats, flowers made of feathers, and feathers made of blossoms are among the fashions predicted for this year's summer millinery.

"No secrets are more jealously guarded than the latest creations in frocks and hats," a French milliner told an "Express" representative on Saturday, "but I have heard of two new modes of which fashion experts have approved.

"The very finest horsehair—like that used in the seats of our grandmothers' chairs—will be employed for making hats. It is lightly woven, and almost resembles a web, its texture is so fine.

"Transparent gauze flowers and also imitation blossoms made of feathers will be worn as trimming with the new hats. These flowers are made of hundreds of tiny feathers, and some very pretty shaded effects can be carried out."

Trimmings of real flowers are not uncommon, but this year the conventional methods of adorning a hat will be simulated by sweetly perfumed blossoms. Rosettes will be made of Parma violets, while twists and bows of ribbons will be cleverly copied in small flowers, such as forget-me-nots, primroses, or garden daisies.

"It is even possible now to copy the ostrich feather," said Mr. Sharp, the Tottenham Court-road florist. "The most beautiful sweeping plumes can be imitated with lilies of the valley.

"We recently made a large black crinoline picture hat, round the crown of which swept a fine long feather entirely fashioned of these pretty flowers. The making of the feathers is a long task, as each spray has to be wired on separately."—[London Express.

Facing the Facts.

THE STORY OF A WOMAN'S TRIALS AND TRIUMPHS.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

She had just 75 cents left. It requires courage to face a great city full of strangers, no work in sight and but 75 cents in one's purse. Slowly she took off her hat, gloves and jacket, and sat down to think. For several months she had been a student of the so-called "new thought," which is only very old thought, as wise people all know. She had practiced the deep breathing and affirmations with unremitting zeal ever since the money stringency had thrown her out of a position. "Of course," she wisely said, "affirmations must be coupled with effort and belief." And she had kept on affirming and making efforts and believing.

But she was so tired this afternoon—in mind and body. She had done everything that mortal woman could do, short of begging for work, and that she would not do. She had a pride which not even threatened starvation could destroy. But she sat down, closed her eyes and in her accustomed way summoned the powers of good to her aid. She could get no light however, nor balm for her tired spirit. On the contrary, something seemed to whisper, "Better quit your nonsense and face the cold facts. You have but 75 cents, and if you want more you will have to get out and get it." It was true, perhaps. What should she do that she had not done? And then came the temptation which is apt to come to any woman in the world alone, who has to face the hard problem of earning a living. She thought of a young man she met that day in her search for work, and remembered what kind eyes he had. He had been so polite, had risen and opened the door for her and even stepped out in to the hall to wish her good luck. She felt so weary and discouraged at this moment that she could have cried her heart out on the shoulder of any man with kind eyes like his. She hoped she had kind eyes and got up to look in the mirror to see if she had. She saw there a pale, delicately-chiseled face framed in soft, brown hair—and true eyes. The thought came to her that they were true. "Truer than their possessor," she said, then accusingly she addressed her image: "Constance Allerton, you are a poor, weak little goose; in the past ten minutes you have been guilty of nearly every sin in the catalogue. Do you think the Lord is going back on you because you can't see which way to turn this minute? What are faith and new thought principles for? For hours of ease and prosperity alone? Choose this hour which ye shall serve." Her eyes flooded with tears, and she chose. New courage came, and she composed herself to solve the puzzle—to think her way out. What could she do? Art? No; artistic, but not an artist. Music? No; she could sing a little, play a little, but was not a skilled musician; Literature? No—yes; perhaps she might write a short story. She would try.

But it is hard to concentrate one's mind on story-writing when one has but 65 cents. It was 60 after breakfast the next morning, and with heavy heart Constance took up the search once more. She answered an advertisement for canvassers, but one must deposit $5. She came out disappointed, but "All is well," she said. A firm was in need of a stenographer, but the manager wanted some one whose home was in the city. Still, "All is well," she repeated for the thousandth time that day. She entered a jewelry store, where a careless clerk had left a tray of valuable rings on the counter. "Take one," a voice whispered, they would never know, and you might as well face the cold facts." She turned immediately and went out, but the temptation had been so great that she almost panted with the strain of it. With new strength born of a temptation resisted, she trudged bravely down the street. Long, deep breaths she took, as she thankfully murmured, "Only good can come." She was so intent upon her thought that she did not see the automobile swiftly rounding the corner, and before she could move it was upon her. She knew no more until she heard, as through a thousand thundering cataracts, a dim, far-away voice asking for the "facts in the case." Then she felt herself gently lifted in a man's arms and held tenderly against his breast as a mother holds her baby, and together they drifted away.

CHAPTER II.

Many long days she lay in the hospital. A young man came every day, brought flowers and inquired how the patient was progressing, only to hear she was not progressing at all. "There is one thing, however, that makes me hopeful," said the nurse. "She keeps moaning, 'All is well, all is well.'" "God grant it is," he replied, and went away with a new hope in his heart.

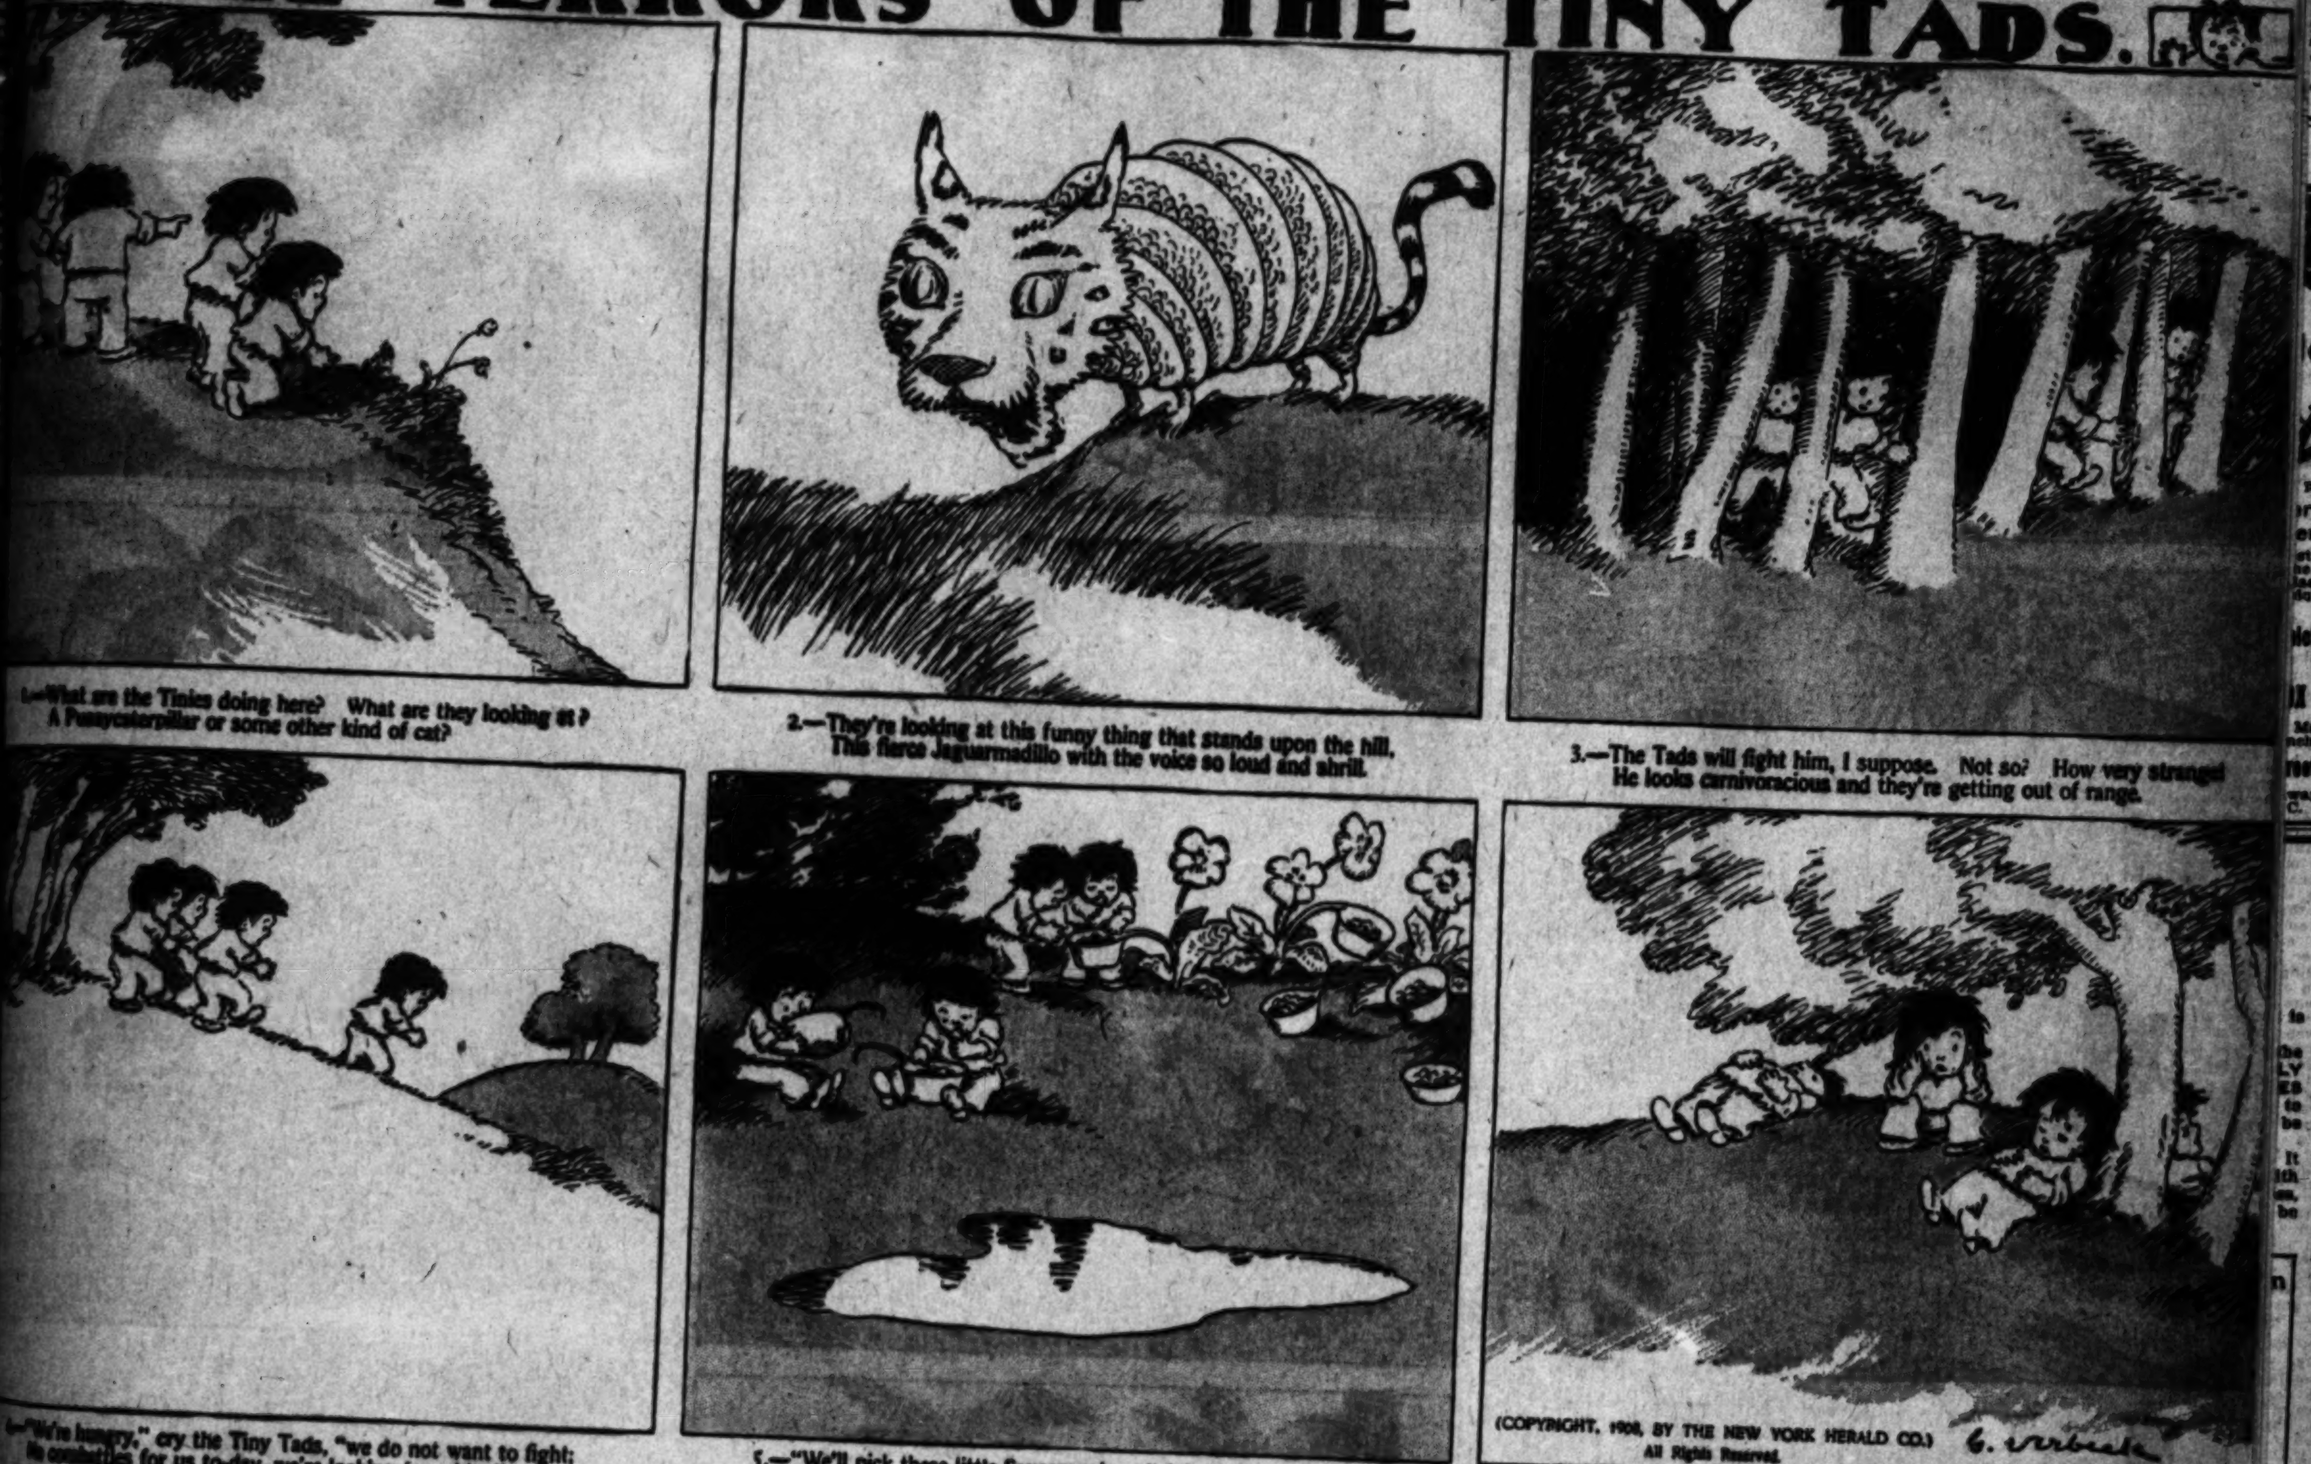
Then came the longed-for change, and each day brought new strength. Every day the young man came with the flowers and some days a lady came. One day Constance heard his voice. It was the same dim, far-away voice she had heard at the time of the accident, but this time it was not so far away, of course. She summoned strength enough to ask who it was, and the nurse told her it was Mr. Raymond, who had brought her to the hospital. She listened for his voice and grew to love it; it was music to her and acted like a tonic. She was always stronger after he came, and he never failed to come.

One sunny morning they put her in a big chair and moved her out on the balcony. Such a glorious summer morning! Leaves fluttering, birds twittering and the scent of a million flowers in the air! She sat happily in her big chair, waiting for the voice. Soon the nurse came and said a lady—Mrs. Raymond—would like to see her.

Mrs. Raymond! She tried to speak, tried to control the blood that swept away from her face and left her pale as the lilies that grew by the hospital wall, but the nurse saw and went back to tell Mrs. Raymond her patient could not stand the excitement that day.

As Constance sat there in silent misery, another voice, cold and hard and mocking, whispered to her over and over: "Mrs. Raymond! Yes, you might as well face the facts." Then another voice from her subconscious

THE TERRORS OF THE TINY TADS.



1.—What are the Tinies doing here? What are they looking at?
A Pussycaterpillar or some other kind of cat?

2.—They're looking at this funny thing that stands upon the hill,
This fierce Jaguarmadillo with the voice so loud and shrill.

3.—The Tads will fight him, I suppose. Not so? How very strange!
He looks carnivoracious and they're getting out of range.

4.—"We're hungry," cry the Tiny Tads, "we do not want to fight;
No combatties for us to-day, we're looking for a bite."

5.—"We'll pick these little Saucepansies, all full of Irish stew,
And then we'll just sit down and eat," and that is what they do.

6.—But, goodness me! they eat too much, they lie around and groan,
"I feel an Irish-stupor!" one Tad is heard to moan.

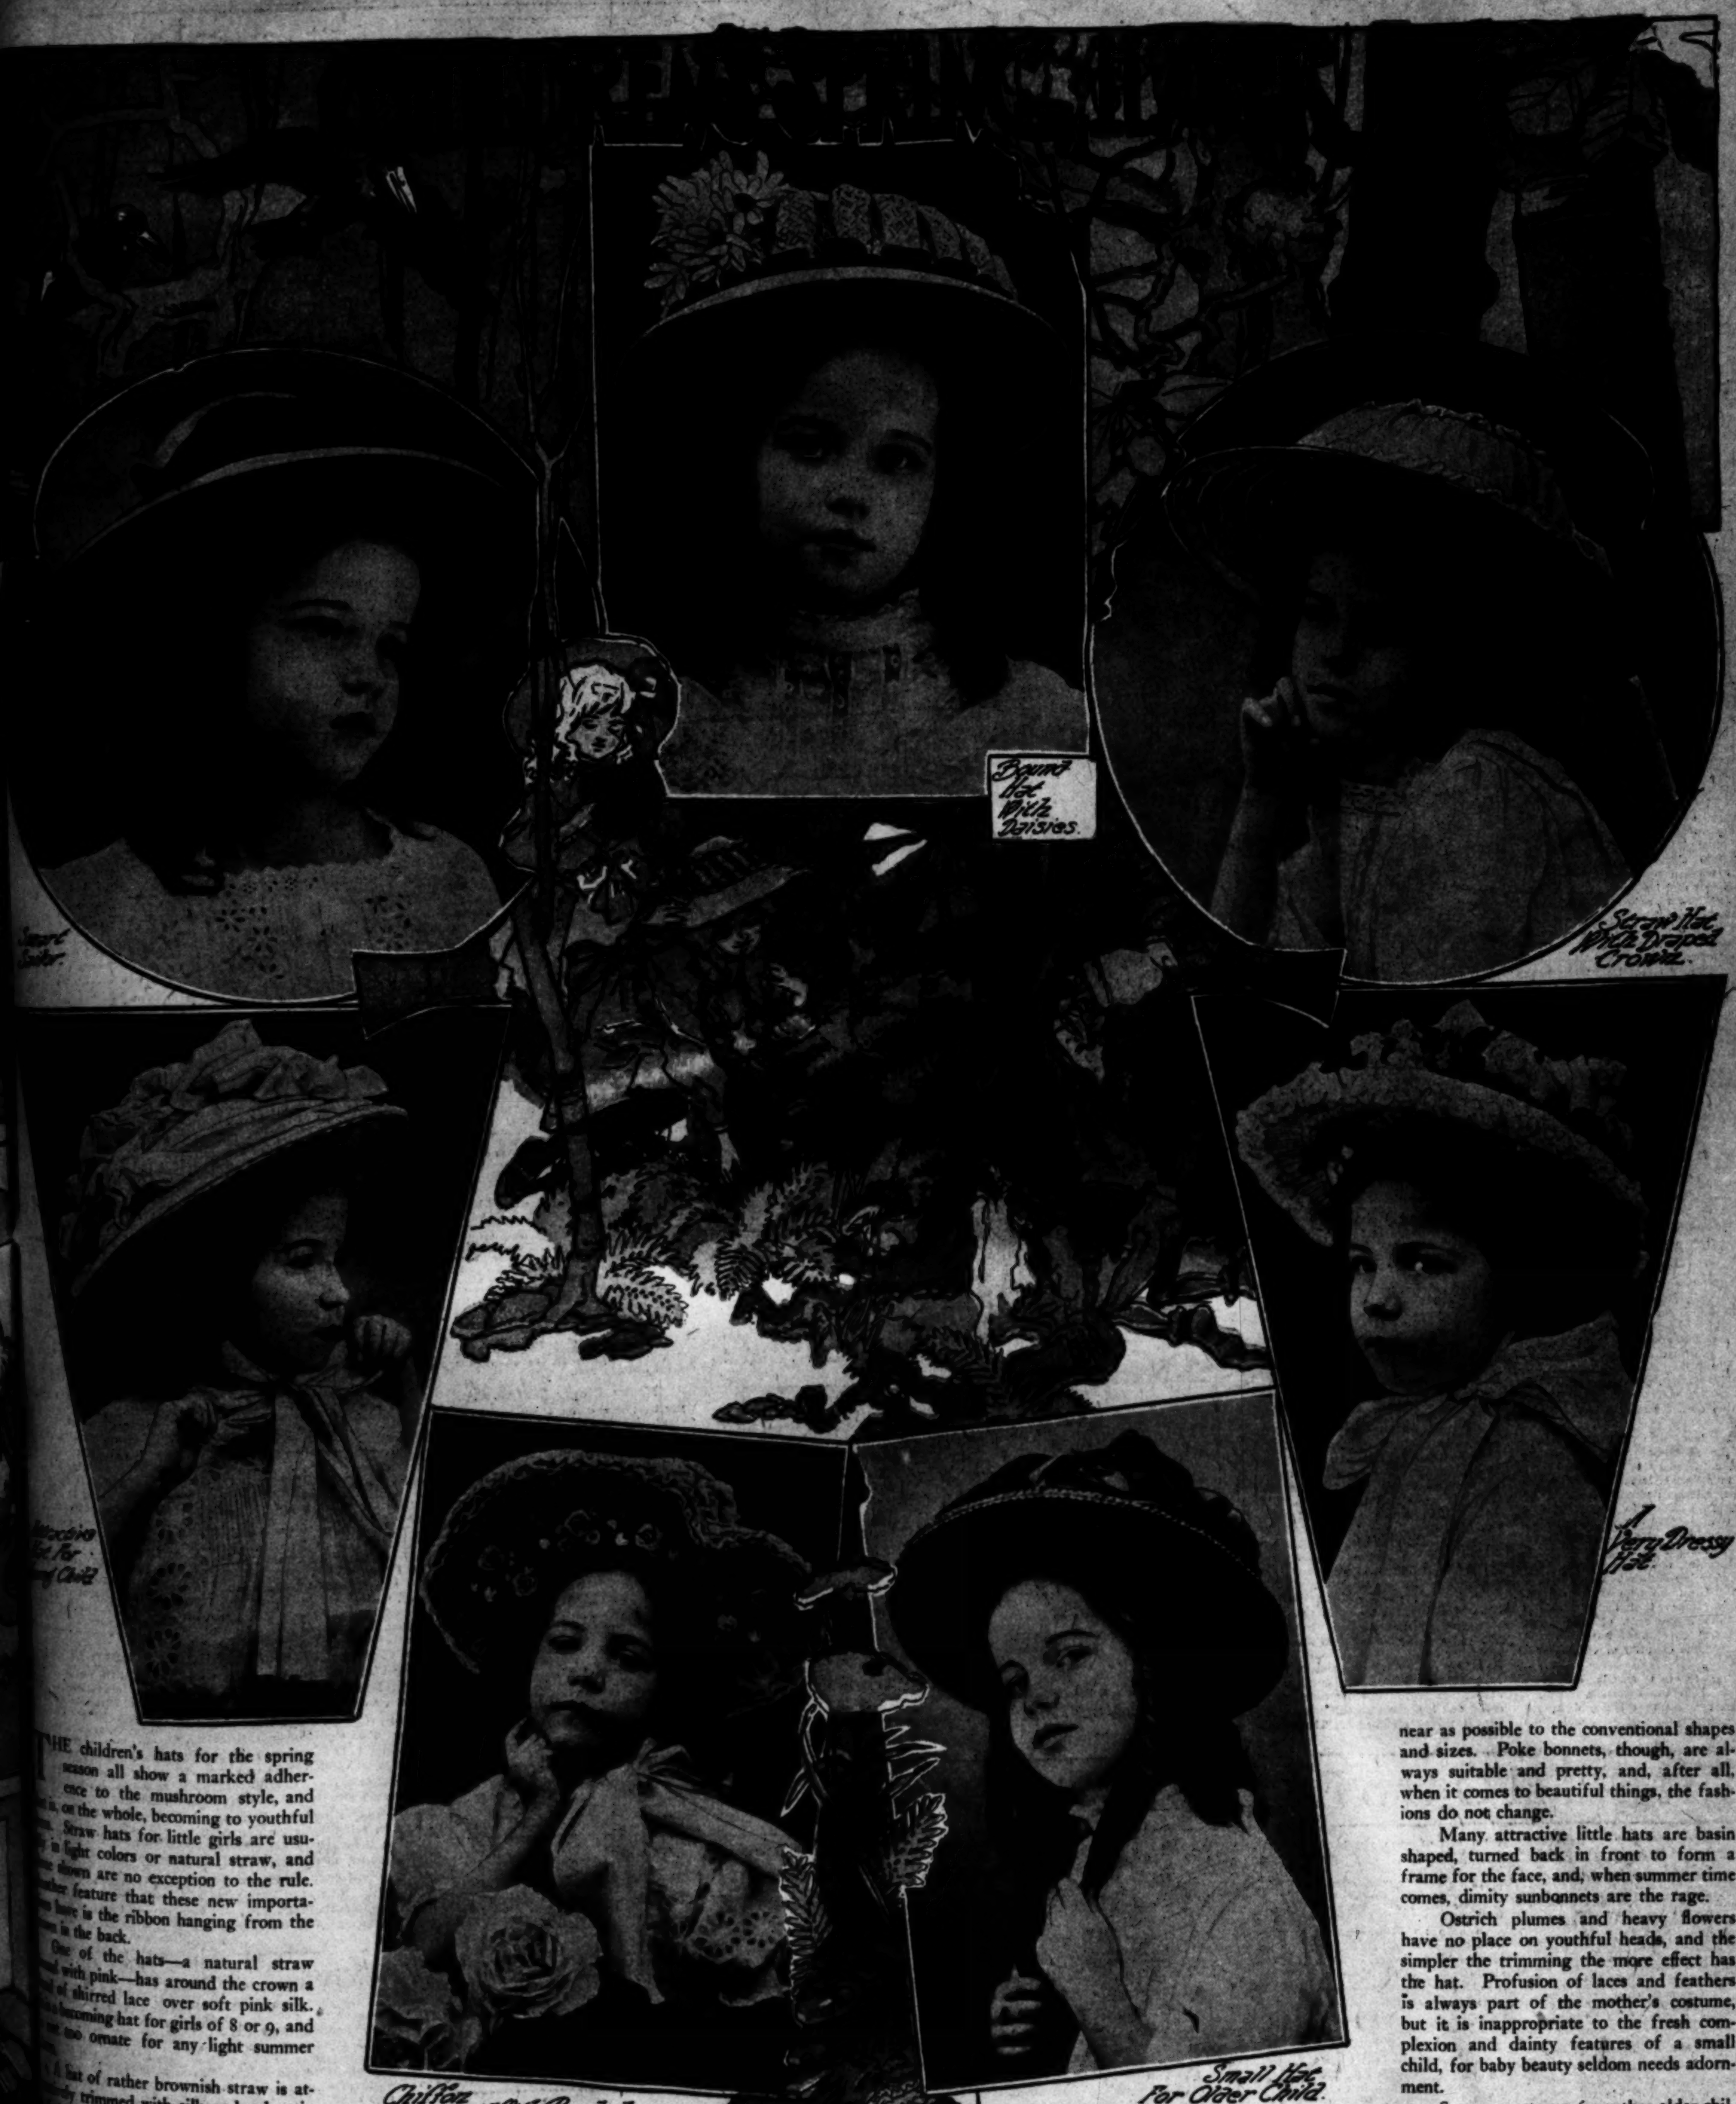
RESOLVED.

THAT WE ARE HAVING LOTS OF FUN DOWN HERE IN HAWAII. WE HAD A FINE DINNER OF POI LATELY. POI IS LIKE GLUE. YOU DIP YOUR FINGERS IN IT, MAKE THE FIGURE EIGHT IN THE AIR AND DROP IT IN YOUR MOUTH—IF YOU'RE LUCKY, THEN YOU TAKE A BATH. I WISH WE HAD SOME WHITE WASH BRUSHES TO USE FOR SPOONS. AFTER DINNER WE VISITED SOME RICE FIELDS BUT DIDN'T SEE ANY BRIDES, ALTHOUGH WE SAW A FEW OLD SHOES. SURF RIDING IS THE NATIONAL SPORT HERE; A LOT OF PEOPLE SWIM OUT WITH LONG PLANKS, STAND UP ON THEM, AND WAIT FOR A BIG WAVE TO TAKE THEM BACK AGAIN. I'M GOING TO BRING HOME SOME WAVES FOR MAMA'S HAIR. ONE THING I LIKE ABOUT THESE PEOPLE IS THAT THEY PADDLE THEIR OWN CANOES. WE HAD LOTS OF SPORT WITH THE MONKEY; IF WE HAD AN ORGAN WE WOULD GO IN BUSINESS.

BUSTER BROWN.



Smart Sailor.

Bound Hat With Daisies.

Straw Hat With Draped Crown.

Attractive Hat for Young Child.

Very Dressy Hat.

Chiffon Bonnet With Rosebuds.

Small Hat For Older Child.

THE children's hats for the spring season all show a marked adherence to the mushroom style, and [illegible] is, on the whole, becoming to youthful [illegible]. Straw hats for little girls are usually in light colors or natural straw, and the ones shown are no exception to the rule. Another feature that these new importations have is the ribbon hanging from the [illegible] in the back.

One of the hats—a natural straw [illegible] with pink—has around the crown a [illegible] of shirred lace over soft pink silk. [illegible] a becoming hat for girls of 8 or 9, and [illegible] too ornate for any light summer [illegible].

A hat of rather brownish straw is at[illegible] trimmed with silk and velvet in [illegible] shade of brown, while brown ribbon [illegible] attached to the inside of the crown [illegible] a bow under the chin. This would be [illegible] finish to a playtime costume, [illegible] is too dark to be injured in spring [illegible].

A very dressy hat of white straw lined [illegible] shirred chiffon is made on the poke [illegible] style, with a wreath of tiny rose[illegible] under the brim. It is a very childish [illegible] and the pink bow under the chin casts a [illegible] on the baby face.

Like it, only of a plainer shape, is the [illegible] hat with pink roses and light blue [illegible]. The combination of pink and blue is very Frenchy, and makes the child look like a Dresden shepherdess.

Beside the lingerie hats the little straw with a velvet edged band and daisies is very plain, but it is all the better for linen frocks and seashore breezes. The round shape is becoming, and there is nothing on the hat to fade or cause the little wearer any worry.

A cunning little bonnet is trimmed only with ribbon in knots and bows. It is all in white, and gives a charming finish to a lingerie frock. This hat would be most becoming in natural straw and dark blue ribbon to match a serge reefer.

Perhaps the neatest hat of all is the leghorn adorned with a black velvet bow and streamers. To a certain type nothing is more becoming, and in choosing such a plain little hat one's taste can never be at fault.

White is much used in the plain straws lined with linen, which are so very prominent among the juvenile fashions of the season.

Dressing a child 6 to 8 years is always a problem, and it is always wise to keep as near as possible to the conventional shapes and sizes. Poke bonnets, though, are always suitable and pretty, and, after all, when it comes to beautiful things, the fashions do not change.

Many attractive little hats are basin shaped, turned back in front to form a frame for the face, and, when summer time comes, dimity sunbonnets are the rage.

Ostrich plumes and heavy flowers have no place on youthful heads, and the simpler the trimming the more effect has the hat. Profusion of laces and feathers is always part of the mother's costume, but it is inappropriate to the fresh complexion and dainty features of a small child, for baby beauty seldom needs adornment.

Some new straws for rather older children are trimmed only with a huge chou of bias taffeta heavily pinked in a V. These are very plain and most becoming, at the same time following out the idea of the huge pompons so popular on women's hats for the season.

Still another, cerise, so very popular for adult fashions, is frequently used on hats for little girls, but only in the plainest of bows on leghorns or chips. Of course, it is too bright a color to be altogether suitable for youthful wear, but it is, nevertheless, becoming, and, above all, it is the style during the spring of 1908.

HONEY AND ITS USES

Making Honey Cakes.

Filling Honey Drops.

Stirring the Honey Through a Wire Strainer.

HONEY is one of the earliest sweets of which we have any knowledge. In Bible records honey is frequently referred to, not only as an article of food, but as a synonym for sweetness. Samson and the honeycomb, the honey put among the provisions bestowed by Joseph upon Benjamin, and included among other gifts sent as friendly offerings on sundry occasions; the locusts and wild honey of John the Baptist—these and other references to honey are familiar to all Scripture students. For some unexplained reason, honey was, in certain circumstances, supposed to confer wisdom upon the one who ate it. "Butter and honey shall he eat that he may know to refuse the evil and to choose the good," said Isaiah; and there is the story told of Jonathan eating the forbidden honeycomb, and thereby having his eyes enlightened. Leaving sacred history, we recall that the honey of Hymettus has been famous ever since the days when Greece was a power, and there are mentions of honey in many classical writings.

It seems a little odd that honey is not more of an article of diet in this country—not because of indorsement of it in sacred and profane writings, but because in other countries it is held in high esteem as a food. The traveler in Switzerland would feel that his breakfast was at fault if there were not a dish of clear, strained honey provided for him. The dwellers in the Black Forest and in other parts of Germany make honey an important part of their regular dietary, and other European nations hold honey in good repute.

WHAT IT IS COMPOSED OF

In the United States I do not think it generally has a good reputation. I have found a prevailing impression that it is not digestible. "Be careful how you eat honey," I have been warned by those who seemed to understand their subject. Yet an excellent authority on matters relating to dietetics speaks of honey as "a wholesome food, and fattening when eaten with bread." He also supplies a definition of the sweet under consideration.

"Honey is a form of sugar prepared from the nectar of various flowering plants, gathered by bees, and stored by them in cells. It is really a vegetable product, although manufactured by an insect. In addition to sugar, it holds several other ingredients, principally wax, gum, pigment and odorous materials. The sugar exists in two forms—crystallizable and non-crystallizable. The former is somewhat similar to glucose." Then follows an analysis, from which we learn that honey contains more than 73 per cent. of fruit sugar and over 16 per cent. of water, as well as a negligible quantity of other ingredients.

Nothing in this sounds especially threatening to the digestion, and yet the fact remains that honey disagrees with some persons seriously, and when it disagrees with them at all, it is likely to be in a very unpleasant fashion. There can be no doubt that honey in the comb is more of a tax to the stomach than the strained honey. Even if the cells are those made by the bees themselves, instead of the artificial combs of paraffine now manufactured as a labor-saving means for the insects, it stands to reason that the wax cannot be easily assimilated. Let me counsel those who have suffered from eating honey in the comb to make a cautious trial of the strained honey before condemning the sweet entirely as an article of diet.

Honey-Comb and Wooden Box.

Beehives of the Present Day.

There is no question as to the value of honey in treatment of colds of the throat or chest. Its presence is taken for granted in many of the preparations manufactured for use in coughs and colds, and it is most soothing to the irritated throat membrane. The housemother who wishes to prepare a remedy of this sort of which she can be sure, and who objects to uncovenanted drugs in her cough syrups, may beat up a little honey and cream together, as it is needed, and give it to her invalid by the teaspoonful to check cough or irritation.

Honey bears its part in various articles of food as well as in the pharmacy of the household, and it will be worth while for the woman who seeks a change in cookery to try some of the dishes in which honey is an ingredient. I append recipes for a few of them:

Honey Cakes.

Sift two cups of flour and stir into them a cupful of sour cream, two tablespoonfuls of strained honey and an equal quantity of granulated sugar, a quarter teaspoonful of powdered cinnamon and a half teaspoonful of ground ginger. Beat all together thoroughly and at the last add an even teaspoonful of soda dissolved in a couple of tablespoonfuls of boiling water. Beat hard again and pour the batter into small pans, very well greased. If you prefer, you may bake it all in one good-sized pan. The small cakes will require about twenty minutes' baking. This cake is especially good eaten hot.

Honey Gingerbread.

Beat two tablespoonfuls of strained honey into half a cupful of butter, first warming the butter slightly. Whip the two to a cream and then beat in a teaspoonful of cinnamon and a tablespoonful each of powdered sugar and of ground ginger. Have ready four eggs, whipped light, the yolks and whites separately, and add these alternately to the other ingredients. Last of all beat in three cupfuls of flour sifted with a heaping teaspoonful of baking powder. Give a final vigorous beating of about one minute and turn into shallow baking tins or small muffin or patty pans. Bake, covered, for half an hour; uncover and brown. The oven should be steady and not too fierce in heat.

Honey Ginger Wafers.

Mix together a cupful of sugar and two cupfuls of flour and rub into them half a cupful of butter, and stir in a half tablespoonful of ground ginger. Add to this the juice of a lemon and half the grated peel and enough strained honey to make a batter. Grease a shallow tin very thoroughly and pour in the batter in a thin layer. Bake in a moderate oven, watching carefully to prevent burning. When done, cut the cake into strips three inches in width and while still warm roll around a greased stick about the size of your finger. Keep in a tin after they are cold, as they soften when exposed to the air. If too moist when you wish to use them, put them into the oven for a few minutes to become crisp.

English Honey Cakes.

Mix a quarter pound of sugar with a light two pounds of flour and a tablespoonful of ground ginger and work to a smooth dough, with a quarter pound of butter beaten to a cream, three-quarters of a pound of strained honey, half a nutmeg grated and a teaspoonful of baking soda dissolved in a little boiling water. Roll out a quarter of an inch thick, cut into small cakes with a biscuit cutter and bake twenty-five minutes in a moderate oven.

Dutch Honey Cake.

From your breadbowl take a piece of your raised bread dough weighing about a pound and work into it a pound of strained honey, a quarter cupful of butter, a half teaspoon of cinnamon and a pinch each of ground cloves and nutmeg, the grated rind of a lemon, a quarter pound of citron and an ounce of candied ginger, both shredded; the yolks of four eggs, beaten, and the whites of two, whipped light; a half teaspoonful of soda dissolved in hot water and one cupful of flour. Make into a loaf and bake covered for three-quarters of an hour before uncovering and browning. In some respects this resembles the old-fashioned New England bread cake, although much more elaborate—and indigestible.

Honey and Nut Cordial.

Blanch and pound four ounces of bitter almonds and two ounces of sweet almonds and mix them with two pounds of granulated sugar. Boil a pint of milk, let it get cold and put with it the nuts and sugar, the juice and grated rind of three lemons, two large tablespoonfuls of strained honey and two quarts of good brandy. Let all stand together for ten days, shaking them up every day. At the end of the time strain the mixture through a fine cloth, bottle and seal.

An excellent tonic cordial to be taken a little at a time, for the exhaustion accompanying and following severe colds.

About Dying Clothes at Home

NOW that it is the accepted rule that the waist of a suit must match coat and skirt in color, if not in material, it is good to know that any old waist that is soiled, not worn, providing it is of net or lace, can be made to follow this last dictate of fashion.

Just dye it, put the whole "bunch" in a pot of prepared dye, blue or green, or red or black, as the case may be, and by carefully following the printed directions on the envelope containing the color powder you will have a result that will be surprisingly satisfactory. Of course, it is not wise to dye different materials at the same time, as the length of time required is different and sometimes a different treatment is necessary. So only lightweight materials should be selected for the first trial.

One of those dainty net blouses was dyed recently, and the medallions and insertion and edging of valenciennes with which it was trimmed "took" beautifully, and the waist was ready for wear the afternoon of the same day it changed its color.

A Help in the Kitchen

A NEW utensil to make cooking easy is shown, of a peculiar shape, something like an apple corer, which it is, and fitted at the other end, not the corer end, with a horizontal blade like a knife. The round end cores apples, cuts vegetables into dice-like forms and takes the heart out of fruit, while the knife peels potatoes, makes Saratoga chips, cuts coldslaw and presumably chops meat. It is certainly a very wonderful discovery, and if it can do indefinitely all that it seems to do when it is shown, it can take the place of every utensil in the kitchen.

Towels for a Casual Guest

MOST attractive little towels are shown in the shops measuring only about twelve inches wide and sixteen inches long. They are very useful in the bath room for the use of guests and they are far less trouble to have washed than the larger and handsomer ones.

In using towels of this sort it is not necessary to have the coarse affairs commonly placed in club rooms, but these diminutive towels could be of damask, as the best of the larger variety, and when they are embroidered with the initials of the owner they are not only useful, but in the best of taste.

THE HOUSEMOTHERS' EXCHANGE

THE housewife who spilled ink upon the carpet of a fastidious "in-law" may remove it without injury to the texture.

Get 10 cents' worth of citric acid, dissolve it in warm water and apply to the ink spots with a sponge or cloth (and lots of elbow-grease)! Lastly, rinse with warm water, into which has been stirred a little household ammonia. Rub it as dry as you can with several clean cloths.

I had a similar experience three years ago. I discovered dried ink in the green border of my new library rug. The citric acid removed it so thoroughly that I could not tell just where the spot had been. I have never used it to take ink spots from books, but I am told by those who have, that it may be thus used. It does not injure printers' ink, into the composition of which iron does not enter.

In return for the foregoing will you give me a recipe for cinnamon buns?

"BETTY" (Norristown, Pa.).

You have earned your recipe, and we are still deep in your debt. To extract ink from a colored fabric without injuring the ground color is a problem few have learned.

Cinnamon Buns.

Set aside for these a cupful of dough after it has had the second rising on baking day. Cream a half cupful of butter with the like quantity of sugar, stir in a well-beaten egg, and work these into the dough. Add a half teaspoonful of cinnamon, a teaspoonful (scant) of soda dissolved in hot water and a half cupful of cleaned currants dredged with flour.

Knead diligently for five minutes, make out into buns, and let them rise for half an hour, or until they have doubled the original bulk, before baking. Cover for the first half hour they spend in the oven; then brown.

Wants Books for Boys

I am the mother of four little boys. The oldest is 10 and the youngest is 3. I have to work hard all the time finishing coats, and the children have nothing to read. They love story-books, and I cannot afford to buy them. Neither have they any playthings. If some boy has old playthings he doesn't care for any more, I should be very thankful if he would send them to the youngest boy. When the one goes to school he is very lonesome as I am at my sewing. I could not afford to pay high express charges.

In part payment for putting this into the Exchange will you accept a good recipe for sauer kraut.

Boil the sauer kraut tender—a pint of it. Drain and put back over the fire. Fry an onion in lard when you have sliced it, grate two raw potatoes of medium size. Put the grated potatoes into the sauer kraut. Boil ten minutes. Add the fried onion. Cook for a minute, and it is ready for eating.

I know this is very little for what I ask, but poor people have not much to give away.

B. R. (Chicago).

We keep no balance sheet for our members. It is enough to know that an opportunity to do good and to communicate is laid to our hand, and we are the obliged party in the transaction.

I submit the case without further summing up. I hold the mother's address.

Cement for Glass

I clip from your column a request for a cement for glass for an aquarium.

The formula for aquarium cement recommended by the United States Fish Commission is as follows:

"Stir together by weight eight parts of pulverized putty (dry whiting), one part red lead and one part litharge. Mix, as it is needed for use, with pure linseed oil to the consistency of putty. Allow it to dry a week before using."

Another waterproof cement is made by dry-mixing ten parts, each, of fine, dry, white sand, plaster of paris and litharge, with one part powdered resin. Work, as it is required, to a stiff paste with boiled linseed oil. The oil must be free from any adulteration with fish oil. It is sometimes necessary to boil pure raw linseed oil for a few minutes to expel the water.

Mrs. G. (Troy, Pa.).

I hope the two correspondents who have asked for aquarium cement will see and keep these formulas. Both are excellent.

For Frost Sufferers

Will you let me tell the members of the Exchange of something that must interest many now that winter has brought to us a plentiful crop of frost-bitten ears and chilblained feet?

I was a grievous sufferer from chilblains for years. For eleven years past I have not been tormented by them. And this is what cured me:

I was advised by a friend to pour kerosene oil in a saucer, wring out a rag in it and with this wipe the affected parts several times each day. If I awoke in the night, I was also to do the same thing. He warned me not to saturate the cloth and lay it upon the chilblains, as it might cause a blister. I was to wipe the feet with the dampened cloth and let them dry of themselves. If I recollect aright, the chilblains were cured in a week's time. I trust this simple remedy may relieve other sufferers as it relieved me.

ROBERT M. (Buffalo, N. Y.).

You have conferred a favor upon more persons than you can imagine would be concerned in the matter you discuss. "The cry of the children" and the groans of their seniors under the anguish of frost bites are abroad in the land to an unusual extent this winter. Heavy snows, that tempted ill-shod youngsters to the coasting grounds, and unexpected storms of snow and sleet which found men and women away from home without galoshes, have wrought their evil work in hundreds of homes. The remedy you propose is simple, cheap and within the reach of all.

Wants Recipe for Goulash

I have watched the exchange from week to week in the hope that somebody would send in a recipe for Hungarian goulash. Will you try to get it for me? What are the proper meats to be used in it?

I have a restaurant in which are served 10-cent meals. I have been making the goulash of beef. My patrons insist that it should be made of other meat. As some of them are constantly praising a rival restaurant, where the cook is famous for her goulash, you can readily see that mine is not an idle request. It means my bread and butter!

Any recipe for other cheap dishes—for example, cooking liver in any other way than by frying—would be gratefully appreciated.

M. E. B. (Minneapolis).

While Hungarian goulash is usually made of beef, I see no reason why veal should not be substituted. Will correspondents, who can enlighten us on this head, let us hear from them, and supply our querist with the coveted cheap (good) recipes?

Liver En Casserole.

Put a lamb's liver (sliced) into deep water to draw out the blood. Meanwhile fry fat salt pork until it begins to crisp. Strain off the fat; set the pork aside and fry a sliced onion in the same fat. Next, lay the liver—carefully wiped dry—in the pan and cook fast for five minutes, turning once that both sides may be seared. Now lay liver, pork and onion in a bakedish that has a close top. Have ready about a dozen potato balls, cut with a gouge, which have been parboiled. Lay them about the liver, sprinkle with parsley, pepper and a few drops of lemon juice; put in enough weak stock to fill the dish half way up to the top; fit on the cover and bake for a full hour, without opening it. It is savory, and "goes" much further than fried liver.

Wants Dye for Horsehair Braid

Do you know of any way to dye horsehair braid? I have a white hat of that braid which, although in good condition, has become very grimy with use. I should like to dye it black.

Here is a recipe for chocolate icing without eggs:

One cup of granulated sugar, half a cup of water, a small piece of butter and chocolate to taste. Boil until it forms a soft ball when dropped into water. Beat hard and spread.

Here are two suggestions:

Crackers, ground or rolled fine and kept in a covered jar, ready for use, save much time to the busy housewife.

A band about two inches wide, set in the back of a corset cover, will make it last twice as long for the wearer who has been in the habit of tearing it with pins. Make the band two inches long in the middle and slope to the usual width.

Mrs. G. H. F. (Hick's Run, Pa.).

Your query as to dyes is passed on to those better versed than myself in coloring fabrics at home.

Let us hear from you again.

Novel Dishes for Afternoon Affairs

WHAT mistress of a house or cosy apartment does not delight in having three congenial women friends in for an "all-day" affair? Be the amusement cards or intimate talk over the fancy work, the hostess wishes to enjoy every minute of her guests' stay and can well wish to plan her simple luncheon menu with that end in view. Little recipes that can be prepared beforehand are, therefore, of value to her, and the salad course offers many opportunities for display of housewifely skill. One easy and simple salad is made by cutting into squares a small cake of Neufchatel cheese. These are laid in cups of crisp lettuce leaves and about a teaspoonful of chopped English walnuts placed on each. If desired this can be further garnished with halved walnuts and seeded Malaga grapes. Just before serving mayonnaise dressing is added.

Delicious sandwiches can also be made with soft cream cheese by mixing with a small quantity of olive oil and stirring into the paste. This done, add chopped stuffed olives. This filling can be made and put away, and at the last moment spread between thin slices of bread.

For afternoon teas or any occasion where between-meals refreshments are served, a novelty is made by mixing the cheese with ground walnuts, and, after rolling it into tiny balls, place between the two halves of a seeded date.

A New Salad

A NEW variation on the now familiar Waldorf salad has been invented, where the apple is peeled, cored and cut in cross slices. One slice is laid upon a few lettuce leaves on each plate, and over it is put a layer of bar-le-duc and cream cheese, which has been put through a potato masher, while around the whole is arranged a circle of mayonnaise dressing. A prettier dish can hardly be imagined, and, by the way, the cheese is never so good as it is when used in this way or beaten up with a little whipped cream.

MICHAEL'S WISH: A STORY OF ST. PATRICK'S DAY

"AN', as I was sayin', darlint, whin the blessed St. Pathrick druv the snakes from the Imerald Isle, he sez to himself that he would hev to sind away the ghosts and the goblins and the banshees, bekase for Christhians to be pothered by sich wouldn't do at all. Accordin'ly, most of the ghosts an' the goblins an' the good banshees took to their heels at wunst; but minny a bad banshee paid no notice o' what the saint hed ordthered, but stayed an' brought minny a body to their death.

"Sure, I mustn't be a-tellin' to you sich things, that's not for the likes o' you to hear. But, faith, me head's full of thim, since tomorrow's St. Patrick's Day." Here Bridget closed her lips resolutely, nor could she be beguiled into parting with more of her wonderful stock of folk-lore.

However, Michael had heard enough to put his head in a whirl. Material he had gained enough for a dozen day-dreams. Dreaming, you know, occupied a large part of the lad's time. In fact, when your father's a captain in the army, and you live at a lonely army post out on the plains, there frequently isn't very much else to do. There were no other little boys to play with. Michael would have been forlorn, indeed, had there been no Bridget to spin fanciful tales for him.

So full was his head with banshees and fairies that Michael was unable to sleep that night. So you can see, can't you, that what happened him surely must have been "real"? Michael would have told you that, as he lay upon his little cot, he slept not one wink.

A SPLENDID BANSHEE

The banshee came just after the prolonged cry of "All's well!" from the guard on Number One post. It was a splendid banshee—not at all like the shriveled, old hags which Bridget had told him were the wicked ones. No, indeed, this was a good banshee, like a beautiful fairy princess. Quite trustingly he put his hand in hers when she sweetly bade him prepare for their journey. Then together they flew over hill and dale, streams and rivers, until at last they crossed the broad ocean.

Speeding swiftly above Ireland, the two finally alighted in a wild mountain glen. Although it was quite dark, Michael found that he could see very well. He, therefore, had ample opportunity to admire the marvelous scenery round about him.

The boy was led by the banshee up the mountain slope into an immense cavern. Here was assembled a great company of banshees.

"Welcome!" they cried, one and all, upon beholding the lad.

Michael's guide whispered to him that once a year the banshees were permitted to return to the earth, and that upon such occasions they always met in this place. What astonished the lad most was to find among the gathering several little banshee boys. He quickly made their acquaintance, and with one in particular he became quite chummy.

So pleased was Michael with his new friend that when the banshee fairy came to him and told him that soon she must take him home he pleaded with her to let the little banshee boy come with him.

"No one but St. Patrick himself could grant such permission," said the fairy, shaking her head regretfully.

At this very moment who should enter the cavern but St. Patrick himself! At first one could see nothing but a bright light, so brilliant was the halo about the good saint, but after a while one could distinguish a kind, smiling face that made you wish to worship him all the more.

WONDERFUL TALES ABOUT BANSHEES

The banshees bowed humbly before the saint. He asked them different questions, and hoped they were passing the evening pleasantly. Turning to Michael, he asked:

"How came this mortal among you?"

The good banshee fairy promptly told St. Patrick how lonely Michael had been, and that he had been brought in order to give him a little enjoyment for the evening. She went on to tell of the lad's request that the little banshee be allowed to accompany him home as a playfellow.

"Well," said the saint, reflectively; "I am of a mind to grant this request. But, remember, my little friend; when daylight comes you'll see nothing of your playmate but a shadow; and when the sun doesn't shine you'll see him not at all."

Michael was overjoyed. He gratefully murmured his thanks, whereupon St. Patrick mysteriously disappeared and so did the cavern, and the banshees—and Ireland. Michael found himself in his little cot at home.

But somehow he felt that his friend, the banshee boy, was with him. He spoke, and, yes! there came a soft reply. He didn't have to speak out loud, you know. He merely "thought" it; always there was a whispered answer.

From that day Michael played and played with his shadow companion. Every one about the fort wondered why the boy suddenly should have become so contented and happy. Once—and once only—he told his secret. But Sergeant Kelley laughed at him and declared he was playing with his own shadow. Michael knew better, however, though he never breathed his secret again, not even to Bridget.

Thereafter whenever Bridget talked about St. Patrick or banshees, Michael looked at her in the wise way which only those have who know all about such things. Of course, he had a perfect right to assume such an air; for who knew better than he?

What They Want to Become

NOT long ago a class of boys was requested to write essays on the interesting subject, "What I should like to be when I am a man, and why."

One boy wrote that he would like to be on a newspaper, his chief reason being that "I would be in the office most of the time and could keep warm." He adds: "What is required is some paper and a pen."

Another wished to be a policeman. "A policeman gets plenty of air," wrote he, "and he must be brave and strong. When people don't behave he is allowed to whack them."

A boy is desirous of being a teacher "because they have plenty of holidays. It is easy work. The things required are blackboard, chalk, maps and books."

One youngster intends to be a coachman so he can wear top boots, a top hat and big coat; and another a baker, in order that he may always have lots to eat.

Only one wishes to be a barber and "use scissors and a razor, and wear a white jacket and apron."

Many desire to be soldiers and sailors, for various reasons.

Couldn't Fool Him.

"William," asked the teacher, "if seven sheep are on one side of the fence, and one jumps over it, how many will there be left?"

"None," was William's prompt reply.

"Why not?"

"There wouldn't be none left," confidently repeated William; "'cause if one bolted all the rest would follow."

Later in the lesson William again distinguished himself by defining a "buttress" as a "nanny-goat." The teacher's good opinion of Willie's cleverness seems to be justified.

Highly Probable.

School Director (reading)—"She threw herself into the river. Her husband, horror-stricken, rushed to the bank—" Now, can any boy tell me what the husband rushed to the bank for?

Bright Boy (in rear of room)—To get the insurance money, sir.

The CHIMNEY SWEEP

"CHIMNEYS I'll clean! Chimneys I'll sweep!"
You hear shouted from sunrise till stars 'gin to peep;
London has smoke; London has fogs—
(If you doubt it, just look at the chimney sweep's "togs")—
All good chimneys this fog and smoke "mixture" despise
And it seems much to trouble the youngster who cries:
"Your chimney, your chimney I'll sweep!"

"Chimneys I'll sweep! Chimneys I'll clean!"
Tells the tale of a life that is humble and mean;
Chimneys with soot, chimneys with grime—
Yet more black are the "sweeps" than the chimneys they climb;
But though hungry, though soiled, though unkempt he may be,
Rings the song of the "sweep" ever gaily and free:
"Your chimney, your chimney I'll clean!"

GRANDMA'S GOWN

NATURALLY, Mildred was greatly disappointed. But she really didn't see how she possibly could have done otherwise. You see, all the girls—Nina, Sarah, Alice and herself—had been invited to the party given by Rose Gordon. And as the Gordons lived five miles away, a rather long drive was necessary. It was indeed a shame that the buggy would hold only three of the girls. However, since one must be left, Mildred at once chose to be that one, for she knew how very badly Nina or Sarah or Alice would feel to be denied such a pleasure.

Yes, she did feel lonely when all had departed and she remained alone in the big house. She certainly must do something in order to try to "forget"; so she climbed up the broad stairway, and then up two other flights of steps, until she reached the tiny attic, right under the gable of the roof. She always went there, you know, when she wished to forget her troubles.

There she was alone with her Secret. It was a delightful secret, too. Delving in the great "hair" trunk, she would bring forth the old garments of her grandmother. Then such fun she had donning this treasured finery and bowing to herself in the huge antique mirror whose frame was festooned with cobwebs!

Was that the doorbell ringing? Breathlessly she tiptoed to the bottom of the attic stairs. Yes, there was the sound again. Forgetting entirely her costume, she ran down to the door and flung it open.

It was a very nice-looking man who stood on the steps, but why did he stare at her so? Oh, now she remembered! Growing painfully red she half turned, as though to flee in her confusion.

"Won't you PLEASE stay just as you are?" eagerly begged the man. "I'd be ever so much obliged."

Taking a pad and pencil from his pocket he rapidly began to sketch, chatting briskly to her the while. He was an artist, he said, and had come merely to ask permission to sketch within the grounds.

FLUNG THE DOOR OPEN

"Charming! charming study!" he remarked when he had finished, and had carefully tucked the completed sketch away in his capacious pockets. Than he talked so nicely to Mildred that before she realised what she was doing he had learned all about her troubles.

And THEN what did the kind Artist Man do but take her on a good, long automobile ride! You see, he had left the car right outside the gate. Enjoy herself? Why, she had one of the best times of her life. And you may be sure that she didn't regret in the least her absence from the party.

So tomorrow I want you to betake yourselves to the city and enjoy yourselves there as best you may."

Pietro and Carmina were filled with joy. The family were so very poor, you know, that such pleasures as these could ill be afforded. It was kind, indeed, of their father to so reward their faithfulness.

Arrayed in their very best garments, the boy and girl joined the holiday throngs in Rome the following day. What fun it was to watch the merry crowds!

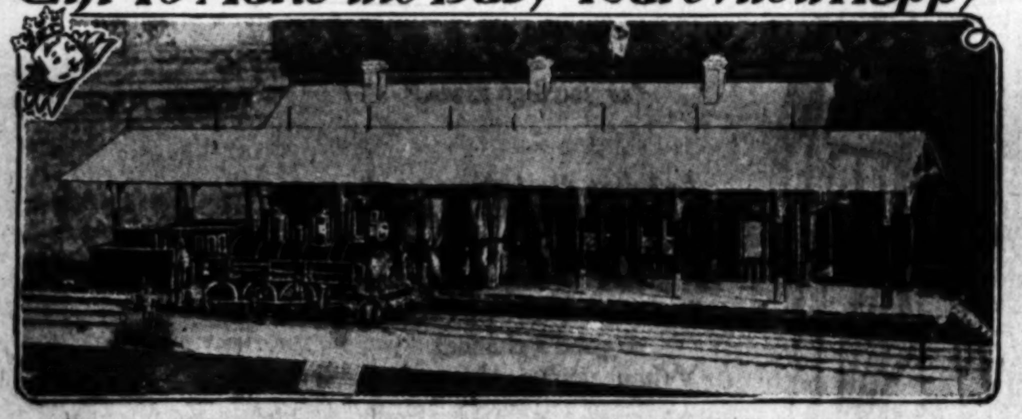
In the afternoon they went to a pleasure garden, where they swayed to and fro in a lovely swing and played "see-saw" on the nicest kind of a machine. Then they bought some sweetmeats. These they devoured on the way home.

Never before had they had such a glorious time.

And, best of all, the very next day the beautiful American lady sent for Pietro and Carmina and gave both of them employment about the villa. She was such a good, kind mistress, and the hire was so generous that they were able to assist their father greatly.

So, in time, the family became quite prosperous—and all because of the honesty of Pietro in one little thing.

Gift To Make the Baby Tsarevitch Happy



ISN'T this a splendid toy! But it really isn't a toy. Though just the right size for the little son of the tsar of Russia, the locomotive is as real and complete as the biggest engine ever made. The little station you see is an exact model of the Imperial Railway Station at Tsarskoe Selo, built by the First Railway Battalion. It is completely furnished and fitted, and lighted by electricity. All of six months was required for the construction of the locomotive, the value of which exceeds $3000. Miniature guards are stationed round about the station, lending to the air of reality.

This present came from the tsar several months ago. You wouldn't mind being the tsarevitch for a time, would you, if you would receive such handsome gifts as these? Think of all the fun you could have, running your engine round and round the circle of gleaming track!

Discovered it Wouldn't Keep.

Harold—Mother, I bought sister's birthday gift today.

Mother—What did you buy?

Harold—A cream puff.

Mother—A cream puff? Why, the birthday won't be here until next week.

Harold—Yes'm; I found that the cream puff wouldn't keep all that time, so I had to eat it myself. But sister'll 'preciate it just the same, won't she, mother?

A Difficult Feat.

Ask two persons to kneel, and have each of them hold up his right foot by means of his right hand. This will necessitate careful balancing on the left knee.

Then have one hold in his left hand a goblet filled with water, and have the other hold in his left hand an empty glass. Tell them to face each other and to pour the water from one glass into the other. Simple as this may sound, they will find it a feat exceedingly difficult of accomplishment.

Unexcusable Carelessness.

Teacher—Remember, Isaac, I started with one dollar. I spent 15 cents for fruit and 10 cents for candy. How much had I left?

Isaac (in disgust)—Well, why didn't you count your change, teacher?

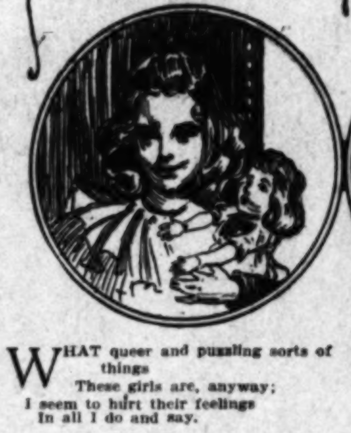
Tommy's Opinion of Girls



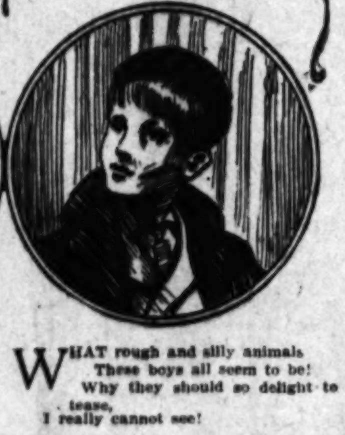
WHAT queer and puzzling sorts of things
These girls are, anyway;
I seem to hurt their feelings
In all I do and say.

They don't at all enjoy my games,
They say I am too rough!
And should I chance to test their strength,
They soon cry out "enough!"

They much prefer to sit aside
And nurse a foolish doll,
And if I sneer and laugh, I'm called
A brute—it does beat all!

When I asked my big brother why
'Tis so, he shook his head.
"You'll find the puzzle harder still
As you grow up," he said.

Mary's Opinion of Boys



WHAT rough and silly animals
These boys all seem to be!
Why they should so delight to tease,
I really cannot see!

They're never happy or content
Unless they're playing games
That put their valor to the test,
And only failure tames.

Then at our peaceful play with dolls
They love to jest and sneer;
In fact, they always ridicule
The things we hold most dear.

I asked my grown-up sister why
The boys are fashioned so.
"You'll find the men are still more queer,"
She smiled, "as old you grow!"

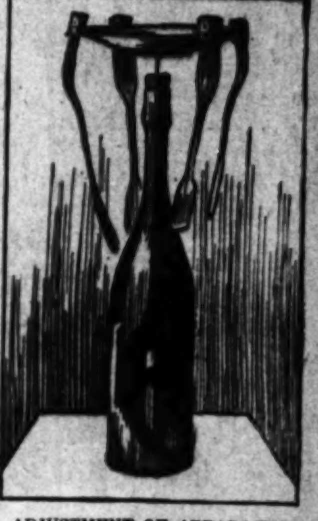
BALANCING TRICK

CAN you balance a plate on the point of a needle? Very likely you will think not; but you will be able to perform this trick—after you've learned the right way. There may be a number of wrong ways, but usually there's only one right way. So it is in this case.

Stick a needle through a stout cork, lengthwise, allowing the point to protrude a little above the top of the cork. That part of the needle which protrudes at the base of the cork cut off with a pair of sharp pincers, on a level with the cork. Insert the cork firmly in the neck of a good-sized bottle.

Split two other corks in half, along their length. Run a needle through each half cork, having it enter on the long, freshly made surface and almost at right angles to it. By this arrangement you can fasten the four half corks to the rim of a plate, making sure there is an equal distance of rim between each. Insert the prongs of a table fork in the bottom of each half cork.

You will now be able to balance your plate on the point of the needle, as a trial will prove to your satisfaction.



ADJUSTMENT OF APPARATUS

His First Thought.

The following question was put to Jimmy: "What were the thoughts that passed through Sir Isaac Newton's mind when the apple fell upon his head?"

Jimmy replied in this wise:

"Sir Isaac Newton 'magined he was lucky it wasn't a brick that dropped."

A New Method.

"Well, this IS funny!" exclaimed Tommy, when he saw his first trolley car; "I've seen wagons pulled by horses and I've seen 'em go by steam, but I never seen 'em run by a clothes prop before!"

Amusing Answers.

Teddy Jones may always be relied upon to give the most unexpected answers in school. The other day he defined a piece of blotting paper as "something you have to hunt all over the house for while the ink is getting dry." When asked to name the highest form of animal life, he responded:

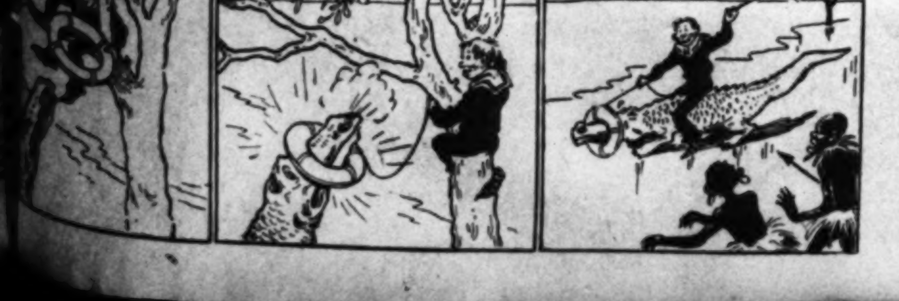
"Please, a giraffe is the highest form of animal life."

Is This Your Answer?

Teacher—Samuel, what is an excuse?

Samuel—Something you can never think of when you want to.

ONDERFUL ESCAPE OF SAILOR JACK



FLUFFY RUFFLES

Drawings by Wallace Morgan

"Twas at Palm Beach in Florida, away from ice and snow,
That Fluffy met a timid youth, quite wealthy, somewhat slow
Yet Traddles was a nice young chap. In love with her he fell,
And as for Fluffy, why, she liked the fellow very well.

He never said the thing he meant, and yet he tried to pay
Fine compliments in fitting words. "Miss
Fluffy—Oh—I say,
Miss Fluff—Ruff—Ruffles, you're a plum
—no, no, I mean a peach,
You're quite the sourest—no the sweet est, thing upon the beach."

Now, Fluffy knew the boy meant well and so she let him talk.
And to the envy of all men she went with him to walk.
They walked beside the sad sea waves and Traddles felt that he Was twice as happy as a man had any right to be.

"Miss Fluff—Ruff—Ruffles, may I say I like your face? It's plain"— Then Fluffy drew away and said, "Please don't say that again."
"Oh, pardon, 'twas my faithless tongue—
I meant it's plain to me
That you've the very sweetest face that ever I did see."

"Suppose we sit upon the sand and watch the waves a while?"
Said Fluffy to the luckless youth. He answered with a smile:—
"I'd rather sit and look at you; your face,
it seems to me,
Is like a sun"—"Look out," said Fluffy,
"or you'll go to sea."

And then the luckless youth swam out,
but Fluffy only ran,
And soon regained the higher beach; then said, "You poor, dear man,
I saw the wave was coming and it was so good a chance!
When you've changed to something dryer you may lead me in the dance."

HARD LUCK.

LOS ANGELES IS DEFEATED.

Loses at Polo to Riverside in Close Match.

Winning Stroke Results After a Foul.

Jenkinson and Weiss Brothers Do Fine Work.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CORONADO, March 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] In a brilliant, stirring contest marked by numerous spectacular plays, the Los Angeles first polo team this afternoon lost to the Riverside first four by the narrow margin score of 6 to 5. Two fouls, by Los Angeles players, giving to their opponents two free hits in front of the goal, turned what would have been a Los Angeles victory into defeat, but only after the bitterly contested match had gone to an extra period.

In this extra period, after Los Angeles had kept the fight constantly in the Riverside territory and jeopardized the Riverside goal again and again, a quick rush by Jenkinson carried the ball far down the field into the shadows of the Los Angeles goal posts. Here there were half a dozen scrimmages, during which the sphere shot back and forth before the Los Angeles goal as a shuttlecock. Again and again the ball was forced toward the Los Angeles goal by the Riverside players, only to be veered off by the watchful sticks of the Weiss boys and the nimble hoofs of the Los Angeles ponies.

Finally, to the right of the goal, a Los Angeles player fouled a Riverside stroke and referee John Lawson called for a free hit. Frank Hudson, the player who had been fouled, stood off at the thirty-yard mark for an unhampered try at the Los Angeles goal. Taking a good center, he smote the ball squarely lifting it well into the air past the Los Angeles four and through the hoofs of the ponies that stood in the driveway, winning the game for Riverside, after eight minutes and sixteen seconds extra play.

It was the best contested and closest polo match ever seen at Coronado. Critics may differ as to whether the highest grade polo was played but experts and laymen are of one accord in the opinion that no better matched teams could be found on the Coast. The play was interesting from start to finish and the outcome was always uncertain. Though victory went to Riverside, no one would say that Riverside was a shade better than Los Angeles.

Two players, one on each side, stood out prominently on account of their brilliant play. Tom B. Jenkinson, the well-known Canadian player was the star of the Riverside outfit. He was particularly valuable to Riverside on account of his scoring ability, netting three goals and by fast, dashing play and quick seizing of opportunity he landed a fourth goal from a free hit. Throughout the game he was constantly in the melee, yet always on the right play when the ball came dribbling out of the scrimmage.

Harry Weiss was the bright light of the Los Angeles four. His accurate, brilliant driving more than any other feature of the Los Angeles play, contributed to the closeness of the game.

Mr. Weiss had two sterling mounts, fast, clever ponies, that easily surpassed the entire field. Again and again the pair carried the ball down the field. But for several unfortunate drives of shots that missed the goal by but a few feet, Mr. Weiss would have netted victory for his teammates.

In team play both fours were practically equal. Each side was aggressive and willing to take changes in rough riding. The Los Angeles players were guilty of a number of misses in riding the ball down the field, which may, in a measure, account for their defeat. Tom Weiss, in the early part of the contest, did not play up to his usual form, but toward the end of the game showed up strong.

The brightest of bright days graced the opening of the third annual polo tourney of the so-called polo and pony racing association. Almost 2000 persons turned out to see the initial contest. Among them were many prominent social lights of San Francisco and Los Angeles, Riverside and San Diego. In the crowd was a goodly showing of naval officers from the five warships that are now in the harbor, and both the private grand stand for club members and the public grand stand were well filled. The fence along the race track was banked with autos.

The bugler sounded for the contest at 3 o'clock. The Los Angeles team took the south goal, and Riverside, in orange and black, defended the north. Directly following throw in, Riverside carried the ball in Los Angeles territory and kept it there in spite of the efforts of their opponents. When after a few minutes play, Fritz Nave, backed up by Tom Jenkinson, rushed the ball close to the Los Angeles line and shot a quick goal, it looked like a runaway match for Riverside. But Los Angeles came back gamely after the next throw in and stopped the Riverside attempt to duplicate the performance. Finally Harry Messmore cut the ball out of the melee with a side stroke, and followed up his play with a slashing clean drive that carried the ball far down into Riverside territory. He and Harry Weiss, rushing after it in tandom, helped the sphere on down to the Riverside goal where Harry Weiss shot it through for the first count for Los Angeles.

The play following the tie-up of the score was even up, until Tom Jenkinson sneaked the ball from a middle-of-the field scrimmage and carried it on through Los Angeles territory, shooting a fine goal from the thirty-yard mark.

Jenkinson first rushed one throw for Riverside. Then Harry Weiss, getting an open field by a clever side stroke carried the ball with a dash through Riverside and lifted it square between the goal posts. The third period was short, going just six minutes and twenty-one seconds, but it was long enough for Harry Messmore to get in a beautiful, clean drive from midfield toward Riverside's goal. He followed up the advantage beautifully and landed an easy goal before the Riverside four realized what was taking place. Period four went twelve minutes and six seconds, contributing a score to each side.

COAST RECORDS ARE BROKEN.

PASADENA TEAMS WIN AGAINST NORTHERN CHAMPIONS.

Potato Race and Three Standing Broad Jumps Under New Marks. All-Round Work by Crown City Boys Gives Them Best Score in Indoor Athletic Contest.

The Pasadena Y.M.C.A. indoor athletic team, comprised of Hendricks, Murphey and Tyler, defeated the San Francisco Y.M.C.A. team, Littlepage, George and Bressi, at Long Beach, yesterday afternoon, and won the State Y. M.C.A. championship. The result, by the Y.M.C.A. system of scoring, was: Pasadena, 1231; San Francisco, 1171.

The competition was strong, and the athletes gave an excellent performance. Two Coast records were broken, one was tied, and in the fence vault Tyler came within an inch of tying the Coast record by leaping over the bar at 6ft. 10½in. in perfect form.

Littlepage of San Francisco broke the Coast record in the 440-yard potato race, covering the distance, with its many turns, in 1m. 42 2-5s.

The Coast record of 31ft. 6in. in three standing broad jumps was broken by Hendricks of Pasadena, who, after repeated trials, covered 31ft. 9½in.

Bressi won the high jump at 5ft. 6¾., tying the record.

The athletes were in perfect trim, and stood the two hours of constant work, ending with the difficult potato race, in a remarkable manner. Bressi was the only man who succumbed to the grueling labor, collapsing at the end of the final event.

Pasadena won the larger number of points in all the events except the high jump, in which Bressi's excellent performance landed the northerners on top.

As the members of both teams competed in all the events, all-around ability was the qualification upon which victory depended. The Crown City men easily excelled their opponents in this respect.

The results:

Fence vault—Won by Tyler (P.,) 6ft. 10½in; Murphy (P.,) second, 6ft. 7½in; Littlepage (S.F.,) third, 6ft. 6½in.

Running high jump—Won by Bressi (S.F.,) 5ft. 6¾in.; Tyler (P.,) and Littlepage (S.F.,) tied for second place.

Shot put, twelve pounds—Won by Tyler (P.,) 41ft. 2¼in; Hendricks (P.,) second, 40ft. 11in; Bressi (S.F.,) third, 39ft. 2¼in.

Three standing broad jumps—Won by Hendricks (P.,) 31ft. 9½in.; Tyler (P.,) second, 31ft.; George (S.F.,) third, 29ft. 10in.

The 440-yard potato race—Littlepage (S.F.,) beat Tyler (P.,) time, 1m. 42 2-5s. Hendricks (P.,) beat Bressi (S.F.,) time, 1m. 46s. Murphy (P.,) beat George (S.F.,) time, 1m. 44 3-5s.

Scores of events:

Fence vault—Pasadena, 294; San Francisco, 274.

Shot put—Pasadena, 242; San Francisco, 230.

High Jump—Pasadena, 241, San Francisco, 250.

Three standing broad jump—Pasadena, 236; San Francisco, 217.

The 440-yard potato race—Pasadena, 218; San Francisco, 200.

Officials: Starter, W. A. Stillwell; timers and judges, Broden, Lowsley, Trickell.

GYM CONTESTS.

MASTOVITCH IS CHAMPION.

Preliminary to the indoor athletics contest, the Pasadena Y.M.C.A. "gym" team beat the San José association men, Crawford, Waterman and Lewis, and won the State championship in this department of athletics. Score—Pasadena, 380.87; San José, 295.56.

Allen, Shutt and Moody represented the Crown City Association, and gave the best exhibition of gymnastics ever given by a team in Southern California.

Mastovitch of the Los Angeles Y.M. C.A. entered for the individual championship, and in a brilliant exhibition won over Allen of Pasadena by a close margin. Mastovitch excelled in all the events except the mat work, in which Shutt of Pasadena did masterly work. Crawford did the best work for the northerners, performing well on the horizontal and parallel bars.

The Pasadenans assumed the lead at the beginning of the performance by clever work on the horse. Shutt and Allen were exceptionally nimble. Waterman made the best showing for San José.

Mastovitch was in his element on the flying rings, and his upper body work elicited prolonged applause. Shutt and Allen again carried off the honors for Pasadena, with Moody a close third.

Allen pressed Mastovitch closely for first place on the parallel bars. San José, with the exception of Crawford, made a poor showing.

On the mats, Shutt of Pasadena won first place. Crawford made a good showing on the floor and beat Mastovitch, who was awarded fourth place. The horizontal bar event, the last of the performance, found Mastovitch at his best. Crawford of San José performed the giant swing in an excellent manner.

A silver cup was awarded to the winning team and gold medals to the members of the team.

The juniors of the Pasadena Y.M.C. A., gave an exhibition of tumbling.

Individual results:

WAR.

FIGHT BETWEEN AUTO BODIES.

A.C.A. NO LONGER AFFILIATED WITH A.A.A.

Immediate Effect of Withdrawal Will Be Disruption of the Various A.A.A. Boards—Fight for Supremacy in Legislative, Racing and Touring Fields Expected.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

NEW YORK, March 14.—Following the split between the Automobile Club of America, the premier motor organization on this continent, and the American Automobile Association, which occurred through the withdrawal of the automobile club from the New York State Automobile Association, affiliated with the A.A.A., at the State organization's meeting in Buffalo on Thursday, formal announcement of the withdrawal was made from the automobile club's office here yesterday.

Though W. H. Hotchkiss of Buffalo, president of the A.A.A., gave out a statement yesterday in which he said the national organization welcomed the New York club's withdrawal, automobilists woh are in touch with the situation expect the effect to be far-reaching, in so far as legislative, touring and racing affairs are concerned.

The immediate effect of the withdrawal will be the disruption of the various boards of the A.A.A., particularly the retiring board, of which Jefferson de Mont Thompson, the chairman; W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., David Hennen Morris and S. M. Butler are members, by virtue of membership in the automobile club. Should any of these men desire to be reappointed to the racing board, it will be necessary for them to enroll as individual members of the association.

A fight for supremacy in legislative, racing and touring fields is expected.

The Automobile Club of America is distinctively a New York City organization, its membership, however, including many of the country's most prominent motorists.

NOTHING TO IT.

MEELICK WINS CRESCENT CITY.

HILDRETH'S GREAT COLT BEATS CRACK CHAPULTEPEC.

Great Crowd of Bettors Play Local Favorite, but Friends of Western Derby Winner Flood Ring With Money and Quickly Force up Odds. Race a Procession.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW ORLEANS, March 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The California and Los Angeles Derby winner, Meelick, carrying the colors of S. C. Hildreth and ridden by E. Dugan, won the Crescent City Derby of $10,000, the richest stake run for in the West. He performed his task easily, notwithstanding the long journey from California.

Chapultepec was thought to be invincible as he was the best three-year-old shown up here this winter, and was the idol of 15,000 persons who witnessed the race.

The biggest crowd that ever broke into the betting ring in the history of local racing swooped down on the bookies when the betting started on the Derby. The opening prices were 11 to 20 on the Burlew and O'Neill entry, 2½ to 1 on Pinkola and 5 to 1 on Meelick.

It was evident early in the betting that Pinkola was the choice of the small players. The running of the race proved little more than a procession. With the rise of the barrier, McDaniel, who was upon Chapultepec, sent his mount to the front, opening up a gap of three lengths.

Rounding the turn into the backstretch it was easily seen that McDaniel's instructions were to make every post a winning one, but try as he would Chaultepec could never get farther than two lengths away from Meelick which in turn held the balance of the field beaten ere a half mile had been traversed.

Rounding the far turn, Chapultepec hung out the distress signal and Dugan, quick as lightning to take advantage of the weakening, sent Meelick up and after a slight struggle Chapultepec threw up the sponge, allowing Meelick to go on to an easy victory.

Angelus, the strong string of the B. & O. Stable was three lengths before Pinkola.

Betting on the event was marked by a wild plunge on the winner. Those close to the stable waited patiently until odds soared to 6 to 1, then sending in their commission in chunks gradually forced the price down until 16 to 5 was the top.

Expert opinion is now of a unit that Meelick has the City Park derby at his mercy.

ATTELL AND GANS.

MATCHED BY SAM BERGER.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, March 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Abe Attell and Joe Gans were signed tonight by Sam Berger to fight fifteen rounds on the night of Tuesday, March 31. Abe Attell appeared in person to transact his business while Ben Selig represented the lightweight champion. Gans, through his manager, has agreed to make 132 pounds at 6:20 o'clock on the night of the contest conceding a pound to the featherweight champion, who will hardly weigh more than 122.

The fighters will take 60 per cent. of the receipts for their end of the fight and will divide this 60 per cent. to the winner and 40 per cent. to the loser. The referee is to be selected ten days before the contest takes place.

Each fighter will make a deposit of $2500 as a weight and appearance forfeit with John T. Clark of this city, and Sam Berger, representing the club, will make a $1000 deposit to bind himself to handle the fight.

Selig wired Gans last night to leave for San Francisco at once and he should arrive the middle of the week.

LOWER RECORD IN HARD RUN.

H. O. Harrison and Party Cut Hour from Time.

Los Angeles-Fresno Mark Is Set at New Figure.

Motorists Delayed by Broken Spring and Tires.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

FRESNO, March 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Dust-bespattered and almost exhausted from the nerve-racking strain, H. O. Harrison and party, in an Oldsmobile touring car, reached here this morning at 3:40 o'clock, breaking the automobile record from Los Angeles to Fresno by one hour. The run of 298 miles was made in 15 hours and 15 minutes, elapsed time. The actual running time was 11 hours and 20 minutes. This run was made in the face of the most trying difficulties. Roads which have been cut to pieces by heavy teaming, or have been washed out by recent rains, hindered the racers. Tire troubles and a broken spring four times put the machine out of running order, but with the last tire on, and with the spring strapped to the axle, the car made the record run.

Piloted by Harrison, the Oldsmobile left the Times building in Los Angeles at 12:35 o'clock Friday afternoon. William Folberth of the Oldsmobile factory rode with Harrison, and Frederic Pabst and a Times representative were the official timers.

After leaving Los Angeles, the autoists drove to Burbank, reaching there at 12:58 o'clock. The summit of the Newhall grade was reached 58 minutes after leaving Los Angeles. This equals the record of H. D. Ryus, on his fastest run to Old Baldy. The motorists followed the Mint Cañon road. At Saugus the running was fairly good, and the little town was passed at 1:46 o'clock. While driving at least fifty miles an hour on the level run into Palmdale, the race almost ended at a deep ditch. Harrison could not see the danger until rounding a curve in the road. Then, when it was too late to use his brakes he shot the car forward at full speed, leaping entirely across the obstruction. He escaped with nothing more serious than a bent crank handle. Up through the jaws of Tejon Pass chugged the motorists toward the 4000-foot level of the ride. The car was nearing the snow line, it was growing dusk and the biting cold made riding extremely uncomfortable. Muffled up in warm togs, the motorists continued the climb. The roads were miserable, but the top was rounded and the descent to Bakersfield and the 500-foot level was commenced. Of a sudden there was an ominous crack, and the front tire exploded for the fourth time. Then a predicament faced the travelers. All the inner tubes had been exhausted; there was no repair kit aboard, and time was valuable.

A four-inch casing was forced over a rim fitted for a 3½-inch tire and with a handicap of more than two hours Harrison shot away again for Bakersfield. Down the mountain the car was guided carefully, the single acetylene light blinding over the rocky way. The weary autoists reached Bakersfield as the town clock registered thirteen minutes to ten o'clock. At 10 o'clock the Oldsmobile sped away from Bakersfield, after having established a new touring car mark from Los Angeles for nine hours and twelve minutes elapsed time.

At Famosa the autoists awakened the sleepy station agent to ask the name of the place and get their bearings and were on again. Tulare was reached at 12:30 o'clock in the morning, just fourteen hours and fifty-five minutes after leaving Los Angeles. About eleven miles from Tulare a chuckhole, deeper than the rest, almost won the desperate race against time. As the car lurched forward into the ditch with a disheartening snap the front spring gave up the struggle. With the dying moon to aid the weary riders the spring was strapped down and reclamped, after an hour's wearisome work and with the race almost lost the Olds once more took up the struggle. Selma was reached with the spring holding, and with fifteen miles between the motorists and victory the car began to make faster time. The riders left Selma at 3 o'clock and drove the remaining fifteen miles in forty minutes. At ten minutes to four o'clock the motorists arrived in Fresno.

EASY FOR LONG BEACH.

VICTORY FOR TRACK TEAM.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONG BEACH, March 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The track team of the Huntington Beach High School proved easy marks for the local High School team in a meet on the local campus this morning. Long Beach won most points in all the events except the mile run. Thompson, the local sprinter, was the star and was in no danger in any of the dashes. The visitors are a husky bunch, but seemed to play at a disadvantage. The score was Long Beach, 74½; Huntington Beach, 20½.

Summary:

The 100-yard dash—Won by Thompson, Middough, Long, all Long Beach; Time 10 4-5s.

The 200-yard dash—Thompson (L. B.,) won; Young (L. B.,) second; Newland (H.B.,) third; time 25 3-5s.

The 440-yard dash—Armstrong (L. B.,) won; Newland (H. B.,) second; Stone (L. B.,) third; time 55 1-5s.

Half mile: Moffitt (L. B.,) won; Blodgett (H. B.,) second; Scott (L. B.,) third; time 2m. 15s.

Mile run—Blodget (H. B.,) won; French (L. B.,) second; Plavin (H. B.,) third; time not given.

High jump—Canney and Enloe (L. B.,) tie; Hall (H. B.,) third; height, 5 ft.

Broad jump: Richards (L. B.,) won; Seward (L. B.,) second; Newland (H. B.,) third; distance, 19 ft. 6 in.

Pole vault— Seward (L. B.,) won; Hall (H. B.,) second; Newland and Loud (H. B.,) tied for third; height, 9 ft. 6 in.

Shot put—Crauston (L. B.,) won; Seward (L. B.,) second; distance 39 ft.

Hammer throw—Seward (L. B., won; Crauston (L. B.,) second; Newland (H. B.,) third; distance 103 ft. 6 in.

Relay race—Long Beach won; Moffitt, Crauston, Stone, Thompson.

The officers were: Prof. Neel, starter- J. B. Losee, timer; Bentley, Huff, Gastnich and Kaw, judges.

SOMETHING DOING.

PLAN TO HOLD MONSTER RUN.

Dealers' Association Prepares Big Spring Event.

Route to Cover All Southern California Towns.

To Travel Six Hundred Miles in Five Days.

A monster automobile tour, the greatest event of its kind ever promoted in the West, is on the programme for a date in the late spring. This great run will last five days, and in its progress nearly every town in Southern California will receive the visiting motorists. The itinerary calls for a journey of 615 miles, and on the map the route resembles a great figure eight, with starting and finishing place at Los Angeles.

The Automobile Dealers' Association of Southern California is back of the tour, and already is at work upon the details of the event. At the last meeting of the association, it was definitely decided to promote the enterprise. Every year the association has managed some large touring event, but none have been of the magnitude of the present affair.

The plan at present is to have the run start from Los Angeles, going down the Coast road to San Diego for the first day's trip. The night of arrival there is to be a big automobile parade in San Diego, participated in by the entrants in the run and the people of San Diego.

Staying over night at San Diego, the next day's run will be by the inland route to Riverside. There again there will be a night parade of automobiles by participants in the run and residents of Riverside.

The third day's run will be an easy one, from Riverside to Los Angeles by way of Pasadena. There will be no night parade in Los Angeles, but probably the members of the run will appreciate a chance to prepare for the fourth day. This day the route will be from Los Angeles to Santa Barbara by way of the Newhall grade. There will be a night parade at Santa Barbara, as at San Diego and Riverside.

The last day of the run the route will be from Santa Barbara back to Los Angeles this time by the Canejo Pass and Calabasas. The total mileage of the five days' trip will be about 615 miles.

All motorists throughout Southern California will be invited to take part in this run. The rules, it is expected, will be very lenient, so that private owners may feel free to compete with expert drivers on even terms. The fact of the matter is that this tour will be more in the nature of a general jubilee among the automobile people, than like a strenuous endurance run. It is doubtful if there will be included in the rules any provision for an economy contest. It is this feature of an endurance run that does more than anything else to shut out all except good drivers.

Leon T. Shettler, speaking of the tour, said yesterday. "In deciding this run, we felt that people had had about enough of the ordinary endurance contest such as we have held for the last three seasons. This is because the rules are so stringent that they practically shut out everyone but the most expert. We expect that this run will promote an excellent feeling among the ranchers and people of the small towns en route between the different cities we will visit."

CONTINUES ADVENTURES.

First Automobile to Reach Imperial Is Used on Stage Run Out of Needles.

In a recent number of The Times was told the story of how the first automobile reached Imperial after several days of hard going through the desert sands. This car was a four-cylinder Tourist and has since that time seen more desert work of an almost equally strenuous nature. From Imperial the car was shipped back to Los Angeles and there rented by W. T. Bee of Needles. It was taken to Needles over the road and used there as a stage to run from the railroad to Parker, a prosperous mining camp some sixty miles down the Colorado River from Needles.

To reach Parker by railroad or river it has always taken nearly two days, until the installation of the auto stage. The road was fixed up and put into very fair shape and the car easily made the round trip in one day, each journey taking not more than five hours.

A regular run to Parker was made three times a week and on the other days runs were made to other camps in the neighborhood.

Frank Varney of Long Beach was employed as the driver of the car. He recently drove the car into Los Angeles and brought with him his wife and three-year-old girl. They made a pleasure trip of the journey and camped out on the way, using the auto top for a tent at night. This was just before the close of the season, and Mr. Varney had a shotgun with him. He says that the quail were so plentiful all along the way that they did not have to stop anywhere to buy meat. Not only quail were seen, but jack rabbits by the thousands, and, in one place, they counted fourteen of the animals running along the road ahead of them, so scared that, for a few seconds, they had not sense enough to leave the road. The little party had no adventures on the trip and no breakdowns, and Mr. Varney says that he has little to tell about it, not even a snake story, as the rattlers are still hibernating.

PLAYING WITH FORDS.

Upper San Gabriel River Seems to Have Fascination for Motorists. Stuck in Stream.

There seems to be a fascination about fording the San Gabriel River, up in the cañon above Azusa, for it is being done with considerable frequency and more or less success. The drivers who try it are usually not very fortunate unless with considerable effort every part of the ignition system exposed has been taped over and a water proof cover placed over carburetor and magneto.

Last Sunday week two parties started up the San Gabriel to picnic and play with the fords, which are worth seeing now. The first party had a big Packard car with a full load, made up of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Smith, Stanley Smith, all of Pasadena; Mrs. A. Osterpont of New York, Miss Gladys McLachlan, Miss Helen Garst of Pasadena and the driver. All went well until the front of the car dropped into a deep pool, where the engine filled with water through the air vent of the carburetor. Here the party was overtaken by Dr. E. P. Hilliker of Los Angeles in his White, accompanied by his wife, three children and his brother, H. B. Hilliker, another automobile enthusiast.

Dr. Hilliker was supplied with rope and soon pulled the Packard out of the pool and onto terra firma and went on up stream. On the return trip the Hillikers found the other car again at rest in a deep ford and some little time was spent in pulling it and its big load through. The rope was fastened to one of the rear wheels and a short pull made, about eight inches at a time, making a drive wheel thus force the big car along until shallow water was reached where the pull would be easier and not strain rope and cars so much. All enjoyed the experience and several pictures were taken, but the Doctor in his excitement, dropped a plate holder into the water, and found later that it was his exposed plates that were wet.

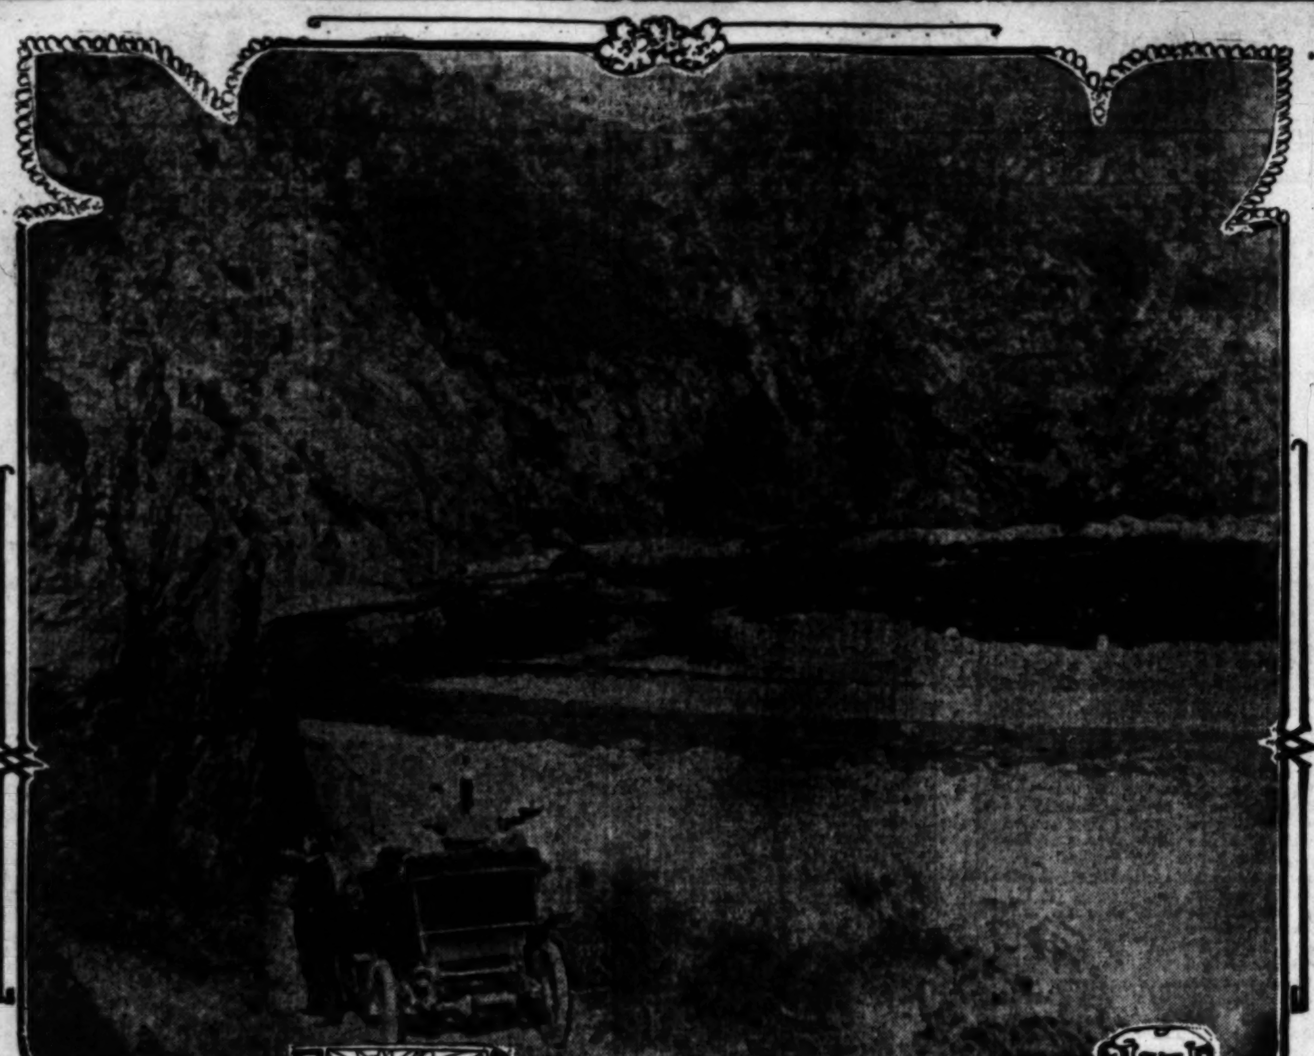
At one time the water came over the top of the dash on the car and even flowed into the tonneau, but all were out for fun and took the experience good naturedly.

TO TEST ALCOHOL MOTORS.

Automobile Club of France Arranging a Five-Day Contest, to Begin on First of June.

The technical committee of the Automobile Club of France is arranging for a contest to test the efficiency of alcohol engines. The contest is to take place in the laboratory of the club in Paris, and will begin on June 1 next. Entries will be received until May 15, at a fee of 100 francs, or $20, for each engine. Competitors must submit sectional drawings of their engines and a description in French; they must also defray the expenses of erecting them on the testing bench and the cost of the fuel used during the trial.

The result of the test will be determined by two factors; power for weight and consumption for power. The relative order of merit under each heading will be arrived at by allotting 100 marks for the best result in each case and a corresponding number of marks to the others. Five days will be occupied with the trial of each engine, the first being devoted to its erection on the bench, the second to tuning up, the third to a six-hour run at full speed, the fourth to two three-hour runs at half-load and no load respectively and the fifth to dismantling the machine from the bench.



Motoring in California.

The fascination of the San Gabriel River trip is partly in the scenery and partly in picking one's way through the fords, with a lookout to spot the rocks in the swift water.

LITTLE SPARKS OF MOTORDOM.

The Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Club's annual hill-climbing contest up Giant's Despair Mountain will be held on May 30 this year.

Because the members of the volunteer fire department of Ventnor, N.J., a suburb of Atlantic City, neglect to give their automobile fire engine proper care, they are threatened with having it taken away from them by the City Council.

FORM STATE ASSOCIATION.

Work of Organization Completed, and New Members Are Being Received. Dues Are Light.

President L. P. Lowe of the California State Automobile Association announces that the general work of beginning the new organization is now done and that new members are now beig received. As a matter of fact the State organization is a good roads association, but the incorportors, all prominent San Francisco motorists, felt that the term "good roads" had been overworked and that most of the road reforms must come from the owners and users of automobiles, taxpayers of both wealth and energy, so that the name "automobile" would be more valuable.

The American Automobile Association is anxious to coöperate with the California State Automobile Association and a form of confederation is being arranged.

All the income of the new California organization will go into road improvement and marking the roads with danger signs for motorists, done in Europe and already throughout Southern California. Dues in the new organization will be 25 cents a month with an entrance fee of two dollars and there will be active local representatives in all towns and auto centers. The office of the California State Automobile Association is at No. 626 Pacific building, San Francisco.

New Fifty-Mile Record.

In a 120-horse-power Lorraine-Dietrich, Charles Jarrott of London drove fifty miles on the Brooklands track in 36 minutes 5.76 seconds, a rate of more than eighty-three miles an hour, lowering the record for that distance from 37 minutes 45.9 seconds. His attempt to lower the 100-mile record failed when a tire blew up on his seventy-fourth mile.

THE MOTORIST'S DREAM.

OFF FOR TRIP AROUND WORLD.

TO MAKE A FOUR YEARS' TOUR IN AUTOMOBILE.

Los Angeles Party Is to Go from Mexican Line to New York by Way of Canada, Then Sail to Naples and Spend at Least Two Years in Motoring Through Europe.

Setting out on an automobile trip around the world, which will take them at least four years, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Hover of La Crescenta, will leave Los Angeles the beginning of this week, on the first stage of their long journey. Mr. and Mrs. Hover spent the year of 1905 abroad, and during that time they rented an automobile and toured extensively. The taste they got of the joys of European motoring made them wish for more. Mr. Hover recently disposed of his interests in La Crescenta, and is now free for a long tour of the world.

They will use a Maxwell four-cylinder car, which Mr. Hover will drive himself as long as they are in America. When they land abroad, they will employ drivers speaking the language of the country. Mr. Hover is an accomplished as well as an enthusiastic automobilist, and were it not for the difficulties of language, he would drive himself.

Starting from Los Angeles, they will go south across the line into Mexico, and then return to Los Angeles. Going north, they will follow the coast road to San Francisco, and from there go on to Portland and Spokane, probably by the way of Seattle. Near Spokane is the town of Kennewick, which Mr. Hover founded some years ago. Here they will stay for three weeks or a month.

Then they will go east through Northern Idaho, Northern Montana and the Dakotas, turning north to Winnipeg in Canada. So far as Mr. Hover knows, no motorist has yet driven from Winnipeg to Toronto, but he is going to attempt it. From Toronto they will return to Chicago by way of Buffalo. After spending some time in Chicago, Mr. and Mrs. Hover will go to New York, passing through Cincinnati and Northern Ohio, Northern Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

They expect to arrive in New York before October. In October they will ship their machine to Naples, and follow in time to meet it there.

Their plans for the European tour are not all outlined. In the main, they will make their headquarters in principal cities, going north in the summer time and south in the winter. In each city they expect to spend three or four months, visiting by automobile every point of interest within a hundred miles. The first winter they hope to travel in Africa, touring in Algeria and in the Nile region. They also expect to cover the Riviera thoroughly.

In the summer of 1909 they will be joined by Mrs. A. M. Hover, Mr. Hover's mother, and by Harry D. Hover, his son, who is now a student at the University of Southern California. This summer they will spend in touring England and Scotland, and possibly Sweden.

By the winter of 1910 they expect to have seen most of Europe, and will then go on to India, taking their machine—or probably a new one—with them. They do not expect to tour very much in India, but will land the car at some port and try it. From India they will return to America by way of China, Japan and the Philippines. On this part of the journey their automobile will stay in its crate a large part of the time.

With the exception of the summer of 1909, Mr. and Mrs. Hover will be the only members of the party. They expect to take things slowly and leisurely, and have a thoroughly good time. "We plan to take four years for the trip," said Mr. Hover last night, "but if it is necessary, we will take five. We want to go slowly and enjoy everything."

GOOD IDEA.

TAXICABS FOR LOS ANGELES?

E. L. THOMAS HERE TO ORGANIZE SERVICE COMPANY.

Son of Famous Automobile Maker Is Enthusiastic Over Possibilities of Town Car—Moderate Fares Part of the System—Company Has Been Formed in North.

Los Angeles may soon have a motor taxicab service.

E. L. Thomas, son of E. R. Thomas, and intimately connected with the great automobile factory at Buffalo, where the Thomas Flyers are made, arrived in Los Angeles yesterday morning. He is on a visit to the Pacific Coast in the interests of his car, and his principal object in coming here is to organize a company to maintain a motor taxicab service. He has spent the past month in San Francisco, where he has formed a company that will put into service the Thomas taxicab.

"I have no doubt that the making of town cars and taxicabs will soon be the greatest part of our factory business," said Mr. Thomas yesterday. "The use of the taxicab has increased enormously wherever it has been in service any length of time. Two years ago this summer I was in Paris, and there were in use then about 250 motor taxicabs. Now the number is fully ten times as great, and the Renault people are booked for orders far in advance for their little town car.

"The service in New York has grown enormously, and it is bound to be so in every city that is large enough to support the service. I hope to place a dozen or fifteen taxicabs here by May, and I fully expect that in a year from that time there will be 250 in use here. We don't cater to the wealthy trade alone. We can give a service that is approached by no horse-drawn carriage. Suppose you are in the southwestern residence district of Los Angeles and want to take two ladies to the theater. How much will it cost to get a closed carriage? In a taxicab it would cost a little over $2 for a party of four people to the theater and back again.

"Business men soon find out the advantage of the taxicab service. It is an actual fact that it will save an hour a day to a busy man. An increase of 10 per cent. in a business man's efficiency is not a little thing.

"This, of course, does not take into account the convenience of closed, safe and speedy conveyances in rainy weather, at a moderate cost. Here is where the taxicab scores heavily.

"I am confident that the service will be a success, and I am anxious to see it installed."

David Bellington, the English swimming champion, swam 500 yards in 6 minutes 14 seconds at Cleckheaton, Yorkshire, recently.

OTHER EXHIBITS.

Cobb-Evans Auto Company, in whose garage the show was held, showed a five-passenger Locomobile in gray, two models of the four-cylinder Ford runabout, the one-lung Reo, and the regular two-cylinder Reo, in touring car and runabout models, and a stripped chassis of this pattern of the Reo. In addition to C. H. Cobb, C. B. Evans and A. J. Cobb, there was A. D. Plughoff, representing J. W. Leavitt & Co., general agents of the Reo for North California.

The Rambler cars were shown by F. Van Sickle, the Fresno agent, aided by L. B. Harvey, who represented the factory branch at San Francisco.

Touring cars of both two and four-cylinder models were there, also a big gentleman's runabout or roadster.

This completed the list of car exhibits, though the Durocar factory, the State agency of the Great Smith, the Dragon, and others asked for space, and one of the promoters informed The Times' representative that at least fifty exhibits were refused, as it was against the policy of the dealers' association to have any cars shown that it did not control in that territory.

The Standard Oil Company had a big exhibit of oils, and near the door Continental tires were on exhibition, in charge of E. L. De Camp, the Coast representative. The Stepney wheel was also shown. As Mr. De Camp's exhibit was right at the main entrance he got first chance at all.

Carl Newerf had an exhibit of Goodyear tires and supplies, in connection with Hobson's Elmore exhibit, and there were side-line exhibits of car tops, oils, etc.

One of the features of the show was a working full-sized model of the Morton Farm tractor, which came to the show on its own power. The engine is an original one, with one long cylinder, mounted horizontally crosswise, with pistons in each end, and only one firing chamber and spark plug. There is a crank case at each end and two fly wheels for each crank axle.. Friction transmission is used with each crank shaft, revolving in opposite direction from the other, and small friction wheels on the driving shafts turning against opposite sides of the friction disc.

AT THE SHOW.

Los Angeles and San Francisco were well represented at the Fresno show, as were all the leading towns of the center of the State. Many sales were made at the show by the exhibitors, who put in their best efforts to close deals. Demonstrating cars were in constant use, starting out from in front of the show building on K street.

From Los Angeles were E. A. Featherstone, A. J. Smith, Charles Fuller Gates, E. L. De Camp, P. A. Renton, Carl Newerf, George E. Williams, and many others connected with the automobile trade.

San Francisco sent George P. Moore, W. L. Bogen, Mr. and Mrs. Fred J. Linz, J. N. Conwell, Charles A. Davis, George Howes, A. C. Wheelock, A. S. Williams, C. Kirkpatrick, A. D. Plughoff, Watt Moreland and many in and out of the auto trade.

Government Takes Hand.

HILL IS DANGEROUS.

Hairpin Bend in Buena Vista Course at San Francisco Scene of Disaster. Tourist and White Win.

At the closing day of the hill-climbing races from in front of the automobile show building in San Francisco on March 7, a large crowd collected to see the big cars fly up Buena Vista hill. Earlier in the week some of the cars had turned over on the hairpin turn and so the crowd looked for excitement. The Stearns, which had done so well in the roadster class earlier in the week, making the nine-tenths of a mile in 1:54, had caused the Stearns agents to wager $500 against the White, its only rival. This also added to the excitement.

Among the interested spectators was Windsor T. White, vice-president of the White factory, and his brother, Clarence White, from Honolulu. Chas. A. Hawkins, sales manager for the White, who had just recovered from a siege of typhoid fever, was on the scene before the racing began, but then went into the show and laid down in a landaulet, being afraid to risk the excitement. Vice-President Yorke of the Stearns factory was also at the start, and enthusiasts from as far away as Portland and Los Angeles.

In the race for cars costing $2500 or less factory list, the Model L White, with full road equipment, won in 1:55, being driven by Bill Stimmon, the Billy Ruess of Frisco. The time of the Dorris was 2:05. The Tourist was third, an Auburn, fourth, and a Dragon fifth.

The contest for cars costing $1500 and over was a walkover for the two-cylinder Tourist touring car, driven by Ed. Mason of Los Angeles. The time was 2:10 2-5, with Auburn, second, and an Aerocar, third.

Al Piepenburg won the $3500 class with a thirty-horse-power White in 1:56, playing safe, as he had turned over on the hairpin bend earlier in the week, and did not want to repeat the dose, at least until after the free-for-all. The Dorris in this race crushed a front wheel at the hairpin bend and the Stearns sixty-horse-power car skidded into a telegraph pole and smashed a rear wheel.

In the free-for-all Al Piepenburg appeared with a big White stripped for battle, with a torpedo-like hood in front reminding one of the old "Whistling Billy."

Piepenburg was game and took the whole course fast, winning this event without an accident, in 1:38 4-5. While this is averaging but thirty-three miles an hour, the hill is a real one with plenty of dangerous turns besides the murderous hairpin bend where three cars had accidents and many turned over. This gave the White every one of the big events, the best time made during the day by a gasoline car being 2:05.

FORM NEW ORGANIZATION.

Another Automobile Dealers' Association Contemplated—Meeting Next Wednesday Night.

Last Thursday evening a number of local automobile dealers met at the Locomobile agency, Hill and Pico streets, to talk about forming a new dealers' association in this city.

Walter Cosby, the well-known Premier agent, stated the objections to the old association on which subject there was considerable discussion, the sense of the meeting being that a new association was much needed in this city, and that hill climbs and endurance runs should be managed by others than automobile dealers.

W. Cummings Montgomery of the Pullman agency outlined a 1000-mile endurance run which met with general favor. Manager Lord of the Studebaker agency thought that a run of this kind, if well conducted, would do much good, both to the trade and as a help towards road reform.

The route in view was up the center of the State to San Francisco and back on the coast route, and many of the men present wished to have the run pulled off, just as quick as possible.

The meeting was adjourned until next Wednesday night when it is planned to complete the organization of a new dealers' association, which in addition to automobile dealers will include the supply houses and the rubber men, and kindred establishments. E. E. Caister of the Locomobile garage will probably be chosen president and Mr. Montgomery or Mr. Cosby the secretary.

New Road Material.

New Jersey is going to experiment with a new dustless, indestructible road especially suited to automobiling. The surface of an old road is to be thoroughly pulverized, and over it is to be sprinkled a binder of liquid asphalt heated to 350 degrees Fahrenheit. A finish will be supplied by a steam roller.

Going Some.

Her husband missing a train to Milwaukee by less than a minute, a woman of Wausau, Wis., drove him in her roadster thirty-five miles over snow-covered roads in an hour to Junction City, where he caught a train on another road that bore him to his destination ahead of the time the train he missed reached there.

FAST WORK.

FLORIDA RACES BEGET RECORDS.

TIME IS LOWERED IN THREE STANDARD EVENTS.

Hundred-Mile, Amateur Mile and Middleweight Racing Mile Contests Produce New Marks—In Addition, Bergdoll and Cedrino Establish a New World's Record Apiece.

Nothing phenomenal was accomplished at the Florida beach racing carnival, which has just closed, but at the same time there was more and better racing presented to the public than many close followers of the automobile game had expected. It is no secret that the meet was a forlorn hope, in which the Automobile Club of America exerted itself to the outmost to prevent this once splendid speed contest from becoming either extinct, or a travesty.

Although the beach was not in quite as good shape as it was three years ago, when such phenomenal time was made, and, although the entry field was smaller than ever, in the matter of records the meet was successful. Two new world's records were established, and three existing world's records were lowered. Beside this, the average speed record for long-distance events—a record not officially recognized, but of value—was decisively beaten.

One of the new records set was for 150 miles. This was done by Louis J. Bergdoll of Philadelphia, who won the 150-mile event for stock cars with his sixty-horse-power Benz, in 2:40:33. The other new record, for 300 miles, was established by Emanuel Cedrino, who won the A.C.A. cup race of 258 miles, and continuing on, completed the 300 miles in 3:53:44. This is an average speed of a little over 77 miles per hour, which overshadows completely Nazzaro's record of 70 8-10 miles per hour for the 460 miles of the Grand Prix last year.

The world's records broken were the 100 mile, the middleweight racing mile, and the amateur racing mile. In the 100-mile race for the Minneapolis Trophy, which Cedrino won with his Fiat, the time was more than half an hour slower than the record established in 1906 by Walter Clifford-Earp in an eight-horse-power Napier, which was 1:15:40 2-5. But on the last day of the meet there was a match race between M. G. Bernin in a sixty-horse-power Renault and S. B. Stevens in the Fiat Cyclone. Bernin drove a very fine race, averaging 82.26 miles per hour, and finished the 100 miles in 1:12:56 1-5.

On the same day the other two world's records were lowered. In the time trials Cedrino drove a mile in 35 seconds flat, lowering by more than five seconds the previous record of 40 4-5 seconds, made by Guy Vaughn in a Darracq at the 1906 meet. This middleweight racing record is only 4 2-5 seconds slower than the heavyweight racing time for the mile, made by Chevrolet in the 200-horse-power Darracq.

The amateur mile record was also lowered decisively. David Bruce Brown of New York, only 18 years old, drove the Fiat a mile in 35 3-5 seconds, only three-fifths of a second slower than the world's mark just set by Cedrino. This amateur record supplants that of 39 seconds, made by William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., three years ago in a ninety-horse-power Mercedes.

ENGLISH SPORTS

The Rugby professional football players of New Zealand have not met with the success that their amateur brethren did two years ago in England, the teams of the English Northern Union are hard nuts to crack and the colonials have been beaten on fourteen occasions, some of the defeats being quite decisive. It is one thing to play amateurs, but quite another to meet seasoned professionals.

In association football England has a popular sport. The attendance at games is constantly increasing. Since the final for the English cup was taken to the Crystal Palace in 1895, the "gate" each year has averaged over 88,000 spectators. The Chelsea association team has an average of over 43 000 for their home games this season. England and Ireland have met annually for twenty-six years in association football, and Ireland has yet to win her first game, though she has made splendid fights upon occasions.

In the English cross-country championships, held recently, W. Coates of Thropstone won the Midland championship (10 miles) in 59 minutes 45 seconds. The course was heavy, part over plowed land and hill climb. In the northern championships, W. T. Clake, Sefton, won in 61 minutes 14 seconds (10 miles 290 yards.) The junior northern championship was won by Frank Melville, Elswick, in 42 minutes 27 seconds (course 7 miles;) grounds all heavy from rain.

SPORTING BRIEFS.

In England both the Cambridge and Oxford 'varsity crews are daily practicing on their respective waters for their annual race set for April 4.

"Kid" Gleason, of the Phillies, started his twenty-seventh year as a professional baseball player last week.

Tommy Burns has cleared about $80,000 since he started fighting.

New York Nationals pay $20,000 rent for Polo Grounds.

New York City will hold the third annual bowling tournament of the National Bowling Association in Madison Square Garden next May. The American Bowling Congress will meet in Pittsburgh in February.

Three-cushion caroms is undoubtedly the billiard game of the future. Difficult as the 18.1 and the 18.2 games have been made, yet the skill of the experts of the cue has been such as more than to keep abreast of them, and the spectacle has been presented of a player making an average of 100 in a 500-point game.

The Detroit Race Association is planning some novelties for its Grand Circuit meeting in the shape of a race to saddle, and a wagon race open to all amateur drivers in the country.

Columbus, O., is included in the Colored National Baseball League, recently organized at Indianapolis. The circuit is to consist of Columbus, Cleveland, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Chicago, Louisville, Nashville, and Springfield, Ill.

Following are the other men whom Stanley Ketchel has knocked out in a single round besides Mike (Twin) Sullivan: Kid McGuire, Kid Thomas and Kid Leroy of Butte, Jimmy Kelly in Miles City, Roy Hart in Miles City, and Paddy Hall in Gregson Springs.

DISHEARTENED.

L. A. EASILY BEATS POLY.

Scores Two Points to One in Annual Track Meet.

Technical School Takes but Two First Places.

Many Surprises in Which the High School Wins.

Los Angeles High decisively defeated Polytechnic in the dual track meet at Occidental, yesterday, by the score of 76½ to 36½. The one-sided score completely upset the calculations of both schools, as the meet was expected to be extremely close, with the relay race as the deciding factor. Los Angeles High's athletes in many instances showed unexpected form, and set the bleachers wild with performances better than they had ever made previously. Polytechnic seemed to lose heart in the unequal contest when the meet was half over.

The expected great relay did not materialize, as Polytechnic's men were exhausted. Two teams were started, Poly agreeing to run in order to accommodate the Los Angeles team, one of whom depended on this event for his letter. The Los Angeles team won the race with ease.

Polytechnic took but two first places, and lost several seconds and thirds, which before the meet were considered certain points. The time in all the races was very creditable. The day was just right for good performances, and, barring the slowness with which the events were run off, the meet was a great success. About 2000 supporters of the two schools filled the bleachers, and two well-organized rooting sections cheered the winners and losers.

The meet showed that Los Angeles High has developed some star men in the present short training season who may be counted on to make good in the three big meets which follow. Brace Carter beat Streeton of Poly in the quarter in 52 3-5s., sprinting past him on the stretch, after allowing the Polytechnic man to lead two-thirds of the way around the track.

"Micky" McLure won the 880 from "Monk" Pierce by two yards. Wright of Polytechnic set a fast pace on the first lap, in an effort to tire out McLure, but the Los Angeles man stayed back, and won from Pierce, after Wright dropped out of the race. The time was 2m. 9 1-5s.

HURDLER BEATEN.

Lugo, Polytechnic's hurdler, who swept everything before him last year, was beaten by both Bristol and Williams of L. A. High in the low sticks, in 27 2-5s. McReady, another Poly star, who has been vaulting 10ft. 6in., in practice, was beaten by Potter of L. A. High at 10ft. 3in. Bean and Malone of Poly tied with McReady for second.

Robertson, the Poly hurdler, took the high hurdles with ease, finishing several yards ahead of Phil Harrigan of L. A. High, who was second. In the hundred High School took every place, with Rubio, Coleman and Geissler finishing in close order. Lillard of Polytechnic was a close fourth, and was only beaten by Geissler in the last few feet. Coleman won the 220, with Rubio barely ahead of Robertson of Poly at the finish for second.

In the weights, Walbridge of L. A. High won the shot, as was expected, but suprised his team-mates by capturing first place in the hammer-throw as well. Walbridge threw the hammer 132ft. 2in., the best he ever did. Up to last Tuesday his best throws were close to 115 feet, but on that day he learned to do the double turn in the throwing ring, and reached 128 feet. Later he raised this mark to 131 feet. Rickerhauser was second ni this event, with a throw of 128 feet.

Walbridge took the shot-put with a heave of 44ft. 5in. After the competition he reached the 45-foot mark, which is better than the interscholastic record. Franks of L. A. High took second, with a toss of 42ft. 6in. As he had never gone over 41ft. in previous meets, his performance was an agreeable surprise to the L. A. bleachers.

Walberg of Polytechnic won the only other first for his school outside of the high hurdles, with a leap of 5ft. 6in. in the high jump. Coleman won the broad jump at 19ft. 9in.

At the close of the meet Capt. Coleman and Manager Bristol of the L. A. High team were presenetd with a banner, which must be won three times to become the permanent property of any school.

RESULTS.

Summary:

The 120-yard hurdles—Robertson (P.,) won; P. Harrigan (L. A.,) second; Slaughter (P.,) third; time, 16 1-5 seconds.

The 100-yard dash—Rubio (L.A.,) won; Coleman (L.A.,) second; Geissler (L.A.,) third; time, 10 2-5 seconds.

Mile run—Morgan (L.A.,) won; Simpson (L.A.,) second; Chamberlain (P.,) third; time, 4 minutes 53 2-5 seconds.

The 440-yard dash—Carter (L.A.,) won; Streeton (P.,) second; Yerkes (P.,) third; time, 52 2-5 seconds.

The 220-yard dash—Coleman (L.A.,) won; Rubio (L.A.,) second; Robertson (P.,) third; time, 22 4-5 seconds.

The 880-yard run—McLure (L.A.,) won; Pierce (P.,) second; Seccombe (L.A.,) third; time, 2 minutes 9 1-5 seconds.

The 220-yard hurdles—Bristol (L.A.,) won; Williams (L.A.,) second; Lugo (P.,) third; time, 27 3-5 seconds.

Pole vault—Potter (L.A.,) won; Malone, McReady, Bean (P.,) height, 10 feet 3 inches.

Shot put—Walbridge (L.A.,) won; Franks (L.A.,) second; Olmstead (P.,) third; distance, 44 feet 5 inches.

Hammer throw—Walbridge (L.A.,) won; Rickerhauser (P.,) second; Malone (P.,) third; distance, 132 feet 2 inches.

High jump—Walberg (P.,) won; Abbott (P.,) second; Ward (P.) and Sefton (L.A.,) tied for third; height, 5 feet 6 inches.

Broad jump—Coleman (L.A.,) won; Franklin (P.,) second; Harrigan (L. A.,) third; distance, 19 feet 8 inches.

Relay—L.A. High won, Craig, Bristol, Carter, Coleman; for Poly, McDonald, Franklin, Streeton and Yerkes ran.

UNLUCKY.

QUAKER MILLS GOOD RUNNER.

WINS MILE AND TWO-MILE IN THE U.S.C. MEET.

Methodists Have no Trouble in Running up Big Score With Whittier—Unlucky Thirteen for Thompson's Men, Who, However, Put up Game Fight Against Big Odds.

U.S.C. defeated Whittier College in the annual intercollegiate dual track and field meet yesterday morning, by the score of 104 to 13.

Two firsts and three thirds marked the total placing of the Quakers. In the remaining events the collegians won from the visitors with ease.

As expected, the speedy Mills annexed the distance runs with little difficulty in fair time. White plugged out a third in the same events. Renneker, in the low hurdles, finished a strong third. These points were the only ones gained by the Whittier aggregation. The relay was omitted, because the Quakers were unable to furnish a quartette.

Despite the lack of close competition, the 'varsity runners showed, on the whole, decided improvement over their last week's performances against Stanford, and with an additional week's training the Methodists are hopeful of bettering their first effort in company with Stanford.

Stookey appeared in the abbreviated trunks for the first time on the Methodist track, and showed latent ability in the weights and high jump. With a few weeks of faithful training, Stookey is expected to be a strong member of the team.

The mile run furnished the best race of the meet. Scott and Grant Richardson were pitted against Mills and White for the visitors, and the honors were kept even throughout the long grind. Grant took the lead on the pole, giving way to Mills, and White on the second lap. With Scott running a strong third, the quartette circled the third lap in a bunch. Gradually White and Richardson lagged, while Mills and Scott lead for first. Mills forged rapidly ahead, but Scott, in the last fifty yards, on a telling sprint, forced Mills to extend to his best efforts, Scott losing by a few feet. Richardson and White furnished a gritty finish for third place, White obtaining the lead in the last two yards.

In the century, Trotter surprised the enthusiasts by taking the lead for the first fifty yards, with Shute a poor third. The latter redeemed himself in the final spurt, winning from Trotter by a yard in the fair time of 10 2-5s.

Another surprise came in the high hurdles, Halloway leading the field and winning by a good margin. Lennox and Burek brought up the remaining two places. Burek reversed the order of finish in the low sticks, winning from Lennox by a foot.

The two-mile event started with Cornwell in the lead. Mills and White allowed the Methodists to set their own pace for the first three laps, but Garbutt, fresh and strong, gave Mills the scare of his life in the final half lap. Mills barely caught the 'varsity runner in the last twenty yards, beating Garbutt to the tape by a few yards. White lagged in an easy third.

Richardson displayed good form in the hammer throw, his best effort registering 138 feet, 8 inches. Charlie lost to Trotter in the shot put, the southern champion making a fair put of 39 feet 7 inches.

Charlie Richardson set a new U.S.C. mark in the broad jump, clearing an even 21 feet as against his former record of 20 feet 6¾ inches.

Thompson took the 220-yard dash in the good time of 22 2-5 seconds, the best time made by a Methodist runner this year. Shute jogged the quarter in 54 3-5 seconds, and could have bettered this mark a couple of seconds. Summary:

JUNIORS WIN MEET.

CALIFORNIA INTERCLASS EVENTS

(BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.)

BERKELEY, March 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The juniors won the annual interclass field day of the University of California held on California oval this afternoon.

The freshmen took second, sophomores third and seniors fourth. Owing to the fact that the finals of two events will be run on Monday, no score was announced. First places in these will be taken by juniors, however. Most of these events were close, and good times were made, although in some of the sprints the men eased up purposely. The feature of the day was the winning of the half in easy manner by Freshman Dowd in 2m. 2s.

Gaines, who made the two miles in 10m. 22 2-5s., finished fresh, yards ahead of his field.

Grundy of Long Beach, Paul of Hollywood in the sprints, and Clabaugh of Anaheim in the distances, were the Southern Californians who did brilliant work.

The results:

Mile run: Boydson (F.,) Evans (J.,) Erskine (J.;) time 4m. 44 3-5s.

The 100-yard dash, first heat: Crossfield (J.,) Munn (F.;) time 10 4-5s.

Second heat: Paul (J.,) Vilas (F.;) time 10 4-5s.

Final: Paul (J.,) Vilas (F.,) Crossfield (J.;) time 10 2-5s.

Third heat: Grundy (S.,) Johns (J.;) time 10 2-5s.

The 120-yard hurdles: Cowles (J.,) Edward (S.,) Donald (F.;) time 16 1-5s.

The 440-yard dash—First heat: McNamara (J.,) Jones (J.,) Scarlet (F.,) all tied for first; time, 54 4-5s. Second heat: Stanton (J.,) Fish (S.,) Keogh (F.;) time, 53 3-5s. Third heat: Cheney (J.,) Fiske (F.,) Healey (J.;) time, 53 2-5s. Final to be run Monday.

Two-mile run: Gaines (J.,) Clabaugh (S.,) Burnham (F.;) time, 10m. 22 2-5s.

The 220-yard hurdles: Cowles (J.,) Johns (S.,) Edwards (S.;) time, 26 1-5s.

The 220-yard dash, semi-finals—First heat: Grundy (S.,) McNamara (J.,) Johns (J.;) time, 23 3-5s. Second heat: Stanton (J.,) Paul (J.,) McCullough (F.;) time, 23 3-5s. Finals to be run Monday.

The 880-yard run: Dowd (F.,) Dosier (J.,) Leggett (J.;) time, 2m. 2s.

Hammer throw: Balzari (S.,) Jordan (F.,) Swim (S.;) distance, 24 ft. 2 3-5 in.

Shot-put: Munn (F.,) Jordan (F.,) Blake (S.;) distance, 40 ft. 3 in.

High jump: Blout (J.,) first; Bush (S.,) Munn (F.,) and Strong (S.,) tied for second; height 5 ft. 8 in.

Broad jump: Vilas (F.,) Munn (F.,) Kretsinger (F.;) distance 21 ft. 10 in.

Pole vault: Bull (S.,) Ostrander (S.,) C. Brown (S.;) height 10 ft. 9 in.

One mile relay: Won by juniors, freshmen second, seniors third; time, 2m. 23 2-5s.

SPORTING BRIEFS.

A. Stipp of Mercersburg Academy, Pennsylvania, recently put the twelve-pound shot 53 feet, 5 inches, breaking the scholastic record of 52 feet 3 inches, held by Ralph Rose since 1902. Stipp's record was made in the competition for the Middle States championship.

Oakland, Berkeley and Alameda high schools are threatening to withdraw from the Academic League and remain out of the semi-annual field day in April. The refusal of the Academic League to grant the bay counties schools 50 per cent. of the gate receipts of the final league contests is the cause of the dissatisfaction.

The track meet between Throop and L. A. High, scheduled for March 21, has been called off because of the three-cornered meet between Whittier, Pomona and Occidental, which takes place the same day at Pomona.

Forest C. Smithson, formerly of Portland, Or., but now a member of the New York Athletic Club, in the third heat of the seventy-yard hurdle handicap, on March 10, in New York, made a new world's record of 8 4-5 seconds from scratch. In the final heat of this race Smithson skimmed over the hurdles a winner under 9 seconds. The record for this distance over high hurdles has been 9 1-5 seconds, made by S. C. Northbridge of the Irish-American Athletic Club, last year.

Matt McGrath of the New York Athletic Club, made a new world's record in throwing the 56-pound weight for height. From scratch, he threw the weight 15ft. 7in. The former record of 15ft. 6 3-8in. had been held by James Mitchell of the New York Athletic Club for nearly ten years.

Wrestling Tournament.

The Wrestling Committee of the A.A. U. commission has definitely secured Armory Hall for the local tournament on April 4. Many entries have been promised, assuring the success of the event. The L.A.A.C. will enter several men in each class, and U.S.C., St. Vincent's and Pomona will also send in contestants. A special effort will be made by John M. Brewer, chairman of the committee in charge of the event, to get unattached wrestlers to enter.

TARGET SHOOT.

TO PICK TEAM FOR MARINES.

Southern California Rifles' Challenge Accepted.

Shoot Probably Will Take Place Next Sunday.

Shoot at Glendale Today to Qualify First Squad.

The Southern California Rifles are to select a squad of fifteen men, at the shoot at Glendale, today, from which to pick a team of ten men and two substitutes to compete in a mtach shoot with a similar team from the United States cruisers Tennessee and Washington.

The ships of Admiral Sebree's advance squadron are to reach Redondo about March 20, and the shoot will be held probably the Sunday following, March 22, or possibly the day before. Officers of the fleet have assured E. C. Thomas, appointed to arrange the shoot, that the marines were anxious to take part in the contest and were glad to meet in competition.

The Co. A team of the National Guard has been invited to make it a three-cornered match, but if the shoot takes place Sunday it is probable that the guards cannot compete, as they have an advance engagement.

Men who qualify in the shoot today will have to make good in two practice shoots to be held at Redondo Tuesday and Thursday, when averages will be kept and those having the highest scores will make the team. Those competing must shoot at least two or the three days. The Redondo practice shoots will be conducted in the afternoon. The marines will practice as soon as they reach Redondo.

No one who does not attend today's shoot will be permitted to take part in the week-day shoots. The team will be picked from those who qualify today. Those who qualify will have to shoot at least in one of the practice shoots in Redondo to make the team.

The naval officers presented two propositions for the shoot, and the following has been accepted: Two hundred yards, off-hand; 300 yards, kneeling or sitting; 300 yards, prone. As the range is not fitted up for longer shooting, the shorter ranges will be sufficient. Another contest may be arranged later at the longer ranges.

The qualifying shoot today will be at 200 and 500 yards. The 200-yard shooting will be off-hand and sitting or kneeling, while the 500-yard shooting will be prone. In this way it is believed that it will be possible to get practice as near the desired ranges as possible.

A number of the shooters at Redondo are going to Glendale to take part in today's contest, but for those who cannot shoot with the main body of the Rifles, a practice shoot will be held in the beach town. Those who will qualify there, however, will be required to shoot the 200 and 300-yard ranges, in order to be on a par with those qualifying in Los Angeles.

The marines are to use the United States magazine .30 caliber rifle, model '99. The Rifles to be permitted to use their own guns, of whatever make, with only general restrictions. It yet has to be decided whether or not they are to be permitted to use the peep-sight, or be confined to the open sight.

Lieut. George Von Weber will be range officer at Glendale today. Facilities have been added which will make it possible to shoot off the scores in much faster time than last Sunday. A senerate range has been erected by the Glendale Gun Club for women, but the latter will not shoot with the Rifles, as a rule has been adopted excluding them from regular shoots. The men have decided to eliminate social features and attend strictly to shooting, in the earnest effort to improve marksmanship among men who might be in a position to volunteer for service if ever such were required.

Racing Half-Mile Tracks.

Horsemen who campaign their trotters and pacers over the half-mile tracks of the Central States are much interested in the outgrowth of a meeting held recently at Indianapolis, Ind., at which an organization was formed, composed of breeders, drivers and persons interested in half-mile track racing. The object of the new association is to elevate the racing on the half-mile tracks to the standard of the grand circuit as near as possible.

COMPTON'S GOOD RECORD.

Girls' Basketball Team in Line for Championship Honors in Next Season's Play.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

COMPTON, March 14.—The Compton High School girls' basketball team has just completed a very successful season. Although all but two of the girls were new to the game this season, championship material was developed and they came not far from winning the county pennant.

At the close of the season they found themselves tied for second place with two other schools, Whittier and Glendale, all three of these teams having lost but two games during the season. Their two defeats were by Alhambra, the county champions, by the close score of 21 to 25 on Alhambra's court; and by Glendale, by the score of 22 to 30 on Glendale's court, after having played them a tie game two weeks before.

Among their victories were games with the strong teams from Whittier, Long Beach, Huntington Beach, San Pedro and South Pasadena. Before the regular season began they held Polytechnic's star aggregation down to the score of 14 to 19.

As Miss Maie Ahlstrom is the only senior among them, Compton will be in line for the pennant next year, with a stronger team in the field than ever before.

OCCIDENTAL BASEBALL.

Merrill to Coach Team Which Students Believe Will Be a Winner This Season.

Although regular baseball practice at Occidental will not begin until after the conference track meet on March 21, some of the men are limbering up with a little preliminary work. In order not to interfere with the track men in their daily practice, a lot near the college has been engaged for the use of the ball tossers who cannot wait for the regular practice to begin.

Dr. E. S. Merrill will coach the team this year, as he was successful in turning out winning nines when he was the physical director at Occidental.

Occidental, Whittier and Pomona will be the colleges in the intercollegiate baseball conference this year. U.S.C. and St. Vincent's were not represented when the schedule was arranged, as they have not yet signed the conference agreements.

On account of the limited schedule, Occidental will play an unusually large number of games with high schools. Contests will be arranged with Throop, Compton, Pomona, Pasadena, Los Angeles and Polytechnic high schools, and an effort will be made to arrange some games in Santa Barbara county.

Although the Presbyterians lost several of their best players last year, the substitutes and the new material include men who are being counted upon to fill successfully the vacancies.

For the position back of the bat, Woodside, formerly of Park College, is the most promising candidate, although Johnson, the Los Angeles High School player, has had experience in the position and may land it. Thacker and Patterson, the veteran twirlers, will be on the team, and Brower, formerly of Hollywood High School, will supplant them.

Bruce Merrill will occupy his position at first base. Wieman is the only other aspirant for the position, but he will probably be used in the outfield on account of his ability to cover a large amount of territory. The position at second base vacated by Beal will be hard to fill, but McClung, who played the position four years ago, is back in school and will try out for the place. "Young Prexie" Baer, Brower and Johnson are also well qualified to play at this corner of the diamond and will be given a trial. The shortstop position will be filled out of the overflow of second base material. McKenney will hold down third base, which he occupied last year.

In the outfield, Bird and Thomas of last year's team are still on deck and will play center and left field, respectively. Baer, Wieman, Hopkins and McClung will be given a trial in right field.

The intercollegiate baseball schedule follows: April 18, Whittier and Occidental at Whittier; April 25, Whittier and Pomona at Whittier; May 2, Occidental and Pomona at Pomona; May 9, Occidental and Whittier at Occidental; May 16, Whittier and Pomona at Pomona; May 23, Occidental and Pomona at Occidental.

COUNTY LEAGUE BASEBALL.

L. A. HIGH BEATS LONG BEACH.

L. A. High won the County League baseball game with Long Beach yesterday by the score of 1 to 0. Over 2000 people of the beach town turned out to witness the close contest. Halbriter made the single tally in the sixth, on a single, a stolen base and a sacrifice hit by Capt. Beamer. Long Beach became confused as Beamer ran toward second, and Halbriter stole home. The box score follows:

South Pasadena defeated Pasadena High School by the score of 6 to 5, in the County League game yesterday at Pasadena. Merrill, the one-legged pitcher for the winners, struck out nine men, and a made a sensational catch of a fly to the third-base line. Lockwood of Pasadena struck out seven. Heaton of Pasadena incurred unfavorable comment by his rough work in base running. South Pasadena made eleven hits and five errors; Pasadena made five hits and six errors. Walcon, catcher for Pasadena, scored a three-bagger.

Harvard School and San Fernando did not play, as the latter team has withdrawn from the league. Polytechnic had no game scheduled.

Santa Monica High School defeated Hollywood High at Santa Monica yesterday afternoon by a score of 9 to 5. H. Gower and Taylor did good fielding for Hollywood.

ALL WANT TO COME SOUTH.

Fifteen Men from California to Be Brought to Los Angeles for U.S.C. Meet.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, March 13.—Competition is already keen among the track men as to who will be numbered among the lucky fifteen that will go to Los Angeles for the meet with U.S.C. on March 28 at Bovard Field. About twenty-five men may appear as very likely candidates for positions on the fifteen-men team. All of these men are from the three upper classes, for no freshmen will be taken on the trip, owing to the annual Stanford- California freshmen meet being on the same day. This fact will weaken the 'varsity very considerably in the field events, especially for the the best weight men, high and broad jump and vaulter are in the entering class.

Gordon Grundy of Long Beach, winner of the 220 in the 1910 freshmen meet, and Crossfield, winner of the century in the 'varsity meet last spring, are two of the men who seem sure to go for the sprints. W. Johns, who took the 'varsity 220 last spring in 22 4-5, will in all probability also go. Crossfield and Grundy both have records of 10 2-5s. in the hundred and seem capable of doing even better.

In the 440 Capt. Forrest Stanton will be one of the representatives, while McNamara, who made his C in the event last spring is also one of the possibilities. In the half mile probably Healy, who made the 'varsity two years ago, the Dozier who placed last year will qualify. Leggett is also among the possibilities. DeMamiel, who holds the California-Stanford record of 4m. 32 3-5s., will run the mile and Claborough of Anaheim, is the most likely two-miler to go south.

In the hurdles Cowles, who has a high stick record of 15 4-5s., and Johns, who captured the freshman low hurdles last year and placed in the high, are the best. Edwards of Santa Barbara, has been running the high hurdles in and around 16 2-5s. and is also likely to make the team. Johns and Crossfield, will be the mainstays in the broad jump, while A. Paul of Hollywood also has an excellent chance for this event, the sprints and the relay.

In the high jump, Bull and Stout, who placed in the meets last year, have the best chance, while in the pole vault are Bull, Sheridan of Ventura, Ostrander and Kant.

In the hammer throw, Glazier and Balzari, who took the first two places in the 'varsity last spring and Swim, who won the freshmen event, are a strong trio at least two of whom will probably be chosen.

Budelman and Digman are the only upper class shotputters who have any chance at all.

POMONA'S GOOD PROSPECTS.

ALL-STAR TRACK TEAM.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

CLAREMONT, March 14.—This year's track team, which has defeated Whittier and Occidental in the dual meets, and will enter the triangular conference Saturday, is composed of the most versatile all-around track athletes the college has ever known.

Every man on the team except four are brilliant performers in two or more events, while Spurgeon and Rogers, the feature men of the sagebrush outfit, invariably enter four events, and carry off a majority of firsts. Spurgeon makes the 100-yard dash in 10 2-5s., holds the record in both hurdles, and runs a fast lap in the relay.

Rogers, besides holding a State record in the broad jump, runs both the shorter sprints, and also a speedy relay part.

Merriam, the prep athlete, comes in next for versatility honors, with hurdles, high jump and pole vault in his line.

Sloane takes a first in the century sprint, and runs the 440, being expected to beat out Bird of Occidental in the quarter, in addition to the last lap of the mile hand-touching event.

Birdsall, McKee, Metcalf and Himrod are all participators in two events, the first being a pole vaulter and broad jumper, McKee a half-miler, Metcalf shot putter and hammer thrower, and Himrod 880-yard man and two-miler, as well as a miler with the Coast record.

Munger, Davenport, Leeke, Jones and Palmer are the only one-event men on the squad. Munger is the high jumper, Leeke and Jones are doing only two-mile stunts, Davenport leads Pomonans in shot putting, while Palmer is running behind Spurgeon in the low hurdles.

Claremonters expect to have a walkaway in the conference meet Saturday. Twelve firsts is the modest assumption made by Pomonans, giving Mills the half mile and Thomson the shot put. The 880-yard run will fail to find a blue and white placer, but in most of the other events two places are due.

In spite of Wieman's victory last Saturday, Pomonans still pin their hopes on Spurgeon for both hurdles. Sloane and Rogers are doped for first and second in the short sprint, and in the 220-yard dash Rogers will run the same distance as the others, and not five yards more, as occurred in the dual meet.

The relay will again be Pomona's strong point, as both Parker or McKee are fit for fourth man for a team composed of Rogers, Sloane and Spurgeon.

Merriam is well now, and is due for two seconds and a third in high jump, pole vault and high hurdles, respectively.

SOCCER LEAGUE GAME.

Rangers and the Los Angeles Association Teams to Play at Fiesta Park.

The Rangers and L. A. Association soccer teams will play this afternoon at Fiesta Park in a regular league game. The English team gave the Thistles a close rub last Sunday, and should be able to defeat the Ranger team, but will not have the same line-up as last week.

The line-up will be:

Rangers.		L. A. Association.

FENCING TOURNAMENT.

Members of the L.A.A.C. fencing club will engage in a tournament for a trophy in the near future. The showing made against the Pasadena Club at Maloney's gymnasium Thursday night was so encouraging that Prof. Uyttenhove, the instructor, will push the arrangements for the tournament. The Pasadena bouts were well attended and developed considerable fencing enthusiasm.

The L.A.A.C. tournament probably will be held in the first week in April. The entries are: W. Heller, E. Dietrich, Ralph Day, H. Christopher, C. Frankel, B. H. Montgomery, William Graham, H. Mellen, James Cassou, J. Kline, Theodore Bessing, Frank Cassou, C. Smith, Arthur Beaudry, C. A. McCoy, R. G. Gilholm, F. J. Toole, Ike Levy, F. Sentous, R. S. Taylor, William McClelland and H. Heinsman.

LONG DRAWN OUT.

CHICAGO WINS TIRESOME GAME.

Two Teams Struggle on for Fourteen Innings.

Visitors Pick up Five Runs in the Third.

Three Pitchers Are Used by Each Aggregation.

Chicago 11, Los Angeles 8. Fourteen innings.

Guess the local fans had best send for the White Sox first team to come back to town.

We could beat the big leaguers easily, when the bush pitchers were kept out and genuine ball games resulted, but since this second team arrived, the local players seem to think they are in a handball contest. Looked like it yesterday when Dillon, Ellis and Jud Smith made errors in the third inning and five of the Chicago team galloped across the plate before the side was retired. All this happened in the début of the new pitcher Thorsen from Bloomington.

It was an interesting day for the pitchers, for each team tried three. The locals should have won by a block on their batting, for they made seventeen swats. These apparently did not count for much, but even though the locals lost the game, some of them had a barrel of fun throwing the ball around the field while the Chicago men were chasing themselves to the bases.

It was a punk game to watch, and of the small crowd present, a number went home when the last of the ninth inning started, for the score was then 7 to 4 in favor of Chicago. Los Angeles finally came through with three runs in the ninth to tie the score and then they played on for five more innings before the visitors could win.

Thorsen pitched four innings; Randolph seven and Nagle three, and the winning runs came in the first of the fourteenth inning from Le Jeune's triple to right, an error by Jud Smith, a long fly, a wild pitch and a base on balls.

The thing was really too complicated to write a detailed history of and it was filled full of wild and woozy errors and some hard hitting. Twenty-seven swats are enough to please those who like the ball banged around. Six pitchers and four catchers figured in the game and all were kept busy. There were no particular fielding features.

The new pitcher, Thorsen, looks like he might do, and while five runs were made in the third inning while he was pitching, two errors by Dillon and one each by Smith and Ellis were largely responsible for the runs. It was during this inning that three Chicago men on bases worked a triple steal, O'Neil dashing from third base to the plate while Thorsen was winding up. Fiene reached third and Anderson second base at the same time.

As will be seen by the score, the hitting made the runs in every inning except the third, and in that one, there were four errors, two passes and three steals. Score:

NO-HIT CONTEST.

JORDAN HOODOOS SAINTS.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BERKELEY, March 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The California 'varsity defeated St. Vincent's on California Field this morning, 9 to 1, Capt. Jordan allowing the Catholics not a single hit. The 'varsity secured 14 off Ybarrando.

The St. Vincent's run came in the first, when Jordan hit Brannon, who scored on three passed balls.

Both teams were in fine fettle, and played real ball. Jordan was in good condition, and had plenty of speed, but was a trifle wild, walking four men and hitting one. Ybarrando was steady enough, but his curves were so easy that every California man secured a hit, while Reid and Solinsky secured three-baggers.

Both nines supported their pitchers well. In the ninth inning Solinsky, after a hard sprint, saved a hit by making a one-handed catch of Corbin's long drive, just as the ball reached the right-field fence.

In the third inning Christie called Gray out for alleged interfering with Smith as he was attempting to field a thrown ball. The decision caused considerable discussion on the part of Capt. Lamer, and for a time it seemed that the game would cease.

Hempel finally persuaded his captain that the decision had to stand, and he continued the game. The score:

PITCHERS' NO-HIT GAME.

COUTS SHUTS OUT BERDOO.

St. Vincent's High School baseball nine defeated San Bernardino High School in their second game by a score of 7 to 0, yesterday afternoon, on the college diamond. F. Couts, who was in the box for the local team, aided by good support, twirled a no-hit game, and issued but two passes to the initial sack. The Saints found the opposing pitcher for thirteen safeties. Couts, who has been on the rubber during all of the games in which the younger Saints have engaged, has proved something of a find, and has exhibited considerable class for an academic player. He has a record of sixty-two strike-outs in five games, and in none of the contests has he allowed more than five safeties.

Dechman, in yesterday's game, made two pretty catches. He grabbed a liner over second in the fifth and made the last out in the ninth, catching a pop fly back of first after a hard run. Lindner, the visitor's backstop, had his throwing arm in good working order.

St. Vincent's started out well, scoring in the first inning. Workman drew a pass and went to second. Easton threw poorly to the bag and the runner continued on to third. On a wild pitch, Workman crossed the plate for the first score.

In the third, Couts struck out three men in succession. In the fourth and fifth the Saints hammered Easton for eight hits. Four bingles resulted in a like number of runs in the fourth while the same number of safeties tallied the last two scores in the fifth.

In the last period the visitors had a man on third and one at the halfway station. With none gone, Reeves popped out to Phillips, Hodges was caught when the squeeze failed to work, and Easton retired the side with a dinky fly to Dechman.

CALIFORNIA DATE CHANGED.

Baseball Players Working Hard to Make Team Coming South to Play St. Vincent's.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, March 13.—The schedule of the 'varsity baseball team has been changed, and as a result Los Angeles fans will not have an opportunity to see the California nine in action until Monday and Tuesday, March 23 and 24, when St. Vincent's will be played. The original schedule called for the matches on March 20 and 21, but conflicting dates have made it impossible.

On March 20, a new feature of intercollegiate baseball will be introduced, when the California 'varsity will play Santa Clara on the Stanford campus, and the Stanford nine will play St. Mary's on California Field.

The last week has been one of warm weather, and the baseball candidates have been put through strenuous practice, with secret practice on Thursday evening. The playing in the two St. Vincent games this week and the practice next week will determine the men that will take the much-coveted Los Angeles trip. At the present, it seems that Capt. Jordan, R. E. Myers at first base, W. Smith at third, A. L. Myers, either at short or in the field, and C. Myers as catcher, will surely make the trip.

For the other positions, the hardest sort of a fight is on. Solinsky, who is a reliable fielder and good substitute catcher, will probably make the trip. It seems probable that A. Myers will play left field, Solinsky center, while Lewis or Butler will occupy the right garden, with Reid at second and Earnist at short. However, Coach Dickenson has every one guessing, for in the Olympic game he has played Lewis at short and Reid at second, while Earnist was on the bench. In the White Sox contest, Reid was shifted to right field, Earnist to second and A. Myers to short.

Dickenson stated today that he was very well satisfied with the work of the team, and that he thought their hitting was very good.

The freshmen nine has been sweeping through the prep schools about the bay, the most recent victory being over Lick High of San Francisco, when the nine from that school was defeated, 10 to 5.

AMATEUR BASEBALL.

MANY GAMES ON TODAY.

With the close of the season of the California Winter League on the first Sunday in April, a new league, with a smaller number of teams, will be ready to begin the summer series. A meeting of the league managers will be held this week to arrange for the successor to the present organization. The Hoegees, McCormicks and Edisons will be the Los Angeles teams to join, and Pasadena, Santa Ana and Santa Barbara will complete the six-team league. An entry fee of $50 probably will be required, the money to be used as a purse for the season's winners.

Games today are:

California Cadets Win.

The California Military Academy baseball team defeated the Los Angeles Military Academy, 16 to 8, on the Los Angeles's boys diamond. The result was in favor of the California boys from the beginning, eight runs being scored by them in the first inning.

MOUNTAIN CLIMBING.

Arrangements About Completed for Contest up Mt. Wilson Latter Part of April.

PASADENA, March 14.—Arrangements have been practically completed for the mountain climbing contest for the Mt. Wilson Trail Medal, set for April 29. It is intended to start the contestants at different times up the trail. Charles Fox and J. N. Patterson have the details under their management. Care will be taken to start the men so that one coming up strong from the rear will have a clear trail and can not be hampered by a slower runner.

Four formal entries have been received for the contest up to date, and eight or nine have signified their intention of entering the contest, which is simply to negotiate the nine miles of the steep trail of Mt. Wilson and back. The medal will become the property of one winning it three times in succession.

Eugene Estoppey and Paul Reinwald have made these hill climbing contests popular by their exercise runs up the mountainsides. J. C. Wright, now at Riverside, yesterday signified his intention to enter the contest. He has held the official record for six months, although Eugene Estoppey claims that he has beaten the time of 1 hour and 50½ minutes by a half minute. Estoppey and Reinwald are busily training and make one or more trips up the mountain every week.

One contestant who entered yesterday was Glen Morrisey of Alhambra. He is a school boy under sixteen years of age, but made his first trip in two hours. Several members of the Los Angeles athletic clubs have said they will compete.

NEW GUN CLUB RANGE.

First Shoot of Spring Campaign to Be Held Today—Yacht Mischief at Venice.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

SANTA MONICA, March 14.—The Crescent Bay Gun Club has succeeded in effecting a consolidation with the Western Gun Club of Los Angeles and grounds are to be established for the season on the cricket course at Venice. The first shoot of the spring campaign will be held tomorrow, the traps and ranges having been put in place. There will be ranges for rifles and revolvers, as well as traps and bluerocks for shotguns. The membership of the affiliated clubs is seventy, and there will be a lively season for the crack shots.

The yacht Mischief is to make Venice her summer home. She is due to arrive there during the next ten days, and will find anchorage behind the Kinney breakwater. She is to pass the season as a pleasure boat, in conducting picnic parties to the near-by islands and fishing banks.

My Direct-Me Treatment
Cures Men

The discovery I made over twenty-five years ago as to the cause of WEAKNESS in men, and how to cure it, placed me in the prominent position I have ever since occupied in the medical world. Previous to my discovery, Weakness was held to be a nervous affection due to a generally debilitated condition of the system. My discovery PROVED that Weakness, so-called, was merely due to inflammation and enlargement of the prostate gland; that by removing such inflammation the important gland mentioned would resume its functions and Weakness would at once disappear. I therefore devised a SPECIAL DIRECT METHOD TREATMENT that has never failed to cure any case of so-called "Weakness" to which I have applied it.

WORLD'S RECORD.
STANFORD'S FAST RELAY.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

STANFORD UNIVERSITY, March. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Ideal weather and a fast track combined to develop high-class performances, today, when the 'varsity track team defeated the Olympic Club, and piled up a score of 104 to 48, crowning the day's work by breaking the world's record for the four man half-mile relay without any competition.

The Stanford team, composed of Coon, Hussey, Holman and Reed, covered the half mile in one minute, 32 2-5 seconds, lowering the previous record 1 3-5 seconds.

The Olympic team was handicapped by a limited number of entries, but in nearly every event they were outclassed by the Cardinals' athletes.

The only first place for the visitors was taken by Glarner, who defeated Wyman by an inch in the quarter in 51 3-5s. Reed took both sprints with comparative ease, making the 220 in 22 2-5s. and the hundred in 10 1-5s.

Holman was second in the hundred to Gerhardt (O.) In the 220 Brown won from Glarner in the half, after a hard race, breaking the tape at 2m. 1 1-5s. MacGregor was third.

Stanford took all the places in the distance, making good time in both. Sweet covered the two miles in 10m. 12 1-5s., with Adams second and Nash third.

Bradford and Maundrell tied in the mile at 4m. 38 2-5s. MacGregor third.

The Olympians had no entries in the hurdles so another eighteen points fell to Stanford, Horton winning both events. His time for the low hurdles was 25 2-5s, and 16 1-5s in the high.

Horton won the shot from Gilmore, the junior champion at Jamestown, with a toss of 44ft. 8in. Tomasini and Youken tied in the hammer at 118ft. Vandervoort took the broad at 21ft. 11in. Martin won the high from Channing Hall, the winner in the last intercollegiate meet, clearing the bar at 5ft 11¼in. Langen and Bellah tied in the pole at 11ft. 7in.

RESULTS OF RACES.

JUDGMENT.

AMERICAN AND RUGBY FOOTBALL COMPARED.

WILLIAM T. REID, JR., better known as Billy Reid, formerly Harvard's football coach, in a recent article attempts to show the superiority of the revised American game to Rugby.

William Unmack of San Francisco replied to Reid's article. Unmack is an authority on Rugby, and refereed the first intercollegiate game after Stanford and California had adopted it.

The essential points made are:

REID'S OPINIONS.

"The old game was undoubtedly one of too much mass play and close formation; the ball was seldom visible, and the actions of the players were too much concealed.

"The new game is much more open than anything we have seen for fifteen years; and the end is not yet.

"Everything has been done than can be done by rule to make football what we all wish it to be.

"Both games seem to require about the same type of player and the same degree of physical fitness.

"The games seem to me to be about on a par so far as the opportunity for roughness and the likelihood of injury are concerned.

"Neither game is one which can be played with much pleasure or satisfaction by those who are not at least in partial training; therefore neither will ever satisfy the demand which it was thought Rugby would satisfy—for a fall game which every one could play, and which would bring on the field a very large per cent. of the student body.

"Neither game, if properly coached, should send a boy to his room after the day's practice incapacitated by fatigue for a good night's study.

"Both games are conducted more as business enterprises than as sports.

"Both games offer opportunities for foul play, though I think Rugby has a little advantage in this respect, being a more open and visible game.

"Rugby permits victories to be won on penalties. This, it seems to me, is un-American, as is the English custom of not allowing substitutes, and is a distinct weakness in the game.

"Rugby is unquestionably more open than the American game, though whether this openness is a point of superiority or not is a question for discussion—it seems as though it had been secured at the expense of those features which constitute the principal strength of the American game.

"There seems to be little opportunity for deliberate thinking of any kind in Rugby.

"The element of chance figures to a far greater extent in Rugby than in the American game.

"Rugby and the American game differ vitally with respect to the significance that may be attached to the location of the ball on the field at any given moment.

"The general effect of all this is to make Rugby the more spectacular of the two games, but at the same time to rob it of that sense of ground won and held, which is so characteristic of the American game.

"Rugby is spectacular, yet lack of diversity and consistent achievement seems to me to tend, in the long run, to render it monotonous.

"Conclusions: Rugby is simple, more easily learned, more open, more spectacular; but it is more of an individual's game; has in it disturbing elements of chance; allows penalties to figure too largely in the score, and does not afford opportunity for consistent advance or the exercise of much head work on the field. The American game is complex and diversified; it is educative; it is essentially a team game, a game of coördinated action directed by skillful strategy, stimulated by a well-defined purpose, and rewarded by a feeling of deserved and consistent accomplishment. If, then, I were asked to sum up my whole attitude in the matter, I should say that, believing the American game to be the more masculine and the more scientific, I cannot but wish that for its own sake it might be adopted instead of Rugby, and the more so on this Coast, because the adoption of the Rugby game has isolated the two principal universities of the Pacific Coast, and has failed to enlist the cordial support of the alumni."

UNMACK'S REPLY.

"Reid is entirely mistaken as to the type of player needed for Rugby. He is of the opinion that the game requires the same type as the intercollegiate. Such is not the case. Wherever Rugby is played you will find the very smallest of men playing with and against giants.

"Naturally a man going in for any form of athletics has to be in the best physical condition, so in this respect Rugby and intercollegiate are equal.

"'Both games seem to be on a par for roughness and injury,' he (Reid) says. Most emphatically I deny this. Rugby, when played as it should be, is not unnecessarily rough. Of course, when a man is tackled he does not expect to fall on a feather bed; but in true Rugby there is no such roughness as displayed in intercollegiate football.

"As for injuries there are far less in Rugby than intercollegiate. I will admit that a few serious accidents did occur at Stanford and California last season, but in most cases these were due to inexperience rather than roughness.

"I maintain that a player of Rugby has to be in good physical condition, but it is not necessary for him to go through the extreme training course necessary for the intercollegiate game.

"The only opportunity for foul play in Rugby occurs in the scrum, if a man is so unsportsmanlike as to take the advantage. It is always taken in hand by the referee if seen by him.

"'Un-American,' is the term Mr. Reid uses to express his dissatisfaction at penalties and not allowing substitutes. I do not see it that way. If it is un-American to be fair and just, then it is also un-English. There is more than one penalty in Rugby, and the captain of the opposing side always has his option. What is more fair than that?

"When you come right down to it, there appears to me to be very little openness in the intercollegiate game. Mr. Reid admits the greater openness of Rugby.

"To me it appears the old game is the brain work of one man, the coach. The players are like so many cogs in a machine. Not so with the Rugby player. The man with the ball has to use his brain and use it quickly; the men backing him up are thinking rapidly.

"I grant that intercollegiate shows much team work, but so also does Rugby.

"The Rugby games Mr. Reid has seen have certainly been the best he could see here, but they were not true Rugby. Rugby has only been played by the colleges two years, and the way the players have grasped it has been truly marvelous. Another two years of such phenomenal strides and the game will be truly mastered."

SOCIETY TO PROTECT DOGS.

Owners May Organize to Prosecute Theft and Poisoning Cases.

BY WILLIAM TUCKER.

Let me say very frankly to the dog owners in Los Angeles, Southern California or the entire State, that the plan to organize for the common protection of our four-legged friends is both practical and sensible; and that any assistance I may give in getting the movement started is without any desire for credit in the doing or for money for its consummation.

To make the matter most plain I can best refer you to the success of a similar society organized in Minnesota in 1896, which in ninety days resulted in the recovery of twenty-eight out of thirty-one dogs stolen; for the most part by "Klondikers" to be carried to Alaska and used as beasts of burden. During the winter of 1895-6 theft of dogs, particularly field dogs, became so common that dog owners felt called upon to take drastic action, and an organization was quickly effected; and as dogs were recognized as personal property we asked for and commanded the coöperation of the police in every city, town and village in the State. We went on the broad plan that we were entitled to this assistance just as much as if the purloined property had been a horse; and in order not to put a premium on the stealing we offered no rewards for the return of a stolen dog; but we did offer a reward of $10 for the arrest and conviction of the party who stole or detained the dog—with the result that the police departments "got busy." In addition to the police we had two other powerful auxiliaries—the mail carriers in the cities and express messengers and baggagemen on all trains, thus making it impossible for any one to keep a dog detained more than forty-eight hours or to ship the dog from one town to another, absolutely making it impossible to get the dog out of the State.

Nor did our activities stop with checking dog stealing, but we went after the dog poisoner as well; with the result that within six months after organization we had 1200 dogs safely guarded; and the society's tag on the dog's collar was as potent as a shotgun in the hands of the owner.

Though my acquaintance in Los Angeles is limited there are altogether too many cases of dog stealing and dog poisoning to longer go unnoticed or without some concerted action to bring the guilty to justice. If I can assist you owners of valuable dogs in getting together and getting down to actual work on the plan as outlined I will meet with you at any time or place, and let me say to you most earnestly that the week of the coming dog show, bringing as it will many dog fanciers to the city, will be a most advantageous time to start this movement; and I trust that enough of you will be sufficiently interested to take this matter up seriously. Any man or woman, the owner of a dog of any breed, pedigreed or not, should and shall be eligible.

Bookmakers Upheld.

WASHINGTON, March 11.—The present method of bookmaking at the Bennings race track meetings, under which the bookmakers have to constantly move about in the ring, was today upheld by a decision of Justice Stafford in the Criminal Court of the district. The decision was in the case of John Walters, a New York bookmaker, a test case framed to determine the legality of the betting procedure at the track. The court held that the present betting plan on the part of the books does not constitute setting up a table, but merely constitutes bookmaking and hand-bookmaking. While unlawful within one mile of Washington, it is not unlawful at Bennings which is beyond that limit.

CHICAGO, March 11.—Jacob Schaefer tonight defended his championship title as 18-1 billiard player, one shot in, defeating Willie Hoppe, 500 to 422. Schaefer's average was 14 10-35. Hoope's average was 12 15-34.

MEN
My Cures Are Known Cures
They are real, genuine cures. That is why they are known.
MY METHOD is a success for the reason it cures QUICKLY, ENTIRELY and PERMANENTLY. My CURES cannot be hidden—they are bound to be known—to be talked about—to be advertised throughout the country.
My Method is no Experiment. It has been used by so many men, with such certain and unvarying success, that it is difficult for any one to be ignorant of its unequaled value.
VARICOCELE
Many men have been treated for varicocele by the common methods used and have hoped that nature would assist in re-establishing a natural physiological condition, but not one, to my knowledge, has had his hope realized. Failure is sure to follow such methods as local applications, medicines, appliances, caustics and innumerable methods advanced by unreliable pretenders. Let me bring you FACE TO FACE with some of my cured patients. My sanitarium treatments cure every case of varicocele in from four to seven days.
I Am Specialist in the Cure of NERVOUS DEBILITY
BLADDER TROUBLE
STRICTURE
BLOOD POISONING
CONTRACTED DISEASES
LOSS OF NERVE POWER
KIDNEY TROUBLE
GRAVEL (stone)
VARICOCELE
LOCAL DEFORMITIES
Etc., Etc.
I CAN CURE YOU.
STRICTURE
I have devoted years of special attention to this condition. My treatment softens and relaxes the diseased membrane and the formation is completely destroyed in a few days.
CONTRACTED DISEASES
A permanent cure is the only cure. This can be obtained only by thorough local treatment, properly given. No after effects follow, such as stricture, ulcerations, deep-seated inflammation, and bladder troubles.
A CONFIDENTIAL TALK FREE OF CHARGE.
You to whom this message is directed are invited to visit me for a confidential chat, when I will have something to say that will lift a heavy load from your mind.
I treat every case privately.
I furnish all medicines free.
I have every appliance that could possibly be necessary to cure men.
I charge nothing for consultation.

Weak Men---I Can Cure You
No matter if you have been pronounced incurable by any other physician, don't on that account hesitate to come to me for treatment. I have cured hundreds of men who had been told that they were incurable. Remember that my methods will cure cases that are practically incurable by any other treatment. My methods are original with me, and are the result of many years' experience in medical practice. I effect a cure in every case I take for treatment, because my treatment is adjusted to the needs of each patient with scientific precision. I leave nothing to guesswork. I KNOW when I begin treating a patient that I will perform a complete and permanent CURE. Such a cure by my treatment is just as certain as that two and two make four.
I claim that nothing less than a complete eradication of the disease from the system is a real cure. I treat to completely remove the disease, and not merely the symptoms. I drive out every root and fiber of the ailment and effect a cure that will make you strong and vigorous for a lifetime.
The cures I effect are the result of my thorough knowledge of every phase of the diseases I treat and to the fact that I apply individual treatment to each case. In every instance I know the ailment, and I know the cure for it. The fact that I agree to wait for my fee until you are cured is proof of my confidence in my ability to cure in every case. Some physicians assert that certain diseases of men are incurable. I deny that, and stand ready to PROVE that by my methods there is no disease peculiar to men that cannot be cured.

The Master Specialist
You Can Pay Me When You Are Cured
Varicocele
Under my treatment the most aggravated cases of varicocele are cured, in a few days' time. There is no pain, and it is seldom necessary that the patient be detained from his occupation. Normal circulation is at once restored throughout all the organs and their natural processes of waste and repair are again established. If you are afflicted with varicocele, consult me at once. Delay can bring on aggravated conditions and nervous complications and involve the general health.
No other physician employs a like treatment, and so thorough is my work that there need not be the slightest fear of a relapse into old conditions.
"Weakness"
I am confident that I have cured more cases of so-called "weakness" than any other physician. There may be doctors in the large eastern cities who have treated more cases than I, but they cling to the old and ineffective practice of dosing with tonics. "Weakness" is merely a symptom of local disorder that requires local treatment. This is a truth that I have discovered and that has been fully established by my success in effecting permanent cures. My method is original with myself and is employed by no other physician.
Free Consultation
To judge my ability without personal consultation may be an injustice to yourself that will cost a lifetime of suffering. Consultation is free and confidential and you place yourself under no obligation to me whatever by coming to talk with me about your case.
Specific Blood Poison
Others dose the system with mineral poisons scarcely less dangerous than the disease itself. The best they hope to do by this treatment is to keep the disease from manifesting its presence upon the surface of the body. Under my treatment the entire system is cleansed. The last taint of virus is destroyed. Every symptom vanishes to appear no more. I employ harmless blood-cleansing remedies. They are remedies heretofore unknown in the treatment of this disease. They cure by neutralizing and absolutely destroying the poison in the system. Such cures cannot be other than complete and permanent.
Stricture
My treatment for stricture removes the necessity for surgical operations even in severe cases of long standing. I do no cutting nor dilating. No other physician employs my methods of overcoming this disorder, so the service I offer you is original and distinctive. Do not give up hope because others have failed. I will cure you and the cure will be a prompt and painless one. My treatment dissolves the stricture, subdues all inflammation, relieves all irritation or congestion that may exist in the kidneys or bladder, reduces enlargement of the prostate gland, and restores health and tone in all organs affected by the disease.
All medicines are prepared in my own private laboratory and are absolutely fresh and pure.
My Fee Is $10
In Any Uncomplicated Disorder.
Contracted Disorders
To but partially cure a contracted disease is almost as dangerous as to allow it to go untreated. Unless every particle of infection and inflammation is removed the probability exists that the disease will gradually work its way into the general system. Still greater is the danger of the prostate gland becoming chronically inflamed, which always brings partial or complete loss of power. Perhaps twenty-five per cent. of the cases of so-called "weakness" are a direct result of some improperly treated contracted disease. During the past five years I have treated thousands of cases of contracted disorders and have effected an absolutely thorough and safe cure in each instance.

LOST ART.

BOXING GAME DETERIORATES.

Science of Self-defense Is Losing Its Hold.

Present Day Fighters Think Only of the Money.

Van Court Is Disgusted With Condition of Things.

Scientific boxing is threatened with becoming a lost art. England lost her science a good many years ago, Australia's decline followed, and now the American prize ring experts are losing the art of the game. This, in substance, is the opinion of DeWitt Van Court, boxing instructor at the Los Angeles Athletic Club, and a recognized authority on the manly art of self-defense.

"Ask any of the fighters who appear in the Naud Junction bouts what he thinks of one of his fellow-pugs," said Van Court yesterday. "The answer will be: 'He is great at covering up,' or, 'He is a game guy.' This means that he is willing to stop punches with his face, but knows very little about hitting his opponent or avoiding attack. In the old days, when a new fighter was heard of, the first question was: 'Can he punch?'

"Boxers today have gone back and are still going," is Van Court's idea of the modern situation. He ascribes the decadence of the game primarily to the commercial spirit which pervades the sport wherever it is found. The young man goes into boxing to make easy money, regardless of whether he is fitted for it or not. He is willing to take a good many beatings in order to break in, and in most instances has but a small knowledge of the read art and science of boxing.

Newspaper writers and photographers are also blamed by the veteran instructor for the false standards which today dominate boxing. The young aspirants for championship honors very often imitate the poses they see published. If the champ fights with a crouch, is that not the proper style? Freak poses and unnatural position are forced in picture-making by the newspaper demand for "something different." Thus champions allow themselves to be photographed in postures which they never assume when fighting, and which are often absolutely contrary to the laws of the game. The growing generation imitates these pictures, and false notions thus get a foothold."

TRAINING DISPLAY.

Too much show in training and not enough attention to the real principles of boxing is another cause ascribed by Van Court to the present-day decadence of prize fighting. Where the old-time champ studied and argued for hours over some little point or movement, the modern mitt "artist" spends his time in unessential bag punching and other showy tactics designed to please the uneducated fight fan, who does not know the difference.

Van Court was a boxing instructor with Jim Corbett for three years, and says that he has seen Corbett haggle for a whole afternoon on whether or not a certain slight foot movement was a good one or not. Corbett used to lay awake night figuring out how one of his pupils managed to hit him. Most of the present generation of boxers do not have head enough to figure these things out for themselves.

When Van gets to talking about cleverness, he gets so excited he can hardly articulate. "Why these fellows that fight nowadays are a lot of bums," he says. "Most people think that Jack O'Brien is a clever man because he jumps about four feet when his opponent makes a pass at him. The boxers of the old school would not move an inch where he moves three feet. Their idea was to get the biggest results from the least possible exertion. Half the present fighters don't know how to feint, or if they do, can't tell you why they do it."

Another cause of the decline in the art, says Van Court, is the wrong interpretation of the rules by referees. A man is allowed to hit in the breakaway, or fight with but one hand free. The result is that a boxer develops "rough-house" tactics and neglects his science. If the rules were followed to the letter, boxing would be improved.

All the while the public is getting the worst of it and does not know it. Poor exhibitions are patronized, poor boxers gain favor, and the game drifts further and further away from the scientific basis. Science is no longer the deciding element in a mill. The gameness, so called agressiveness, stamina, and freak qualities count more with the average fan than art. The old boxers followed the principle that a straight line is the shortest distance between two points. The modern fighter wastes his movements, swings, holds, and resorts to all sorts of practices which the true boxer scorns.

LOOK TO AMATEURS.

The restoration of boxing is looked to from the amateurs. The amateur goes into boxing to learn all he can. He makes it a science and studies it just as a man does the details of his business. The professional fighter goes in for money and cheap noteriety, and with his slip-shod manners will only carry boxing further and further away from its true meaning.

While Van Court takes a gloomy view of the present school of fighters, he still hopes to see the remaining representatives of the old style, such as Abe Attell, Joe Gans and Johnny Coulon, gain the ascendency and become the fashion plates of the coming generation of ring fighters. The Sullivans he also considers of the old school.

Examples of fighters who have the wrong idea are numerous, in fact, make up the great majority of those who entertain the public at the present time. Even Van Court's favorite pupil, Jimmy Britt, he says crouches too much. Bat Nelson's style is absolutely condemned. Regarding the last Britt-Nelson fight, at Naud Junction, Van Court raises a nice question as to what constitutes agressiveness.

In the mind of most of the witnesses of the battle, Nelson was the aggressor because he kept coming in for more punishment and assimilated all that Britt could give him. Van Court contends that Britt was the aggressor, because in every instance he hit the first blow. It matters not, says Van Court, whether Britt was going in or backing up. He hit first; therefore he was the aggressor.

Boer Unholz, in his straight hitting, resembles the old school, but his crouch is something entirely foreign to the scientific game. Both Tommy Burns and George Memsic are swingers instead of punchers.

HARDEST HITTERS.

"They say that the scientific men can't hit hard," Van Court said. "Let me tell you that the truly scientific man is the hardest hitter, because he knows how to make his blows count. Science and brains will win over brute strength every time."

Looking at the decline of boxing from a historical standpoint, Van Court points out that England, where the modern game had its inception, was the first to lose the art. In the days of the turf battles boxing was patronized by the best people of the country. Lords and men of high degree watched the contests. But gradually the game fell into the hands of the rougher element, and the higher classes withdrew their patronage. This meant poor business for the best instructors, and they emigrated to Australia and America. Laws were enacted, also, which put the game down for years.

Australia then took up boxing. The young man who decided to go into the calling trained and studied for years. He tried to be a better boxer each time he fought. When the easy money of America was discovered, an exodus to this country occurred which left Australia without a single master of the art of boxing. The American decline was identical with the progress of the game in professional hands.

Jem Mace started the improvement of the art in Australia thirty years ago. Larry Foley was his pupil, and in turn became the instructor of the school which included such fighters as Shadow Maher, Young Griffo, Cockey Tweedy, George Dawson, Peter Jackson, Dan Creedon, Bob Fitzsimmons, Jim Hall and a score of others.

This school was of the straight-hitting style. A crouch was unknown. Their foot work was fast and they had it down to a fine point, but no movements were wasted.

These fighters were the founders of the old style in America. Jim Corbett, Jeffries, Kid McCoy, Joe Choynski, and many others now classed with the old-timers, knew the real style of boxing.

ORANGE CLASS MEET.

WAYNE SMITH DOES WELL.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

ORANGE, March 11.—The interclass meet of the Orange Union High School was held on the new athletic park Friday. The freshmen won with a total of forty-one points, seniors a close second with thirty-six, juniors third, with thirty-one; while the sophomores got nothing.

No remarkable time was made in any of the runs, and the most promising event was the shot put, which was won by Wayne Smith, of the senior class, whose longest put was 42ft. 9in. Of the six puts, four were nearly 41 feet. The other surprise of the day was when Kelley, a freshman, won the low hurdles in 28 flat, considering the fact that he had practiced on the hurdles only a few times, that was a very good run indeed.

The events were as follows:

The 120-yard high hurdles, won by Kelley, Murrey second, R. Campbell third; time, 19 4-5s.

The 100-yard dash—Won by Wayne Smith, Murrey second, Kelley third; time, 11s.

One mile run—Won by Putmam, Woods second, Billingsley third; time, 5m. 45s.

The 440-yard dash—Won by W. Smith, Murrey second, Snyder third; time, 1m.

The 220-yard dash—Won by Murrey, Kelley second, Woods third; time, 25s.

The 220-yard hurdles—Won by Kelley, Murrey second, R. Campbell third; time, 28s.

The 880-yard dash—Won by W. Smith, Woods second, Snyder third; time, 2m. 19s.

Relay race—Won by juniors.

Pole vault—Won by W. Smith, Snyder second, Kelley third; height, 8ft. 4in.

High jump—Won by Kelley, O. Smith and W. Smith tied for second; no third; height, 4ft. 11in.

Shot put—Won by W. Smith, Campbell second, Kelley third; distance, 42ft. 9in.

Broad jump—Won by Kelley, H. Campbell second, Murrey third; distance, 17ft. 9in.

Officials—Referee, Reuntly; starter, Barker.

COMPTON TEAM WINS.

DEFEATS SAN PEDRO HIGH.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

COMPTON, March 14.—Compton High School defeated San Pedro High School in a dual track meet at Compton yesterday afternoon by the score of 56 to 39. Wilson was the point winner for the inland team, while Rider was the mainstay of the beach aggregation.

Wilson made remarkably fast time in the fifty-yard dash, negotiating the distance in 5 2-5s. Wilson also covered the century in very good time with a mark of 10 1-5s.

Results:

The 50-yard dash—Wilson (Compton,) won; Bunker (Compton,) second; Rider (San Pedro,) third; time 5 2-5s.

The 100-yard dash—Wilson (Compton,) won; Rider (San Pedro,) second; Bunker (Compton,) third; time, 10 1-5s.

Mile run—Yankee (Compton,) won; Martin (San Pedro,) second; O'Donnell (Compton,) third; time, 5m. 22 3-5s.

The 220-yard dash—Rider (San Pedro,) won; Wilson (Compton,) second; Bunker (Compton,) third; time, 24 2-5s.

The 440-yard dash—Wilson (Compton,) won; Shepple (San Pedro,) second; Young (San Pedro,) third; time, 57 3-5s.

The 880-yard run—Webb (Compton,) won; Martin (San Pedro,) second; McGrew (Compton,) third; time, 2m. 24 2-5s.

Shot put—Cunningham (Compton,) won; Stockwell (Compton,) second; Miller (San Pedro,) third; distance, 34ft. 1in.

Broad jump—Rider (San Pedro,) won; Webb (Compton,) second; Cunningham (Compton,) third; distance, 17ft. 10in.

Pole vault—Rider (San Pedro,) won; Stockwell (Compton,) second; Miller (San Pedro,) third; height, 8ft. 6in.

The 880-yard relay—Won by San Pedro by default.

ANNUAL STRUGGLE.

COMPARE TEAMS IN CONFERENCE.

OCCIDENTAL AND POMONA BOTH CLAIM ADVANTAGES.

Each Aggregation Claims Whittier Will Help Out by Winning Points from the Other Team—Presbyterians Feel Cocky Because of Good Showing in Dual Meet.

The annual conference track meet will be held on the Occidental campus next Saturday afternoon. Pomona, Whittier and Occidental will be the contestants. U.S.C., which has been an important factor, although not a winner, in recent years, is not included on account of the Methodists' failure to accept the so-called conference rules laid down.

The fight for first honors will be between Pomona and Occidental. The Quakers are not being counted upon to secure more than twenty points, as they are weak in all departments, except the distance runs. Pomona's victory over Occidental in the dual meet foreshadows a Claremont victory in the big meet but as the Presbyterians will be capering around in their own territory, any advantage falling to a home team will be coming to Occidental.

Occidental students have figured out a dope sheet that gives them a victory by a close score. The Presbyterians find hope in the fact that Whittier is strong in the distance runs as Occidental is weak in the mile and two-mile races, and are counting on the Quakers to take points away from Pomona in these races without cutting into the Occidental slice of points.

Capt. Bird of Occidental, who was unable to compete against Pomona in the dual meet, will be in the running in the conference meet, and the Presbyterians feel confident that he will take first place in the 440-yard dash from Sloane of Pomona, and that the relay team will be able to win with Bird to run the last lap. Bloe, Rush and Bonner, the other members of the Presbyterian relay team, are capable of covering the quarter-mile distance in less than 53s.

While the Presbyterians expect Wieman and Thomson again to beat Spurgeon of Pomona in the 120-yard hurdle race, the Claremonter will probably be looking for blood when he again toes the mark, and the Presbyterians will have to scratch dirt in order to finish ahead of him. Wieman and Thomson will of themselves run a pretty race, as Wieman has just come to the front as a hurdler, and threatens to take away Thomson's well-established position as Occidental's best hurdler.

Bruce Merrill is training for the pole vault, after staying out of the other meets of the year, and as he has a record of 10ft., 9in. in this event, Occidentalites are counting on him and Lowry to annex some points with the pole.

Bird will probably run the 100-yard dash but as he has not run the distance in less than 10 2-5s. this year, Sloane of Pomona, who ran the century in 10 1-5s. in the dual meet, should carry off first place. The Presbyterians are hoping that Bird will show a return to form in the short sprint and surprise the Pomonans.

Mills of Whittier and Carver of Occidental will probably furnish the feature attraction of the meet when they clash in the 880-yard run. A new Southern California record is predicted by the followers of both men.

POMONA CONFIDENT.

LOOKS FOR BETTER RESULTS.

CLAREMONT, March 10.—Claremonters are much pleased with the showing made by their track team in the meet with Occidental, and are confident of taking the conference meet with a decisive margin. Pomona dopesters award Whittier and Occidental all points in the half-mile, and Mills a second place to Himrod in the mile.

Sagebrushers figure that the Quaker points will come from the Presbyterian side of the score card rather than the Congregationalist.

Rogers's failure to take the 220-yard dash was due to an inaccuracy of the track, for the Pomona sprinter's lane was five yards longer than the others. This was discovered after the race, but since Pomona had a long lead no kick was raised. Occidental's hurdles were in rickety shape, and unless new ones are secured for the meet the Claremonters will likely carry their own barriers, which are of the latest reversible pattern.

Merriam and Rogers should be in better condition by the triangle contest, and better records are expected. Munger will not be obliged to go over six feet until he meets Channing Hall in the California meet, who held the Coast record at 6ft. 2 24-100in., until Munger raised it to 6ft. 3in.

Sloane is improving his stride daily, and is confident that he will beat Bird, the O. C. captain, in the quarter-mile. Parker, who ran a lap in the relay, should be in better condition. The fourth member of the relay team will be either he or McKee, the latter likely, if he stays out of the half-mile. Metcalf is the cactus climbers's only strong entry in the weight events.

RECORDS BROKEN.

SEVEN NEW MARKS SET.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

POMONA, March 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The boys of Pomona High School track team wore winning colors again here today, when they won the championship of the Citrus Belt League by defeating Redlands High School; score, 68 to 27.

A large crowd of rooters was present to cheer for both sides, much enthusiasm being manifested and good feeling prevailing throughout.

There were several thrilling features in the meet, seven interscholastic league records being broken as follows: Bennett (P.,) 20 feet 8½ inches. Shot put, Buckles (P.,) 44 feet 8 1-4 inches. 440-yard dash, Best (R.,) 54 seconds flat. High jump, Bennett (P.,) 5 feet 8 inches. 880-yard dash, Sanborn (R.,) 2 minutes 13 5-8 seconds. Pole vault, Mosher (P.,) 10 feet 11 3-4 inches.

A record was established in the first mile relay ever run in a Citrus League meet, the event being won by Nesbit, Davis, Weber and Kepner, Pomona; time, 3 minutes 55 seconds.

The results in detail are as follows:

The 100-yard dash—Best (R.,) first; Mahoney (P.,) second; Nesbit (P.,) third; time, 10 2-5 seconds.

Broad jump—Bennett (P.,) first; Kauffman (P.,) second; Sanborn (R.,) third; distance, 20 feet 8½ inches.

Mile run—Won by Lorbeer (P.;) Davis and Belcher (P.,) tied, getting second and third; time, 5 minutes 9 seconds.

Hammer throw—Buckles (P.,) first; Bennett (P.,) second; McIntyre (P.,) third; distance, 146 feet 7 inches.

Shot put—Buckles (P.,) first; McIntyre (P.,) second; Best (R.,) third; distance, 44 feet 8 inches.

The 440-yard dash—Best (R.,) first; Nesbit (P.,) second; Weber (P.,) third; time, 54 flat.

High jump—Bennett (P.,) first; Bonnell (R.,) second; Sanborn (R.,) third; height, 5 feet 8 inches.

The 880-yard dash—Sanborn (R.,) first; Blakemore (P.,) second; Tallisfero (R.,) third; time, 2 minutes, 9 3-5 seconds.

Pole vault—Mosher (P.,) first; Bennett (P.,) second; Evans (P.,) third; height, 10 feet 11 3-4 inches.

The 220-yard dash—Best (R.,) first; Mahoney (P.,) second; Evans (P.,) third; time, 24 2-5 seconds.

Of the Pomona lads Lorber, Mosher, Nesbit, Mahoney, Bennet and Belcher showed up in fine form, while Best and Sanborn did good work for Redlands. The Pomona boys have been carefully training and were prepared to retain the championship which the Pomona team has held for several years. In the new mile relay no effort was made for a speedy record, as the boys were not crowded.

It was announced today that the Pomona High basketball team, composed of Nisbet and Evans, forwards; Kepner, center; Dills and Belcher, guards, which won the interscholastic championship of Southern California last Saturday by defeating Whittier High, on the Occidental College grounds, is arranging to go to Northern California to play either the Berkeley High or Selma High School basketball teams, it is not determined which, for the interscholastic championship of the State.

Pomona High School is maintaining an enviable record in all classes of interscholastic athletics, and there is much rejoicing here tonight by the student body and interested friends over another victory this afternoon.

THE LEGENDARY ST. PATRICK.

UESDAY will be St. Patrick's Day, and there are few corners of the globe, and they very remote, where some son of Erin will not turn back his ghts almost sixteen centuries to the great mission- who won his half-savage ancestors from heathen rdition to the gleam of light out of which has n modern occidental civilization.

e cool student of history will make due allowance he legendary lore which has grown up in the minds devout and poetical people, as Celts are by nature, d the name of this great torch bearer of the past. gnorant in a narrow prejudice may entertain crude s as to the existence at any time of this apostle to rish. But the salient facts of his career cannot be ld. Italy, France, Scotland and Ireland may dis- r the distinction of having produced so great a The important truth is that he was produced, that e was so great a blessing to his kind and that his bears such good fruit for those of us who live n this remote day.

Patrick was born somewhere, probably in Scotland. n of some race of men, maybe Celtic, possibly Ro- n his name may be from the Latin word which s in our vocable patrician, one of noble birth. may be all here or there. The living facts about re that he was born, of some race, at some place, the year [illegible], that whatever his race, wherever his , whatever the day of his birth, he was a man is seldom born anywhere, that whoever were his he was a nobleman in all the truest meaning of ord, and that his life belongs primarily to Ireland. t while Ireland may justly claim him as her own, which belongs to the world for the reason that the ral results of his life bless all men. Whatever d and the Irish have been to modern civilization, we owe to the fearless, devoted apostle who took ght of the Christian religion into the island to dis- the gloom of druidism with its dark superstitions and rites, including the sacrifice of human beings n conceptions of God.

surely the world owes much to Ireland, and no part of it more than the United States. From Theodore Roosevelt and William McKinley back through all the years of our history men in whose veins ran Irish blood have been among the leading men who have wrought out all our greatness in all that goes to make us a great nation, in war, in peace, in thought, in industry, in statecraft, in literature, on the bench, at the bar, in the pulpit and in millions of clean lives at happy firesides.

But these things will be duly set forth by the thousands of eloquent Irish tongues which on Tuesday will sing the praises of the Irish apostle. This article set out intent on saying a few words on the legendary St. Patrick. Legend follows the footsteps of this intrepid missionary from his supposed birthplace in Scotland, through the land of heather into England, down into Wales, up the Irish Sea by many islands including the Isle of Man, across into Ireland, and through its length and breadth to his grave at Down Patrick. There are Kirkpatricks, Ilan-Patricks, Isles of Patrick, Patrick rocks and Patrick dales all through the British Isles, and legend traces the journeys of the saint through these in all his weary wanderings.

The best-known legend of St. Patrick is the one which tells of the difficulty of making the half-savage people to whom he preached comprehend the doctrine of the trinity, and St. Patrick showing them a three-leafed clover in illustration, which made the subject clear. In connection with this may be noted the legend of St. Patrick banishing snakes from his beloved island of perpetual verdure. Now the Irish name for the clover is shamrock.

This legend carries us far back in history. In Arabic the trefoil is known as shamrakh, and it was taken as a symbol of the Parsee triad in Central Asia ages before St. Patrick. Moreover, the druids taught that the juice of this trefoil would cure all bites of poisonous reptiles, and Pliny in his Natural History mentions the fact that the Iberian Celts (those of the Spanish peninsula) taught this too. How far back these legends lead and how widespread they have become.

Similar facts are noted in relation to a custom found in Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet." When the adherents of the rival houses of Montague and Capulet would provoke each other they bit their thumbs. This was no peculiar Italian trick. There are in old writers graphic pictures of swashbucklers and bullies of the bluest blood swaggering around St. Paul's, London, biting their thumbs at each other until a riot was stirred up. In the "Lay of the Last Minstrel" Scott has a note to the effect that biting the thumb among the Celts was not to denote contempt, but a vow to be avenged for an insult. Similarly, licking the thumbs was a promise to keep one's word and was done to bind a bargain. In the Highlands still it is said that people may say as indicative of closing an agreement: "We may lick our thooms upo' that."

See how far away from home this leads us. In Latin "polliceri" means to promise, and some philologists derive this verb from the noun pollix, a thumb. Here in Italy in the remote days we get back to a custom common among the Celts of Western Europe ages after the Latin word was in common use. And thus through old customs and stray words which have survived the customs which gave them birth we bind distant ages and widely separated races one to another.

THE SIGHING OF THE REEDS.

I heard the sighing of the reeds
  In the gray pool in the green land,
The sea-wind in the long reeds sighing
  Between the green hill and the sand.

I heard the sighing of the reeds
  Night after night, day after day,
And I forgot old age, and dying,
  And youth that loves, and love's decay.

I hard the sighing of the reeds
  At noontide and at evening,
And some old dream I had forgotten
  I seemed to be remembering.

I heard the sighing of the reeds;
  Is it in vain, is it in vain
That some old peace I had forgotten
  Is crying to come back again?

DIVING SPONGE BOAT.

A submarine has been built by a company at Bizerta for sponge fishing.

When sunk it can travel on a sort of wheel along the bottom of the sea, being worked by two submarine oars from the inside.

It collects sponges by means of a mechanical gripper, and has electrical searchlights, a telephone, and a speaking tube by which it can communicate with a boat on the surface. The submarine has already been down to a depth of 330 feet.—[London Express.

PRACTICAL ETHICS.

MENTAL ELASTICITY.

AGAIN and again have the great humanists of all ages in Orient and Occident declared the mobility of the human soul; the tractable nature of the human spirit, or the elasticity of the mind.

True, we speak of character becoming "fixed," but this fixedness is nothing more than the integration of evolution, whose correlative is dissolution. It is not an absolutely rigid mental, moral and physical constitution, but only the gathered elements of experience to a culminating point, which very acme of good or evil, of ignorance or intelligence, serves as a point of departure to greater good, greater evil, denser ignorance or more illumined intelligence. Hence we are justified in questioning the reasoning of those who hold that, a given stage of mental or moral development attained, at a certain age, which some fix at 20 and others at 30, the moral and intellectual character of man becomes fixed; incapable of further extension or devoid of the expanding and contracting quality of elasticity.

The law of life is motion. Motion of body, soul, mind and matter governs all change and modification in the universe. Forward, backward, upward, downward, the movement may be, but move the universe must, and every part thereof, so long as life continues; and hence there can be no absolute stillness in the sense of an ever-the-sameness. The tree, the rock, the mountain, or the man, is permanently planted or fixed in a given condition; but however fixed to our appearance any one of these forms in nature may be, a study of their inner structure, and a knowledge of the secret forces operating within each, teaches us that there is a constant, vibrant molecular shifting of mineral, vegetable, and animal substance.

Now similar forces are at work in the psychical centers of the soul. We are apparently the same year after year, and yet not the same, thanks to the principle of variability—the efficient cause of progress and of growth; the source of evolution, or in theological phrase, of salvation! It is this developing power manifested in the world, this possibility for improvement in plants, animals and humans that makes life so fascinating, of such perennial interest. This it is that makes living the all-engrossing object of our being—living in the sense of broadening and deepening our inner nature; clarifying our perceptive powers, sharpening and strengthening our thinking faculties, adding firmness and deftness to the touch with which we grasp life's problems, moral, intellectual, social and industrial; cheered by hope and the vision of a prospect of their solution; asking, whither, and whence, yet the while seeking to work out in living, human, and humanizing effort the answer. This it is that intensifies, uplifts, and invests the soul of man with energy radiant, that circles the spirit round with light translucent, that partakes of the luminous rays, the mysterious, yet ever-present fire and glow of infinite illumination and intelligence.

Hence how presumptuous, even for the most learned to lay down an absolute law limiting human power or capacity to develop only up to a pedantically-prescribed term of years! How deadening and disheartening is the result of the study of human intellectual capacity that determines: henceforth this soul, this intelligence, this being endowed with possibilities for superb education, susceptible to influences for supreme culture, capable of improvement mental, moral and spiritual so long as life shall last, shall, on the basis of certain scientific investigation and experiment be regarded as mentally and morally mature, or beyond the possibility of further improvement at 20 or 30.

If a certain class of men and women have ceased to learn anything new after the years of early manhood and womanhood were past, it was not because they were absolutely incapable of going farther; that they were unable to acquire more or new knowledge; to attain to a different, more coherent and intelligent outlook upon life; or to adopt a radical change of thought and course of of action; but that either the incentive and opportunity thereto were lacking, or that they took for granted that they could go no farther, that they had reached the goal of human attainment, or that portion of wisdom, knowledge, and culture that in the nature of things was allotted to them. All such deceive themselves when abandoning their ideals; or by ceasing to strive for goals each higher than the last.

Mind, soul, spirit, the ruling or energizing faculty in each of us is mobile, elastic; capable of expansion even long after its physical encasement has become old and defective. None has a right therefore to say, as representatives of certain schools have taught, that it was a psychological impossibility for an adult over 20 to acquire skill in manipulating a musical instrument for the first time. The feat will be more difficult no doubt, than if nerves, muscles, and musical mentality had been cultivated in early life, but love, desire, interest, patience, practice and persistence have often overcome the seemingly insurmountable obstacles confronting those who would cultivate a talent at a later or more "inflexible" time of life. Instances likewise are not wanting where men and women after three score years have mastered the intricacies of an ancient language unknown to them before. Still others have radically changed their conception of the universe at an age when it was generally accepted that no change of mental attitude toward life could be hoped for or expected. And how many after a long and useful career hoary with the wisdom of growing thought and constructive action, have in the shadow of the grave smiled contentedly at the consciousness of new light shed on their final hour of earthly understanding.

THE KAVIRONDO.

THE MEN GO NAKED AND THE WOMEN WEAR ONLY A TASSEL.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PORT FLORENCE.—Unfurl your fans and take out your kerchiefs to hide your blushes. We are about to have a stroll among the Kavirondo, who inhabit the eastern shores of Lake Victoria, on the western edge of British East Africa. These people are all more or less naked, and some of the sights we dare not describe. We have our cameras with us, but Postmaster-General Meyer will not allow our films to go through the mails, and no newspaper would publish all the pictures we take.

We are in the heart of the continent, so near the equator that a day's march to the north would enable us to straddle it, but so high above the sea that the weather is by no means unpleasant. We are on the wide Gulf of Kavirondo and on the eastern edge of the greatest fresh-water lake of the world. That island studded sea in front of us is Victoria Nyanza; and over there at the northwest, less than a week's march on foot, and less than two days by the small steamers which ply on the lake, is Napoleon Gulf, out of which flows the great River Nile. With the glass you may see the hippopotamuses swimming near the shores of Kavirondo Bay, and behind us are plains covered with pastures and spotted with droves of cattle, antelope, and gnu, and also the queerly-thatched huts of the stark-naked natives.

The plains have a sparse growth of tropical trees, and looking over them we can catch sight of the hills which steadily rise to the Mau Escarpment, beyond which is the great Rift Valley, and still farther east are the level highlands of British East Africa, the whole extending on and on to Mombasa, a distance as great as that between New York and Cleveland, to the Indian Ocean. It was at that point that I entered the continent, and I have been traveling for days in coming the 584 miles which lie between us and the ocean.

A Future Metropolis.

Port Florence is the terminus of the Uganda Railroad, and it is destined to be one of the great cities of East Central Africa. When the Cape-to-Cairo trunk line is completed there will probably be a branch running from here through Uganda to connect with it, and all the commerce of the vast region about Lake Victoria will flow by steamer to this point and down the Uganda railway to the sea. As it is now, the trade is greatly increasing, and ivory, hides, grain and rubber from German East Africa, the Upper Congo and the lands to the north of the lake are shipped through here to the coast. The cars come right down to a wooden wharf which extends well out into the Kavirondo Gulf. On the lake are several small steamers, which have been brought up here in pieces and put together, and they are now bringing in freight from all parts of this big inland sea.

As to Port Florence itself, it is a little tin town with practically no accommodations for travelers. The only place to stop is a dark bungalow, or rest-house, put up by the government, and the only stores are those of a few Hindoo traders. The Europeans consist of some soldiers belonging to the King's African Rifles, of the government officials and of some employés of the railroad.

The officials put on great airs. Among the passengers who came in with me yesterday was a judge who will settle the disputes among these half-naked natives. He was met at the cars by some soldiers and a gang of convicts in chains. The latter had come to carry his baggage and other belongings to his tin house on the hill and each was dressed in a heavy iron collar with iron chains extending from it to his wrists and ankles. Nevertheless he was able to aid in lifting the boxes and in pushing them off on trucks, prodded up to his work all the while by the soldiers on guard.

A Naked Nation.

But let us take our feet in our hands and tramp about through Port Florence. Later on we may march off into the country through which I traveled for about fifty miles on my way here. In Port Florence itself we may now and then see a man with a blanket wrapped around him, and the men frequently wear waist cloths behind or in front. Outside of this they are stark naked, many of them wearing absolutely nothing except plugs in their ears, strings of beads about their waists and rough wire rings on their wrists and ankles. All have skins of a dark chocolate brown. They have rather intelligent features, woolly hair and lips and noses like those of a negro. They belong to the Bantu race family and are among the best-formed of the peoples of Africa. Some one has said that traveling through their country is like walking through miles of living statuary, and I have seen thousands of such statues on my way here.

Take these Kavirondo men who have gathered about me just now as I write. Their figures are ebony, and some of them look as though they might have been cut from black marble by the hand of a sculptor. Look at those three brown bucks at my left. They are as straight as Michaelangelo's famed statue of David and about as well formed. See how firmly they stand on their black feet. Their heads are thrown back and two have burst out laughing as I turn my camera toward them. They are stark naked, with the exception of those bands of beads about the waist and their and bracelets. I can follow every muscle with know they are naked; and a married woman with her tail of palm fiber is fully dressed. A traveler tells how he tried to educate a gang of naked young women whom he met out in the country by cutting up some American sheeting and giving each a piece. The girls looked at the cloths with interest; but evidently did not know what to do with them. Thereupon the white man took a strip and tied it about the waist of one of the party. Upon this the other girls wrapped their pieces about their waists, but a moment later they took them off, saying: "These are foreign customs, and we do not want them."

Queer Marriage Customs.

During my stay in the Kavirondo country I have gone out among the villages and have seen the natives in their homes and at work. The land is thickly populated and the people are good-natured and quiet. One can go anywhere without danger, and there is no trouble in getting photographs of whatever one wants.

I am surprised at the great number of married women. This rule as to married women wearing tails gives one a knowledge of the condition of every woman he meets. If the tail is on one knows the woman is married, and if not that she is single.

The Kavirondo girls marry very early. I am told they are often betrothed at the age of six years; but that in such cases the girl stays with her parents for five or six years afterward. All marriages are matters of bargain and sale. The parents sell their girls for a price, and a good wife can be purchased for forty hogs, twenty goats and a cow. In the early betrothals the suitor pays part of the fixed sum down and the rest in installments until all is paid. If the father refuses to give up the girl when the time comes for marriage, the payments having been made, the suitor organizes a band of his friends and captures her and carries her home. A man usually takes his wife from a different village from that in which he lives, and when he comes with his band to the bride's village her gentlemen friends often resist the invasion and fight the suitor's party with sticks. At such times the girl screams, but I am told she usually allows herself to be captured.

I am told that old maids are not popular and that the average Kavirondo girl is just as anxious to be married as are our maidens at home. Indeed, she is usually so very anxious, that if she does not get a bid in the ordinary way she will pick out a man for herself and arrange to have herself offered to him at a reduced rate. I understand there are plenty of plump maidens now on the bargain counter.

Another queer marriage custom here is as to one's wife's sister. The man who gets the first girl in a family is supposed to have the say as to all the younger ones as they come to marriageable age. Polygamy is common here, and a man may thus have several sisters among his wives.

They Are Good Girls.

One would suppose that these Kavirondo girls might be rather loose in their morals. I am told that they are not so, and that they rank much better in this regard than the maidens of Uganda, the province adjoining, nearly all of whom wear clothing. Virtue stands high here, and infractions of the laws regarding it are severely punished. This is less so now than in the past. Divorces are not common, but a man can divorce his wives if he will. One curious custom is that if a husband and wife have a quarrel, and she leaves the hut and he shuts the door after her, that action alone is considered equivalent to a divorce and the woman goes back to her own people at once.

But let us go out into the country and look at some of the Kavirondo villages. I have visited many and have had no trouble whatever in going into the houses. There are many little settlements scattered over the country between here and the hills, with footpaths running from village to village. The most of the settlements are small, a dozen huts or so forming a good-sized one. The houses have walls of mud with cone-shaped roofs, thatched with grass. The doors are so low that one has to crawl into them, and many a house is not more than seven feet high from the mud floor to the top of the cone.

The roof usually extends out beyond the walls of the hut, covering a sort of veranda, a part of which is inclosed and a part open. There are poles outside which support the roof or the veranda.

The huts are usually built around an open space and are joined by fences of rough limbs and roofs, so that each collection of huts forms a stockade in which the animals belonging to the village can be kept at night. Sometimes a village may be made of a number of such villages, each collection of huts belonging to one family. One of the huts is for the polygamous husband and one for each of his wives.

But let us go inside one of the houses and see how it looks. We stoop low as we enter. The floor is of mud, with a few skins scattered over it. The skins are the sleeping-places. Notice that little pen at the back, littered with dirt? That is where the goats sleep. The chickens are put in that tall basket over there in the corner, and are covered up until morning. There is practically no furniture, except a few pots. The cooking is done in clay vessels over that fire in the center of the hut, and the food is served in small baskets, the men eating first and the women taking what is left.

Outside each hut, under the veranda, is the mill of the family. It consists of a great stone, with a hole chipped out of the center. The women grind Indian corn or millet seed in such mills, pounding or rubbing the grain with a second stone, just a little smaller than the hole. In the grinding bits of the stone come off and are mixed with the meal, often causing diseases of indigestion.

[illegible] of the Dead.

I understand some of the older Kavirondo villages are nothing but cemeteries, and that there are little [illegible] each hut of which contains one or more dead and nothing else. The people are superstitious, and want to be buried in the same places in which they have lived. When a chief dies his body is interred in the center of his hut. He is placed in the grave in a sitting posture, just deep enough to allow his head and neck to be above ground. The head is then covered with an earthen pot, and this is left there until the ants get in and clean off the skull. After this the skull is buried close to the hut or within it, and the skeleton is taken out and reburied on some hilltop or other sacred place.

Ordinary people are buried in their own huts lying on their right sides with legs doubled up under the chin. Such a hut is then left and forms a monument to the dear departed. I understand that where there have been epidemic diseases one may sometimes find a whole village of such huts occupied only by the dead. The buildings are left until they fall to pieces.

Kavirondo Cattle.

These Kavirondo are a stock-rearing people. I see their little flocks of sheep and goats everywhere, and frequently pass droves of humped cattle. The animals are fat. They graze everywhere over the plains, being usually herded. Every drove has a flock of white birds about it. Some of the birds are on the ground, and some are perched on the backs of the cattle eating the insects and vermin they find there. They are the rhinoceros birds, which feed on the flies and other insects which attack those great beasts, and which by their flying warn them of the approach of danger. The cattle are driven into the villages at night or into small inclosures outside. The women do the milking, but I am told they are not allowed to drink the milk, although they may mix it with flour into a soup.

Rich Lands Farmed by Natives.

This Kavirondo country is very rich. All over the plains from here to the mountains the trees have been cut off, but the ground is covered with luxuriant grass. Near the villages are little patches of cultivation. The natives raise peanuts, Indian corn and a millet like sorghum. I see them everywhere digging up the black soil. They are naked, and are almost as dark as the dirt they are hoeing.

In the vicinity of Lake Victoria and all along the Uganda Railway, large tracts of land have been taken up by Europeans, and some of this is being ditched and drained. I understand that it is the intention to turn the whole into one great cotton plantation, and see no reason why that should not be done. This country is right on the equator, and the elevation, which is about 4000 feet above the sea, makes it well fitted for cotton. It is too hot for white men to do steady out-of-doors work; but the plantations could be handled by the native labor. The whites who take care of themselves are reasonably healthy. This is especially so of those who live on the high lands, the lower places being malarious and productive of fever.

"Cursed Be Haman!"

HOW THE JEWS CELEBRATE THE FEAST OF PURIM.

By a Special Contributor.

"CURSED be Haman!" is the cry to be heard in every Jewish orthodox home and synagogue all over the world on the great and time-honored feast of Purim, celebrated this year on Wednesday, March 18, which is the fourteenth day of the Jewish month Adar.

The Los Angeles Jews will not be lacking in observing this festival with all the enthusiasm usually attendant upon it, while even the reformed Jews, who have given up a good many antique customs, will join with the orthodox in all the hilarity and jovial merriment possible.

Purim is quite as much a national as a religious feast, since it celebrates the deliverance of the Jews of Persia out of the cruel hands of Haman, 400 years before the Christian era.

Haman ordered lots to be drawn, in order to determine the day for the wholesale massacre of the Jews throughout the Persian kingdom, whence the name of this feast—Purim, or Lots.

Purim is, in fact, a kind of mixed Jewish Fourth of July and Christmas, in many ways. It resembles America's national holiday, July 4, because it recalls the historic preservation and deliverance of the Persian Jews from the yoke of the oppressor, with all its attendant jubilation, and it partakes of the nature of our Christmas, in the fact that Purim is a feast that is characterized by the giving and receiving of presents.

The Book of Esther, in which is told the story of Queen Esther and her part in the emancipation of the Persian Jews, expressly commands that the feast should be kept, not only as a joyful day, every year, but that the bestowal of gifts, especially to the poor, should be standing observance among the Jews throughout the Persian monarchy. From Persia, Purim spread all over Asia, Africa, and Europe, wherever the Jews settled, and was finally brought over to America. In every Jewish synagogue in California, as elsewhere, it is the pious duty either to read, or hear read, the Book of Esther on the feast of Purim. During this reading, in the orthodox synagogues, at the mention of Haman's name, the whole congregation shouts: "Cursed be Haman!" "Blessed be Mordecai!" "Cursed be Zeresh!" "Blessed be Esther!" "Cursed be all idolators, blessed be all Israelites, and blessed be Harbonah, who hanged Haman!" Such noisy religious and racial enthusiasm in a Christian church would seem entirely out of place, but in the orthodox Jewish synagogue, on the feast of Purim, it is quite in keeping with the spirit of the day and follows ancient custom.

There is a curious Jewish law forbidding the two sexes to wear each other's clothing, but on Purim this canon does not apply, on account of the joyfulness of the feast. In fact, all over the United States, in our larger cities, it is on Purim that the Jews give their great masquerade charity balls, when immense sums of money are raised for the poor, for hospitals, and for other charities, both Jewish and Christian. It is also in Purim that the Jews center all their dramatic talents, since the feast is characterized by amateur plays and dramas, for the purpose of arousing, every year, the memory of days at once terrible and triumphant in the long history of Judaism. Modern Judaism has been giving to the world a goodly number of Jewish playwrights, dramatists, actors and actresses, but had it not been for Purim, it is not likely that any Jewish drama would ever have appeared. The writing and staging of Purim plays for 2000 years by amateurs was the means of developing the modern Jewish drama. For ages, the only dramatic presentation allowed among the Jews was the Purim play.

Purim is also a popular children's feast, not only because of the custom of giving presents, but because, even in the synagogue, the children catch the hilarious spirit of the day and expect to be showered with nuts and sweetmeats, thrown down upon them from the galleries. And oh! what a scrambling among the youngsters!

So Purim, in the regular old-fashioned orthodox synagogue, is far from a decorous, hidebound festival, but the free expression of popular joy. The American Jews celebrate Purim with perhaps greater appreciation and mirth than any other, since, in the memories of their Persian sufferings and final deliverance, they see but a prophecy of that greater emancipation of the Jewish race guaranteed them, at last, by the Constitution of the United States. Of all Jews, the American is the most emancipated and the most happy.

Like all other Jewish days, the feast of Purim begins at sunset and lasts until sunset of the following day, a period of full twenty-four hours.

BEAR UP!

ABOUT THE LATEST ATTEMPT TO REACH THE NORTH POLE.

[London Answers:] At the great animal-training establishment at Hamburg presided over by Mr. Carl Hagenbeck, the famous animal dealer, four young polar bears are being trained, with a view to their enabling the daring Norwegian explorer Capt. Amundsen to make a successful dash for the north pole during his forthcoming Arctic expedition.

To learn something more of this novel scheme, a representative of Answers waited upon Mr. Hagenbeck at his hotel when in London the other day.

"Yes; it is quite true," he said, "and, by contract, I have to deliver the troupe to Capt. Amundsen by May 1. Furthermore, I have guaranteed that the bears will be as tame and as docile as dogs.

"Before I tell you how I am training them, perhaps you would be interested to learn how I secured them. The four were chosen from a collection of fourteen, for not every polar bear one gets hold of can be tamed. They were caught on the great ice floes by whalers when mere cubs, and sent to me at Hamburg in great tubs or casks.

"When they arrived at the depot, in September last, they were about seven months old, and very savage. Knowing that I had to train four of them, I placed ten of them in a very large cage, and, on the very day of their arrival, one of my men was sent into the cage to feed them. The object of this was to get the beasts used to the presence of a human being, while it also has the effect of taming them somewhat. They at once flew at the intruder, but a few strokes from a long stick sent them back to their corners. In a few weeks they realized that it was useless to attack the keeper, so they allowed him to enter and leave their den as he pleased.

"He then carried them honey, sugar, and fruit, of which they are very fond. In a little while some of them got so tame as to run up to the man and take his offering out his hand. At this point we selected the four we decided to train for the explorer, consigning them to a spacious cage. Another man was now called into service, and the two spent hours together among the bears every morning and evening.

"At the moment, all that the bears are actually doing is to learn how to draw pieces of wood round their cage by means of a sort of harness, while the trainer endeavors to steer them in various manners. Sometimes he walks beside them, and indicates his wishes by clubbing them on one side or the other of their soft, fluffy heads; at other times, a crude sort of bit is placed in the animals' mouths, and they are steered by this.

"Very shortly now, the bears will be harnessed to carriages, and then to sleighs that run on wheels. It is Capt. Amundsen's intention, of course, to use the bears to draw the sleighs over the frozen ice.

"By next May the bears will be nearly full-grown, and weigh close upon a ton apiece. The polar bear is the biggest bear in the world, and is exceedingly strong. Indeed, we calculate that a full-grown polar bear is as strong as ten horses or 100 sleigh dogs. Four bears, therefore, will be equal to forty horses or to 400 dogs.

"No creature is better fitted for drawing sleighs over the frozen wastes than the polar bear. He is the only bear with hair on the soles of his feet. The hairs not only keep his feet warm on Arctic nights, when the mercury freezes, but prevent him from slipping on the ice slopes, where his claws might not catch. His fur coat is proof against the coldest storm that ever blew.

"Indeed, the advantages of trained bears over dogs are many. Should open water be encountered, the bears could easily swim across it, drawing with them the sleighs, which will have water-tight bottoms, enabling them to float on the surface. I see no reason at all why the venture should not be a complete success."

New Order of Merit.

ONE WOMAN AND SEVEN MEN HAVE RECEIVED DECORATION.

By a Special Contributor.

THE President has already decorated seven heroes and one heroine with the nation's new order of merit. Some time ago he reminded Congress that the government had long been bestowing medals of honor for acts of great heroism upon the water, and recommended similar decorations for "conspicuous bravery and self-sacrifice in the saving of life in private employments under the jurisdiction of the United States, and particularly in the land commerce of the nation." An act authorizing such rewards for saving of life on our railways was passed, and according to the regulations framed to carry it into effect applications for the decoration may be filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission if accompanied by affidavits of eyewitnesses to the deeds of heroism for which recognition is desired. Such applications are passed upon by a committee of five officials of the commission, and when there is a favorable action the President of the United States decorates the hero with a handsome medal of honor, stamped by hand at the United States mint; also with a gold and enamel button, which the owner may wear upon his coat lapel. With these two emblems of a country's appreciation of bravery the President transmits to each hero a personal letter commending his bravery.

The new medal of honor is of bronze, and is about as large as a silver dollar. On the obverse side it bears the classic figure of a sturdy man standing upon a railway track, with one knee resting upon a boulder which has fallen between the rails. With a flaming brand he is warning an approaching train of its peril. On the reverse side is a laurel wreath such as the Romans placed upon the brows of their national heroes. Against the outer rim of the medal are the words, "The United States medal for life-saving on railroads," and inside the wreath is inscribed, "For bravery. Awarded to ——." The button accompanying the medal and intended for everyday wear is a shield of the United States in the three colors. About a circle upon the shield is the inscription, "For bravery."

Left Sick Bed to Brave Death.

One of the most heroic acts thus rewarded by the President was that of Charles Arms of Clarksville, Tenn. Some months ago the locomotive, mail and baggage cars of a Louisville and Nashville train crossing the bridge over the Cumberland River at Clarksville ran through the open draw and plunged into the water, fifty feet below. It was a very dark night, and the river, at flood tide, was so full of driftwood that the ferry service was suspended.

Hundreds, alarmed by the crash of the fallen train, swarmed the ferry wharf and lined the river bank. Scores of able-bodied men stood agape and were so stunned that not one budged a jot to give aid in response to the distress cries arising out of the black torrent before them.

There were many brave men in the throng, but against the bridge piers they heard the bump of the driftwood, whose black shadows they saw pass in the glare of the wharf lights.

Near the ferry landing Charles Arms, a poor man, lay in bed, ill with malarial fever. He had lain thus in its clutches now nearly four weeks. The doctor had left his bedside when the wreck occurred. Arms, where he lay, could not hear the crash of the falling nor the cries of the victims. The first news of the tastrophe was brought to him by his little daugh

No one offering him in return for money, he pushed off alone in the boat.

Rescue of a Child.

Somewhere in Dickens, I think it is in "Bleak House," re is a "Mr. George," a big, brave trooper, a protecy and lover of children, whom every reader loves ugh the whole story. I thought of him while perusthe affidavits of eyewitnesses to the heroism of a George of real life, who has just received another these decorations for saving life on the rail. This George—Edgar E.—is not a trooper, but a young ographer, only 26, in the offices of a big coal comy at Wilkesbarre, Pa. He lives in the neighboring h of Parsons, where he was lately waiting to catch morning train, when his eye met a sight which sent dder of horror through him and the group of his ghbors who waited with him. A Polish lad, only 12 s old, who had been walking the track on his way to l with his little sister, had caught his foot in a frog was helplessly struggling right in the path of the dly-approaching train. Mr. George, without waitfor his neighbors, bounded along the track to where terrified lad was tugging to release his imprisoned but by the time he reached the spot the train was t upon the little fellow. With a presence of mind h has since called forth the commendation of the y awe-struck eyewitnesses, the young stenographer ed to the side of the track and with his left hand the lad's body down as far as the outer rail would t. With his right hand he at the same time forced imprisoned leg so that it came just under the cylinof the locomotive and the journal boxes and steps e front car as they swept by, scraping the bodies rescued and the rescuer. The engineer applied emergency brakes, but did not succeed in stopping the engine and one coach had run by. When the n crew and passengers reached the spot, expecting d both the man and boy killed, the latter was safe George's arms. The latter's right hand was cut bruised and his coat was smeared with grease and from the engine, but beyond the extreme strain on g the lad was unhurt.

August a 6-year-old girl attempted to cross in a rapidly-approaching Chicago, Milwaukee and train at Stowell Station, Milwaukee. agent, had he had time for introspection, have realized that in the eyes of the world he excuse for physical inaction. On one foot he support eight inches high, and it was an awkburden to drag along. But, agile as an athlete prime of training, he ran upon the track, took the child and had just lifted her out of the path when he was himself struck by the pilot beam engine as it rushed past. But he is alive and today, and bears in his buttonhole the little the nation's new legion of honor.

kind of courageous impulse has brought the to George H. Williams of Braintree, Mass., an of the New York, New Haven and Hartford While his train was lying at Quincy, Mass., and express was approaching on an adjacent Williams saw a woman and girl take their lives own hands by passing under the closed crossnear by. Unmindful of their danger, they to cross directly in front of the fast train. The was soon across, but her elder, seized with that sort of panic which is peculiar to women and stopped directly in the path of danger. Williams from his cab and pushed her until she fell back but was himself struck by the express and feet, sustaining injuries so serious that unable to report for duty for three months. The wrote to him: "You showed courage of a the kind, and I trust the medal will be proof your countrymen realize what you did and valor at its true worth."

from Cowcatcher.

Charles W. Haight of the Delaware, LackaWestern, who lives at Utica, N. Y., has been for bravery, saving a two-and-a-half-year-old he saw directly between the rails in front of while it was hauling a milk train of six cars steep grade, near West Winfield, N. Y. Imseeing the infant, Mr. Haight reversed his engine, but the rails were slippery and the train thundered on down the incline. Seeing that heroic work must now be done, he jumped out on the running board alongside the boiler, climbed down upon the cowcatcher, and, leaning forward with arms outstretched, caught the little one just as the lumbering engine was about to strike it. So fast was the train still traveling that the child struck Haight's body with a force that knocked him back against the pilot beam. In this predicament it was only by a heroic effort that he could hold fast to the little one until the locomotive, after continuing for five car lengths, came to a stop. The child, who was the daughter of a section hand, escaped unhurt. Haight's engine was of the "Mother Hubbard" type, with cowcatcher of vertical steel rods, offering but a precarious footing. The President in his letter commended the brave engineer for performing "a great service for humanity in so unselfishly placing your own life in jeopardy to save the life of a helpless child."

Mangled, but Saved Child.

For a very similar deed of heroism which resulted less fortunately for himself, a plucky fireman out in Nebraska has not only been decorated by the President, but honored by the citizens of his community with election to the office of County Clerk. This medalist, George H. Poell, of Grand Island, Neb., at the time of his heroic rescue, was passing near Powells, Neb., on a St. Joseph and Grand Island train. It was about dusk and the train was rounding a curve at speed of twenty-five miles an hour, on a down grade, when the engineer, applying the brakes, cried out across the cab that a child was upon the track. Poell took one look at the tot, who turned partly around and then started on a trot, still in the center of the track, as if seized with a childish notion that he could beat the locomotive in the race for life. Poell then sprang out of the cab window, dropped upon the cowcatcher and bracing his heels on the bottom rail of the latter, leaned forward. He caught the little fellow and lifted him onto the locomotive; but the impact with the child caused him to slip. Luckily the child rolled to a place of safety, but his rescuer was caught beneath the engine's cylinder, his body being dragged on the ties of a bridge forty feet long. His foot was picked up 200 feet behind and both of his arms were broken. But the child, two and a half years old, was only slightly hurt.

First Woman Decorated.

The first woman to be honored with this new national order of merit is Miss Mary Guinan of Middletown, N. Y. The deed for which she was decorated was a display of extreme daring in risking her life to save that of a man, 74 years old and quite feeble. This old gentleman attempted to cross the Erie Railroad at Middletown in front of two trains approaching on adjacent tracks, and in opposite directions. He was unmindful of his danger until he reached the central space between the two tracks. Here he became greatly bewildered at his apparent inability to either go forward or turn back withlut being ground to pieces. Miss Guinan, who was waiting at the crossing, saw his predicament; and, unminful of herself, ran to the old man's side, in the place of danger. She now shared his peril, and a misstep of a few inches was certain to bring death to both. The situation demanded the utmost presence of mind. Realizing that to drag the man to either side would now be certain death, she seized him, dragged him to the center of the space and held him firmly to prevent his giving way to a natnral instinct of panic. It was a dizzy and breathless wait while the two trains whizzed past, one on either side. The danger over, Miss Guinan led the old gentleman, now really unconscious from fright, to the sidewalk, where bystanders who hurried to them were surprised to find her so calm and undisturbed, as though nothing had happened. A measurement of the space in which the two had stood between the swaying trains showed that it was only a yard across.

THE RAT BOARDER.

"Sunflower seed makes the best rat bait. How many pounds shall I put you up?"

The dealer showed how the trap should be baited with the seed, coming to realize the harm and the expense of these rat boarders who won't pay their bills. Why, I know firms with outstanding and quite hopeless accounts of $40,000 and $50,000 against the rat.

"Seagoing rats cost the skipper 2 cents daily. Rats in feed mills cost 3 cents a day. In hotels they cost a half-cent. In groceries they cost 4 cents.

"Also they cause ptomaine poisoning by scampering over garbage and then scampering over good food, and it is well known that the bubonic plague is due to them.

"Two pounds? Thank you."

MILK BY THE BRICK.

Milk may be bought in Belgium and Denmark in summer just the same as some kinds of ice cream—by the brick. It will be frozen solid, though, and if intended for use as soon as received in the household, the lacteal fluid for the tea or coffee will have to be chipped off with the handle of the knife or fork, according to the quantity desired in the drink. This brick milk has grown to be a necessity in the warmer countries of Europe.

The Belgian government has given a yearly subsidy of about $50,000 to increase the trade. In Copenhagen a firm engaged in this business makes a weekly delivery of 300,000 pounds per week, and a great deal of this goes to distant countries.—[Philadelphia Record.

A CURIOUS DREAM.

BY A SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

The deep interest and constant reading in the daily papers of the Japanese-Russian War, I attribute to be the cause of a most singular dream, if it was nothing but a dream, the memory of which lives forever in my mind, so vivid and real, leaving me for many days often in a state of weariness and almost nervous collapse.

I was visiting at the house of friends in the country; among their guests was a very celebrated spiritualist, and two theosophists, one a near relative of Mme. Blavatsky. On the night of which I write we had been chatting on many subjects—but not of the war. From some unaccountable reason I was scarcely able to follow the conversation, and at 10 o'clock excused myself, more from a feeling of stupidity than sleepiness. I went to my room and threw myself on my bed fully dressed, a strange languor overcoming me—I was not wholly unconscious, but unable to rouse myself—the sensation of being lifted and carried very swiftly over great space, then utter oblivion. When I awoke or regained consciousness I was on a battlefield, filled with dead and dying soldiers, blood everywhere, the hem of my white dress was crimson with it—my gray cloak dripped with it; strangest of all with the moans of the dying, and the faces of the dead, I had no fear. The men in uniform who were with me were examining and separating the dead and living. I saw a little way from me the eyes of a dying soldier gazing earnestly at me, his face covered with blood. I knelt down and raised his head.

"I knew you would come," he said. "You will deliver the message for me," his voice eager, but choked with the death rattle in his throat.

"What message," I asked to comfort him.

"Here in my breast, promise me—you—will—not—rest—until—you—have—delivered—it—promise!" I bowed my head; he fell back dead. Placing my hand in his breast, to see if life was extinct, I felt and drew forth a paper; this, too, was crimson with blood, except at the corner, where were two words in a strange tongue. I showed the bloody paper to the commanding officer; he started, turning pale.

"Start at once; speak to no one; remember your promise to the dead."

I asked no questions, but placed the paper in my bosom. Stepping over dead bodies, without fear or wonder, I started, whence I knew not—two roads lay before me, one lonely, gray and deserted; I turned down the other—it looked less dreary. Long miles I traveled, when suddenly I stopped; surely it was a sigh, almost a sob—the "wrong road." It seemed to be wailed by the wind, for there was no human soul near, and I had long since left the dead behind me.

I awoke with a start. I was back in my own room, which was flooded with sunlight; the birds were singing outside my window in the big linden trees. Just then the rising bell rang; I tried to rise. Oh! the unutterable weariness of my arms and limbs; my feet, too, felt bruised and sore when I tried to stand. Presently I managed to get to my wash stand, and, bathing my face with cologne, I felt less faint.

When I entered the dining-room, I staggered to a seat, deadly faint and white, unutterably exhausted. I said nothing of my dream. During the day I lay silent in a hammock, with my eyes closed. I could hear the murmur of voices, but I slept at intervals. Immediately after supper I retired to my room—a desire to be alone, to think. I retired at once, and fell asleep—the same feeling of being lifted and carried swiftly, still more swiftly, through unseen space, when again conscious of my feet touching earth, as though some one had put me down. I looked about me; I was on a lonely road, not a house in sight; again I heard a low sigh—"Hurry"—it seemed to breathe.

My fleet flew over the ground faster and faster; they seemed to scarcely touch the earth at times; when, after miles, I suddenly stopped in front of a low, gray stone house, picketed with soldiers. I walked to the door, and was confronted by a sentinel. Quietly I spoke the two words at the bottom of the paper. He disappeared, but returned in an instant. I was led down a long hall, lined with soldiers. I entered a room; at a desk sat the commanding officer. I went straight to him, drew the bloody paper from my bosom; he seemed to read it; springing quickly to his feet, he gave orders, which started officers and men hurrying from the room.

Placing his hands upon my shoulders and looking searchingly, gravely, at me, he said: "It is well done; you are weary and must rest."

"So weary," I replied faintly.

He led me himself to a room, where he poured water into a basin for me to bathe. As I raised my face to the mirror, to bathe it, the face I saw was not mine, but that of the dead soldier, looking at me!

"Faithfully you have kept your promise—rest." I knew no more.

When I became conscious, I found myself sitting at the window in my room, fully dressed—the hem of my white dress dripping wet as though it had been washed and wrung out. The night before, I had undressed and hung my clothing carefully in the wardrobe. Panting for breath, I tried to reach the bell, but fell in a swoon. My friends found me there. Later in the day, when I was able to go downstairs, I told Mme. Blavatsky's relative of my strange dream.

"When again you go on a long journey, rest until you are recovered. You have been many thousands of miles. Do not speak of it as a dream." And I sometimes wonder—if "dreams come true."

Since that night I have studied the faces of every Japanese officer I could find, either in the papers, in the embassy, or in photographs. I wonder in what far-off country that gray stone house stands—at the end of a lonely road.

A Germ Factory.

UNCLE SAM TURNS OUT MICROBES OF EVERY KNOWN DISEASE.

By a Special Contributor.

ONE of the most important government institutions at Washington is a microbe factory. It belongs to the War Department, and makes a business of turning out germs of all kinds of diseases in quantities, breeding them in glass tubes, and feeding them upon specially-prepared jelly foods.

The establishment in question, which is under the charge of Dr. William Gray, is one of the principal laboratories of Uncle Sam's health service. Whenever a new and interesting "pathogenic" microbe turns up—such as the long-sought germ of the deadly Panama fever, which was discovered recently—it undergoes painstaking examination at the factory. It is bred on scientific principles in a specially-constructed incubator, provided with every luxury of diet that its fancy demands, and even furnished with living prey in the shape of monkeys, rabbits, or guinea pigs, in order that it may have a chance to show exactly how it accomplishes its deadly work.

The results obtained are well worth the trouble expended. For, when a disease microbe has been satisfactorily identified, and its life history fully studied, means wherewith to fight it are easily found. For one thing, various poisons are tried upon it, and the one that seems most deadly is likely to prove, for obvious reasons, the most effective medicine for the malady, when given in judicious doses to a person attacked by it.

There is, however, an entirely new idea which is soon to be applied in our army, not for the treatment, but for the prevention of typhoid—that deadly disease which decimates troops so frightfully in the field. It has already proved very successful in Germany. Batches of typhoid germs, artificially bred on gelatine, are subjected to a temperature of 140 degrees Fahrenheit for one hour, thereby killing them, and their dead substance is employed thereupon as a "vaccine," being introduced by inoculation into the veins of the soldier. Though the microbes themselves are no more, their poison retains an activity which, when utilized in the manner described, gives immunity against the dreaded malady.

The capacity of the laboratory in Washington is sufficient to turn out, incidentally to other work, as many billions of typhoid germs as might be required, when thus employed, to vaccinate the entire population of the United States. There are, however, many other diseases which seem to be amenable to treatment by this novel process, the microbe "cultures" in each case being available, when their vitality has been destroyed by heat, for utilization as a preventive "vaccine."

The Bad Cold Germ.

One of the most difficult germs to identify is that of the only-too-familiar complaint known as the bad cold—the cold which affects most particularly the throat and nasal passages, and which signifies a very uncomfortable sickness, all the more exasperating because it engages so little sympathy. As a matter of fact, several different kinds of microbes are concerned in the production of this special malady—half a dozen of which are being fed on bottle food at the Washington laboratory—and nobody has yet been able to find out which one of the lot is chiefly guilty.

Living under such artificial conditions as we do, we are all of us like hot-house plants. A slight chill produces a congestion in the membranous lining of the breathing passages, and, as a result, a local congestion follows. At once the hostile microbes—always present in numbers in the nose and throat—get busy, feeding upon the tissues, and trouble follows. Not only do they create a good deal of local irritation, but incidentally they excrete poisonous products which find their way into the blood and are carried by its stream to all parts of the body, causing that general feeling of lassitude and discomfort which is characteristic of such a cold.

May Prevent Grip.

Maybe the new "vaccine" treatment may prove to be of value as a preventive of grip, the next time a serious epidemic of that malady sweeps the country. Its germ is already identified, and, as a matter of course, is kept in stock at the factory in Washington. One of the smallest of disease-producing microbes, it is also one of the most difficult to grow, requiring either human blood or pigeon's blood as food. It is a bacillus, or rod-shaped organism, and, as now known, it produces quite a variety of complaints, according to the part of the body it finds a lodgment in. In the throat and lungs it starts up one kind of complaint, in the intestines another, and in the nervous system another; and it even attacks the membrane that covers the brain sometimes, inducing a kind of meningitis.

For some reason not well understood, germ diseases have a way of sweeping around the world from east to west. Thus the great "pandemic" of grip which struck this country in 1889, seems to have originated in Central Asia. Thence it swept across Europe, progressing just about as fast as people travel, and, after reaching the Atlantic coast of the United States it made its way with augmented rapidity to the Pacific, thanks to the fast railroad service. People carried it, of course, and the crobes disseminated by infected persons found their into the breathing passages of others, thus prop the disease.

a long series of years by lesser epidemics, more localized. A theory recently suggested is that crobes of grip are kept over from year to year lungs of persons suffering from pulmonary thus serve as foci for distributing the compl this is altogether uncertain. There is no question ever, of the fact that the malady becomes milder in type from year to year, until at length happen a few years from now) another grip sweeps around the world.

One of the difficulties in the way of studying the history and the habits of the grip microbe is that not attack lower animals, such as guinea pigs, and rats, with which the investigators in the W germ factory are accustomed to make experim artificial inoculation. Only monkeys will take ease, and these are comparatively hard to get. same way with typhoid fever, to which the low mals seem to be, happily for themselves, imm

Panama Fever.

Special interest attaches to the germ of above mentioned (otherwise known as Cha because it was regarded as a serious menace ers on this interoceanic canal. It produces lignant and deadly type of malaria—one of tropical fevers which, under suitable conditions ple off like flies. As recently discovered, of its distribution is a species of mosquito, duces it into the blood of the victim. States government, incidentally to the proce ing up the canal zone, has pretty nearly wip sources of mosquito supply by draining the other means, so that the Panama fever become almost an unknown malady in that all events.

Besides, the employés of the Panama Canal in dwellings which are made disease-proof, by enclosing them entirely with wire net. they are surrounded by wide porches which are covered with such net, of a mesh to exclude mosquitoes. Inasmuch as not but also yellow fever and a considerable most deadly maladies peculiar to the trop known to depend for their distribution up inable insects, it is obvious that the health on the isthmus owes much to this simple and in- pensive precaution.

All of the wonderful sanitary work that has been done the government in the canal zone, and which has re- ed in transforming it from one of the most unwhole- into one of the most healthful regions on the earth, been based upon scientific researches made in the factory at Washington. When the famous experi- s were made in Cuba, half a dozen years ago, under direction of Dr. Walter Reed, which proved that the myia mosquito was the sole agent for the distribu- of yellow fever, a branch of this laboratory was set in Havana, to examine samples of blood from infected tients, to study the suspected insects by microscopic ection, and to find out all about the life history of specific microbe. And at present not only is the War rtment digging the canal, but it is utilizing the en- prise incidentally for the development of new sanitary s, all of which receive their inspiration from the ain head of knowledge in the microbe-breeding lishment conducted at the national capital as a reg- branch of the military service.

The Hotel Clerk.

HE DILATES AT SOME LENGTH ON SPRING FASHIONS.

By a Special Contributor.

"WHAT do you think about it, Larry?" asked the Hotel Clerk of the St. Reckless; "shall I succumb to the long green frock, modeled on the chaste yet graceful lines of a string bean, with the double row of white buttons scattered along the short ribs like the stops on an organ? Or shall I allow my errant fancy to be wooed into a melodious coma by the modish one-button cutaway as worn with the fashionable wescut of the new squashed-canteloupe tint? Shall I have the scalloped effect on the turn-back cuffs? Or shall I order some of those tasty side pockets that are cut in a curve and put on the bias like a shark's smile? It's all still an open question to me, and I will probably need the help of a few discriminating friends in making a selection.

"You see, there's such a confusion of directions coming from those that are best qualified to speak out and advise a palpitating and excited public. One leading authority, now, says that the broad lines of wavy braid running down the outer seams of the trousers, or pants, if made west of Pittsburgh, will provide a truly winsome finish to a business suit for forenoon wear. Another who is of equal standing in the profession especially recommends that they shall be made loose and care-free around the hips, but turned up at the bottoms as far as the dictates of good taste and the size of the knee joints will allow.

"Personally, I have a haunting dread that the long and clinging frock coat may not become me. It would be fine for a slender, willowy form say like Vice-President Fairbanks, who is really the only Gibson-girl statesman we've got left; but while I have a good figure, that is only pleasantly plump, still at that I'm willing to admit that I may be getting what you'd call lumpy in spots. That's what makes me hesitate in my selection of the close-fitting or princess effect with the sobaway lapels that open back like the shutters on a hen-house. Ah me! no wonder so many of our most prominent young men are breaking down under the nervous strain of trying to do the right thing in the face of such conflicting and contradictory advices."

"Wot talk have you, with your winsome pants and your one-button nightmares?" asked the House Detective. "Have you been hittin' the pipe in the back room of a retail clothin' store, or have you been drinkin' absinthy frappys at a merchant tailors' convention?"

"I've merely been reading up on the modes, the spring modes for men," said the Hotel Clerk. "I've been trying to inform myself how a man shall attire himself in order to avoid making himself conspicuous in the best circles. It would appear from my readings that the man who dresses up like a human being this season is in great danger of being jeered at, as one lacking in the mere rudiments. One article that I saw in the paper says that not only the coatings, the vestings and the pantings, but even the undershirtings and the pajamarings and the porous plasterings, if such be worn, must follow a common color tone such as mauve or shrimp pink or muskmelon tan in order to stamp a fellow as a dresser of discrimination and individuality. And the attention that is being paid this year to the smaller details of dress—you've no idea, Larry! A man of even the simplest tastes is going to need at least six walking canes, and as for scarfpins and——"

"Come out of it," admonished the puzzled House Detective. "You wouldn't never fall for no such foolishness as all that, and if you did I'd quit speaking to you and so would all your other friends. We'd talk about you, maybe, but not to you."

"Well, I suppose you're right," said the Hotel Clerk. "But it certainly makes me wistful and envious to read about the garments that are going to be worn by the pioneers of the world of fashion next month. I lack the hardihood myself to do it. I confess it with shame. Our stock sprang from the primeval soil at too recent a period to qualify me to wear those Pain's Fireworks clothes. If I should become the owner of a pair of the fashionable egg-plant-purple half-hose, formerly socks, having a design of southern smilax twined around the ankles and hollyhocks in the natural colors running up the legs, I'd feel that I'd have to walk on my hands in order to get my money's worth. But one who is to the manna born, as the poet says, could go paddling around in society with his southern terminals thus enmeshed in beauty's weave, and never let on any more than if he was barefooted.

"I'll tell you, Larry, it takes about three generations of persistent wealth and the kind of culture you get at Lenox and Palm Beach to reach the point where you can put on those spectacular garments and look as if you were wearing them. With you or with me, 'twould look as if the clothes was wearing us.

"After a family has enjoyed about seventy-five years of uninterrupted mazuma in this country, you begin to get results. The Joe Cannon knobs and declivities that distinguished the countenance of the founder of the hereditary estate have been obliterated from the faces of the present crop of male offsprings, leaving them with a smoothness and symmetry unmarred by any expression whatsoever. The mind has become a mere damp trace which still adheres stubbornly to the inner, or unused side of the skull, but gives the owner no trouble. You'd see such a person sitting on the back of his neck in a club window yawning until he looked like a doughnut in the face, and you'd probably say to yourself that this was a party lacking in nerve and daring. Which only goes to show how mistaken you'd be. That noble youth has a bunch of sporting corpuscles in his blood like a tall stack of red chips. He proves it by the clothes he wears.

"When a New York family has got so used to having money that its members can call the servants by their last names offhand and know how to shake hands at the level of the Adam's apple without appearing self-conscious, it usually produces a young Prince Charming with a head shaped like a pineapple cheese who is able to appear happy and comfortable in garments that you or I couldn't wear in a minstrel first part without attracting comment."

"Well, praise be, men ain't as vain as women about their duds," said the House Detective.

"Quite right," said the Hotel Clerk. "That's one of the grandest things about our sex, ain't it? Still, I've noticed that when a man joins the Knights Templar or gets appointed in the Governor's staff, about the first thing he does is to go down to the photographer's and have a few dozen full lengths taken, in which he is shown with a pleased smile on his face, standing up courageously under his weight of epaulettes and gold-plated curtain cords. And I've often caught myself wondering if so many would turn out for a lodge funeral of a member of the Amalgamated Order of Laryngitis if they had to leave off the regalia.

"This clothes proposition is a funny game, anyway you take it, Larry. When our healthy ancestors were inhabiting the swamps of Britain, wearing their own teeth and hair and carrying no excess baggage to speak of, they were savages. When they fell into the habit of wrapping up their legs the same as comic-opera banditti and wearing outer garments which fitted them just as bad as if they had been made by a fashionable London tailor of the present day, they were semi-barbarians. But in this century when a man puts on a pair of suspenders that saw into his better nature and divide his disposition into two jagged fragments, and when he inserts his feet into the pointed-toed shoes that have enabled so many of our leading chiropodists to buy country places, and encases his dome in an opera hat that would be a concertina if it had works in it, and backs into an overcoat that fits him like a dog tent, and sometimes even falls for one of those tweed suits with such nice broad stripes in it that you have to walk around behind him to see the rest of the pattern—why then he's a crowning product of civilization."

"Still, at that, I bet there ain't no other town in the United States except New York, that'll stand for them foolish English clothes," said the House Detective.

"We're all slaves of some sartorial tyranny or other, whether we get our diseases out of an almanac, by the light of a log fire at night, or buy them indirect from a high-priced specialist on Fifth avenue," remarked the Hotel Clerk. "The main difference is that out in the provinces they don't go off after new tailor-shop gods every time the calendar moults a page. They seem to stick closer to the old idols. A highly-shellacked white shirt with a white tie and a diamond stud—that's a gambler; same, with the tie but without the stud—that's a local pastor; same, with the tie slipping around under the ear and a marbled design of tobacco juice on the bosom—that's a member of the Legislature; same with no collar, no tie, no stud and craving a trip to the laundry—that's the man who cleans up around the place for 50 cents a week. Why, Larry, the wardrobe is everything in the country, when it comes to dressing a part. The average politician in a back district can lose nearly everything else and still hold his own and a little bit of somebody else's if he clings to two things."

"Wot two are them?" asked the House Detective.

"They're his real vital organs," said the Hotel Clerk. "One's his voice and the other's his Prince Albert coat."

ORIGIN OF THE THIMBLE.

The thimble was originally called a thumb bell by the English, because worn on the thumb, then a thumble, and finally its present name. It was a Dutch invention, and was first glass and pearl. In China beautiful carved pearl thimbles are seen, brought to England in 1695.

Thimbles were formerly made only of iron and brass, but in comparatively late years they have been made of gold, silver, steel, horn, ivory, and even glass and pearl thimbles are seen, bound with gold and with the end of gold.

The first thimble introduced into Siam was a bridal gift from the King to the Queen; it is shaped like a lotus bud, made of gold, and thickly studded with diamonds arranged to spell the Queen's name.—[Church Eclectic.

ARE GOATS GOOD FOR HORSES?

"A goat is kept in every Russian stable. The Russians believe that goats are good for horses, that their presence keeps out disease."

The speaker, a Russian cigarette dealer, frowned at the laugh which went round the hotel lobby.

"Oh, yes," he said, "it is no doubt a superstition, and we Russians are no doubt a very benighted people. All the same, I have presented goats to some of my horse-keeping patrons here in America, and they tell me that their stables are doing better now than ever before."

"Mr. Sneezeatchoo," said a pipe salesman, "I have a couple of automobiles. Would you recommend a goat for the garage?"

GAZETTEER HUMOR.

Many specimens of unconscious humor are received by the editors of that monumental work, the new "Imperial Gazetteer of India." A district was said to be "an extensive rolling plain, consisting of alternate ridges of bare stony hills and narrow fertile valleys." An interesting item of natural history was afforded by the remark, "the buffalo differs from the cow in giving a milk which is richer in butter fat, in voice, and in having no hump."—[London Globe.

Japanning the Orient.

By George M. Lukesh.

CHAPTER I.

THE STAGE SETTING FOR THE TRAGEDY.

THE Far East is the danger spot of the world. Here is brewing a storm that will shake the ends of the earth when it breaks. The Russo-Japanese War did not simplify matters in the least, as the American and English people so fondly believe, but only increased the danger and uncertainty. Instead of Russia occupying Manchuria alone, we now have both Russia and Japan there. Instead of Korea being an independent buffer state between China and Russia on the north and Japan on the east, we find her swallowed, land and people, by Japan, and acting simply as a stepping-stone for further campaigns of expansion in that whirlpool of political intrigue and selfish ambition.

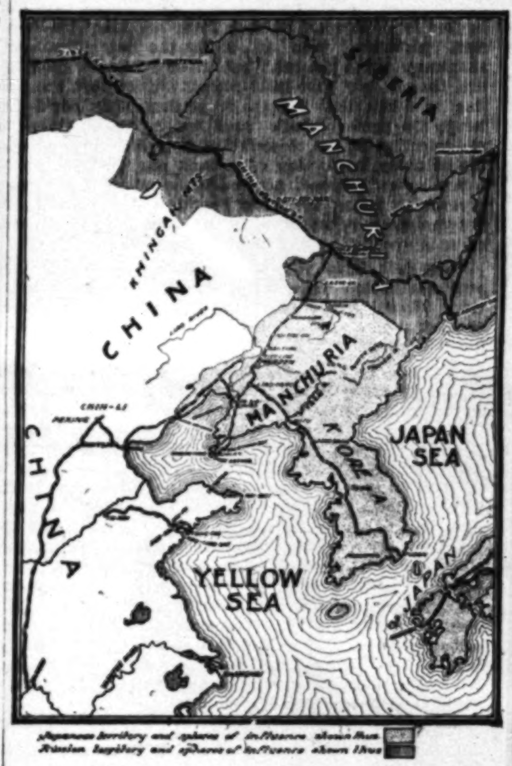
Although every treaty made by Japan with Korea has upheld her independence, this empire today is one in name only; the Emperor is virtually a prisoner in his own palace; finances, foreign affairs, customs, army and navy, transportation—all are in the hands of the victorious Japanese, and the lot of the Koreans is surely a sad one. What are the important rights that Japan has gained by the war? First, sovereignty over Korea; second, certain rights in China. Both of these are possessions taken from sovereign powers who were neutral during the war, and who had no legal interest therein, except that they furnished the spoils. Korea has not consented to be practically annexed to Japan; in fact, she has objected thereto in every way in her power. No greater hatred could exist than that which the Koreans, from Emperor to the lowest coolie, bear to the Japanese, and nothing could be more untrue or misleading than the reports of friendliness circulated by the subsidized foreign press of Japan in England and America.

None of the powers has recognized any "preponderating influence" of Japan in Korea except Russia and England. The position of Russia can well be understood, as it is a result of the war, and was made one of the articles of the declaration of peace; but England's recognition is a different matter. It came naturally as a result of her alliance with Japan. And why did England make this alliance with Japan? Simply her fear for the security of her Indian empire should Russia secure control of all the northern part of China, as at one time seemed probable. Japan had long been looked upon by England as the only possible ally in case of trouble, but England was not ready for a hard, fast-binding alliance until Japan had "proved herself" and showed that her highly-advertised "civilization" was more than a mere veneering. But Japan, recognizing this, precipitated matters. Flushed with her victory over China, and considering herself the equal of any power, or combination of powers, she in 1902 informed England that she was going to make an alliance, and would offer her the first opportunity, and, if England did not accept at once, she would turn to Russia. England, thoroughly frightened, came to terms, and the alliance of defence and offence was ratified.

Japan's threat of an alliance with Russia was of course a bluff; Japan's intention, even at this early date, was to fight Russia and not to unite with her, as they were both after the same territory, Korea and Manchuria, and Russia certainly had the upper hand at this time. But it was a bluff that "cashed in," and "cash" is the proper word to apply. Japan had fully made up her mind to declare war against Russia; her army was being rapidly enlarged, her fleets prepared, but she lacked the one thing most necessary for engaging in war in these modern times—money. Japan wanted money, and a few years to spend it in, and then she would be ready. Since the making of the treaty, England, with every possible assistance from Japan, has been trying to gain the popular approval of her people. She has had great success in this effort in England, but among her nationals in the Orient there is not much enthusiasm. I have talked with British merchants throughout Japan, and everywhere I find a feeling of disgust, and an expressed opinion that England got the small end of the bargain. As one tersely put it: "The blooming beggars wanted our pounds and shillings, and in return they are freezing us out of our markets in Japan, Korea and China."

The success attending the "English-Japanese Banzai Association" in turning the English people to an enthusiastic support of Japan was likewise repeated in America, as both English and Japanese recognized that the public opinion of America was most powerful, and also that many dollars might be secured from a sympathetic and wealthy republic, although not an ally. Americans will probably resent the statement that their opinions were made up for them by the Japanese, through the English, but this is nevertheless the case. Practically all our foreign news comes from England, and always has. England owns the ships and the cable companies, and England is a great clearinghouse for foreign news. During the war all news had to go from the front to Tokio; from here such news, and in such shape as the censors saw fit, was handed to the newspaper correspondents, most of whom were British. It now passed through Reuter's news service to London, and then on to America. All news was framed with one idea—to influence public opinion in England and America; and how admirably it did its work is shown by the feelings of the people during the war, and even today. Since the war is over, the "Banzai Association" has grown stronger, if anything, as the special correspondents of the American papers are gone, and the field is left to the editors of the leading English newspapers in the trade centers of Japan, from whom all news leaving Japan or Korea passes on to London. The leaders of these papers are the Japan Times of Tokio, the Japan Mail of Yokohama, the Japan Chronicle of Kobe, and the Japan News of Nagasaki. The editors of these papers are the correspondents of the leading London papers, and in addition, some, if not all, are in the employ and pay of the Japanese government. Is it a wonder that they daily sing in concert a joyous song of Japanese virtue, success and infallibility? It is true that there is an American paper published in Yokohama—the Japan Daily Advertiser—but this paper must secure its Japanese news from the same source as the rest, and even if it could secure unprejudiced news from Japan, Korea and Manchuria, it would not dare to print it, as its very life depends on the advertisements of the Japanese and merchants who do business with the Japanese, mainly English. I don't blame the editor if he joins in the happy chorus of subsidized praise.

Public opinion in England and America, the greatest asset that Japan had during the war, was thus made favorable to her, and is continued today. Everything favorable to Japan is expanded; everything unfavorable suppressed or presented in such a way that it makes little impression. We are informed that the Japanese man is the bravest, most patriotic, most self-sacrificing being in the world; that the Japanese girls are so dainty, cute and entertaining; but we are not told that the Japanese man is the most dishonest that one can find anywhere, or that the Japanese girls lack all appreciation of morals and virtue, as we understand them. The real issues and results of the war have been concealed from the American people, and false ones created to justify the Japanese cause. We are told that Russia threatened the very existence of Japan, that war was the only hope of salvation, and that Russia and not Japan was the aggressor. These statements were untrue. The real cause was that Japan wanted Korea, wanted Manchuria, wanted all China, and Russia stood in her way; in fact, had made more progress than Japan had, and the latter was jealous, humiliated and revengeful. The whole war was simply a quarrel as to which should steal other people's property, and the only ones who lost were the innocent victims.



Japanese territory and spheres of influence shown thus ▨ Russian territory and spheres of influence shown thus ■

We have heard, and still hear, so much about the rights of Japan, and the rights of Russia in Korea and Manchuria; as a matter of fact, neither party has, or ever have had any rights in either Korea or Manhcuria. Korea is a sovereign state; Manchuria is a part of China, and neither of these parties was involved in the war except being the battlefield during the war and the loot when it was over. Russia had certain interests in Manchuria, and possibly ambitions in Korea; Japan had no interests in either, but ambitions in both. To speak of rights is to misrepresent the situation. But these interests or ambitions were not such as should affect the sovereignty of these neutral states. We have greater interests in Canada today than Japan ever had in Korea, but would this justify us in seizing Canada? I can imagine how horror-stricken England would be, and how violently she would express herself at any suggestion of sovereignty following our interests in this case; yet there would be ample precedents in Korea and South Africa. Japan has no more rights in Korea today than the United States, Germany or France have.

In order to understand the causes of the present unfortunate conditions in the northern Orient, it is necessary to briefly review the modern history of the nations most active therein. Russia concerns us only since the extension of the Siberian Railroad to the Pacific. Twenty years ago plans for this road were already made, and anxious eyes were on the lookout for an ice-free port, Vladivostok being frozen in for several months each year. After the China-Japan War Russia's skill in diplomacy secured for her a long lease of Port Arthur, a perfect port and harbor, and a right of way for a branch of her Siberian Railway from Harbin to Port Arthur, through Manchuria. Thus Russia made her first step into Chinese territory, and here she still remains, though with power and prestige greatly diminished by the victorious Japanese. The Boxer war of 1900 gave in the history of Manchuria really begins the year 1894, when war was declared between and Japan, brought about by Japanese ambitions and the desire of Japan to supplant Chinese in that unhappy country. War was declared 1894, by the land battle of Phyonyang on Sep- and the naval battle of Haiyang, September drove the Chinese from Korea and her the war was transferred to Manchuria.

progress was steadily westward, and 1895, in a battle fought thirteen miles north the Chinese were utterly defeated and asked for. By the terms of peace Japan was all of the Liaotung peninsula, which Chinese (Manchurian) province of Feng-tien, the famous Port Arthur. This treaty was at Shimonoseki April 17, 1895, and formally Chefoo, May 8, 1895.

"We have specially commanded our government to negotiate with the Chinese government respecting all arrangements for the return of the peninsular districts. The exchange of the ratifications of the treaty of peace has now been concluded, the friendly relations between the two empires have been restored, and cordial relations with all other powers have been strengthened.

"We therefore command all our subjects to respect our will, to take into careful consideration the general situation, to be circumspect in all things, to avoid erroneous tendencies, and not impair or thwart the high aspirations of our empire."

Thus was closed the first attempt of Japan to subjugate a part of China, and the 30,000,000 taels having been paid Japan withdrew all her troops from Manchuria by the end of 1895.

A great deal of unnecessary sympathy has been extended to Japan from England and America for thus losing the "fruits of her victory," but it must be remembered that Japan forced this war to supplant the Chinese influence in Korea, a country in which Japan had no rights, but unlimited ambitions. She permanently ended the Chinese power in Korea, and in addition "held up" China for an enormous and outrageous indemnity from which she built up an army and navy later destined to defeat the mighty Russia. Germany, France and Russia undoubtedly correctly recognized the ambitions of Japan in China, and their work would receive due credit today had not Russia promptly proceeded to secure from China by "diplomatic methods" just what Japan had secured by force and then had taken from her.

But a student of affairs in the Orient, and especially one not under the influence of the active "Banzai League" of Japan, will readily see the reasons of Japan and Russia for desiring to enter Manchuria were decidedly different. Japan was simply actuated by a desire of conquest and territorial expansion; Russia was building a world railroad at a cost of hundreds of millions of dollars, and desired to reach the Pacific Ocean.

A glance at the map will show how necessary it was for Russia to cross Manchuria to reach the sea with her railroad. Manchuria cuts off Eastern Siberia from the Lake Baikal region, and it was manifestly impossible to build the road wholly on Russian soil. The objective point at first was Vladivostok, and Russia made a treaty with China in September, through the Russia-Chinese Bank, for the building of the Chinese Eastern Railroad, which was to form the connecting link of the Russian railroads in Central and Eastern Siberia. The terms of this agreement were that the Chinese Eastern Railway Company should be a Chinese company, and only Chinese and Russians should be stockholders; the gauge to be the standard Russian wide gauge—the work to commence within one year and be completed in six, and at the end of eighty years the railroad, and everything connected therewith, to be turned over, without payment, to the Chinese government. The building of the road was begun with great formality and celebration, August 28, 1897, and the east and west track connecting Vladivostok with Central Siberia was rapidly proceeded with.

But now new and more ambitious plans entered the minds of the Russian authorities and engineers. Vladivostok was a port frozen up and cut off from the world three months in the year; manifestly not a proper harbor for so important a road as the Siberian Railroad. Longing eyes were cast on Port Arthur and Dalny in Southern Manchuria, which were ice-free all the year around. The Russian diplomats again set their machinery in motion in Peking, and on March 27, 1898, a treaty was published, the full text of which is as follows:

ARTICLE I. It being necessary for the due protection of her navy in the waters of North China that Russia should possess a station she can defend, the Emperor of China agrees to lease to Russia Port Arthur and Talienwan, together with the adjacent seas, but on the understanding that such lease shall not prejudice China's sovereignty over this territory.

ARTICLE II. The limits of the territory thus leased, for the reasons above stated, as well as the extent of territory, north of Talienwan necessary for the defense of that now leased, and what shall be allowed to be leased, shall be strictly defined, and all details necessary to the carrying out of this treaty be arranged at St. Petersburg by Hse Tas-jen (the Chinese Minister to Russia) as soon as possible after the signature of the present treaty, and embodied in a separate treaty. Once these limits have been determined, all land held by Chinese within such limits, as well as the adjacent waters, shall be held by Russia alone on lease.

ARTICLE III. The duration of the lease shall be twenty-five years from the day this treaty is signed, but may be extended by mutual agreement between Russia and China.

ARTICLE IV. The control of all military forces in the territory leased by Russia, and of all naval forces in the adjacent seas, as well as the civil officials in it, shall be vested in one high Russian official, who shall, however, be designated by some title other than Governor-General (Tsung-tu) or Governor (Hsun-fu.) All Chinese military forces shall, without exception, be withdrawn from the territory, but it shall remain optional with the ordinary Chinese inhabitants either to remain or to go, and no coercion shall be used towards them in this matter. Should they remain, any Chinese charged with a criminal offense shall be handed over to the nearest Chinese official to be dealt with according to Article VIII of the Russo-Chinese treaty of 1896.

ARTICLE V. To the north of the territory leased shall be a zone, the extent of which shall be arranged at St. Petersburg between Hsu Ta-jen and the Russian Foreign Office. Jurisdiction over this zone shall be vested in China, but China may not quarter troops in it except with the previous consent of Russia.

ARTICLE VI. The two nations agree that Port Arthur shall be a naval port for the sole use of Russian and Chinese men-of-war, and be considered as an unopened port so far as the naval and mercantile vessels of other nations are concerned. As regards Talienwan, one portion of the harbor shall be reserved exclusively for Russian and Chinese men-of-war, just like Port Arthur, but the remainder shall be a commercial port freely open to the merchant vessels of all countries.

ARTICLE VII. Port Arthur and Talienwan are the points in the territory most important for Russian military purposes, Russia shall, therefore, be at liberty to erect at her own expense forts and build barracks and provide defenses at such places as she desires.

ARTICLE VIII. China agrees that the procedure sanctioned in 1896 regarding the construction of railroads by the Chinese Eastern Railway Company shall, from the date of the signature of this treaty, be extended so as to include the construction of a branch line to Talienwan, or, if necessary, in view of the interests involved, of a branch line to the most suitable point on the coast between New Chwang and the Yalu River. Further, the agreement entered into in September, 1896, between the Chinese government and the Russo-Chinese bank shall apply with equal strength to this branch line. The direction of this branch line and the places it shall touch shall be arranged between Hsu Ta-jen and the Board of the Eastern Railroads. The construction of this line shall never, however, be made a ground for encroaching on the sovereignty or integrity of China.

ARTICLE IX. This treaty shall take full force and effect from the date it is signed, but the ratifications shall be exchanged at St. Petersburg.

Thus did Russia gain a foothold in Manchuria, and she rapidly built a branch south from Harbin connecting Port Arthur and the Chinese Imperial Railway with the main line of the Siberian Railroad. Japan viewed these advances of Russia with the greatest interest and alarm and even at this early date began to prepare for war with Russia. The Boxer war of 1900 was seized upon by Russia as a pretext for rushing troops into Manchuria, and she soon overran the entire country and Manchuria practically became Russian territory, and so remained until the Russo-Japanese war of 1904-5.

STALKING CARIBOU.

ESKIMOS' POWER OF ENDURANCE—THEIR TWO CAMPS.

The only man who navigates the Arctic Ocean in a gasoline launch is a young Rochesterian who is on his way home from the Bering Straits, says the Rochester Post-Express. Alexander Allen left Rochester some years ago to seek a fortune digging for "color" in Alaska, in the rich goldfields that lie beside and behind Nome, but when a two-years stake did not bring him a fortune he loaded a gasoline launch to the scuppers with everything from Teddy bears to harpoons and started hyperborean trading cruises.

Mr. Allen says that the American Eskimos acquire wonderful powers of endurance, and are possibly the greatest long-distance runners in the world, for they have to trail game to get food for their starving camps in winter and hunt the Far North animals for furs to barter with the traders in summer.

The natives have two camps. When the thaw sets in and the rivers open they come down from the interior to camp in villages at the heads of creeks and inlets of the Arctic coast. But after the few traders who visit them in the open seasons, have returned south to escape the early-forming ice and to miss the rigorous dangers of the inblowing storms which pile the ice packs upon the broken Alaskan coast, the Eskimos again break camp to return inland for hundreds of miles, where they subdivide once more into smaller bodies, each family of which has assigned to it the hunting rights to certain creeks and country.

When Mr. Allen arrived with a well-laden cargo at Killaturruck, shortly after the hunters of the village had returned from inland points distant 500 miles, he saw them engage in games and contests after finishing their bartering. The boys played football and the men ran races. The game consisted in kicking what looked like a baseball made out of raw sealskin and stuffed with caribou hair, and the running track was merely the round of a lake the circumference of which measured between thirty and forty miles. These efforts to play and race while clad in the ordinary warm fur costumes seemed to fatigue neither boys nor men.

The runners acquire their remarkable power of endurance and tenacity through contending with exigencies while hunting in the winter. After they leave the summer camp by the ocean inlet and move a probable 400 miles inland each family is separated and located on a certain section. But in times when food or clothing is scarce a chief hunter has to proceed an even further stage inland, and leaves to others the trapping of smaller although perhaps richer game while he hunts necessaries. The mink, marten, Hudson Bay sable and black-tipped ermine are shot and caught near the family camp, while the chief hunter or best runner goes off by himself to hunt caribou or moose, according to longitude.

Since caribou follow the high rides of the mountains, where the snow is least deep and the chances to find browsing most favorable, the hunter has to follow a course that is usually the coldest. When he crosses a tract where the white moss grows he knows he has found a run game will frequent. Some follow the same runs year after year, and of course in those cases the hunter knows beforehand fairly accurately where he will locate to hunt; but other herds, again, never return to the same feeding grounds, and then the hunter seeks them.

He pitches a lean-to and starts a long and patient watch when he reaches a district he feels the caribou will graze through. During the few daylight hours he does not close an eye or cease warily to scan each recurring sign of game, and for days he will squat and smoke and watch with Indian stoicism and Roman faithfulness.

If meat be scarce and the camp apt to be starved out, and the hunter has been despatched more to replenish the larder than to secure pelts for clothing, he no sooner spies a herd than he prepares to stalk it, indifferent whether the number be ten or 10,000.

The hunter buckles on his snowshoes, sticks a few fish inside his parka shirt, grips his gun and precious spyglass and sets out to approach the herd and follow its trail. He hurriedly leaves his sheltering lean-to intact, and takes only the most meager portion of his already light provisions. The sport then much resembles stalking goat in the Rockies or deer in the highlands of Scotland or chamois in the Hartz Mountains of Bavaria, with the important exception that it is much more strenuous.

He knows that he can run down any herd of reindeer that feeds south of Point Barrow. When he sees the herd stampede on its wild and headless race, he starts off on a dog trot he can keep up longer than the hounds in any American or British pack can hunt fox. He keeps running, on and on, his head bent slightly forward, the weight of his rifle and shoes thrown well up on his shoulders almost onto the nape of his neck. The hunter does not stop, for he can easily track the trail by night. He staves off hunger by munching a few bites of frozen fish, for the Eskimo is not sensitive to serviette niceties, but eats bones, gills, tail and all.

CHAPTER VII.

As Sydney received the bit of lace she owned defeat. Then she gazed, like others, at returning artists smiling, before the curtain. Later, she spoke to Dudley with appealing hope; but his fixed countenance gave out no shade of appreciation. Inscrutable coldness, the prized result of Britain's line, seemed to cheapen her own American emotion. Words which had rushed to her lips were unspoken. Suddenly Miss Bronson caught her hand. The newly-engaged girl smiled through mist.

"Was it not glorious, their love?" Elizabeth whispered.

Sydney could not answer.

"Lucia is perfect; Constantino, divine!" Dr. Frost declared.

Ethelred Dudley risked no opinion. Sydney felt beaten, still, as vaguely informed of her suitor's true estimate of music as she had been before the opera. She glanced over the house, observing married friends, with a sickening sense of life, lived out, by the side of one who would never give in to feeling. As seldom before, the Englishman's well-nourished personality intruded and irritated. Below the box, close to the orchestra, she saw an Italian lad with his dark-eyed sweetheart. The lovers held hands, unconscious of all but each other, now that the curtain swept before the stage. Sydney heard no word, yet knew that Lucia and Edgardo had cast a spell over the pair. Again she felt defrauded, angry. But it was remembered afterward, how talkative and responsive she at once became.

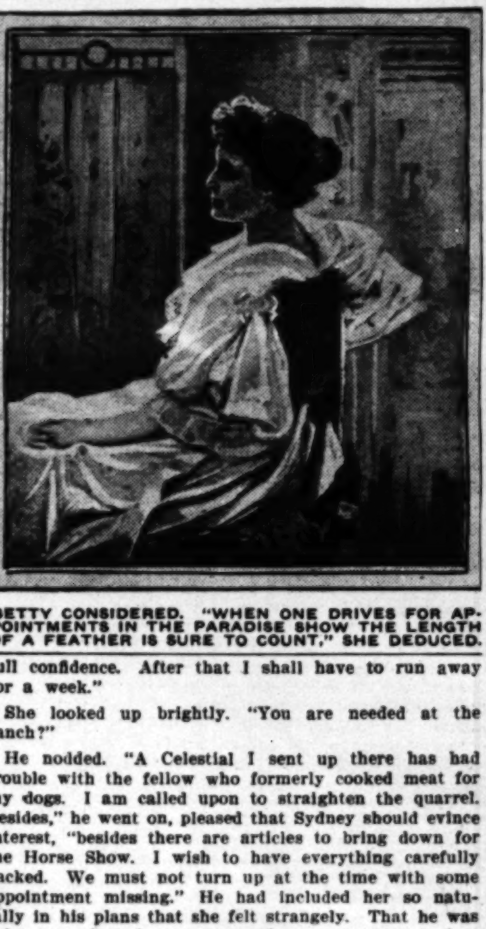
When the curtain rose for the second act, Miss Ainsworth still charmed the party with apt rejoinder. She had never shone to finer advantage. In Dudley's eyes she stood for irreproachable form. It was evident to Betty that time between acts held inducements eclipsing those of the stage, for one man at least. She condoned a preference which sprang from love. Tom thought Dudley dull—she knew better. Cool, British manner pleased the lady who was, herself, full of nerves. The fact that one in love could sit quietly through the sextette which later turned the house wild brought Mrs. Ainsworth fresh interest in the man whom she was beginning to study. It was well that Sydney refused to risk again her suitor's unresponsive glance. While others leaned forward the Englishman maintained erect posture. It seemed as if his features had frozen, in obvious rebuke to those about him. Public emotion meant crudeness to the man, restrained by heavy ancestry. Sydney no longer sought for her lover's pulse. Her own pleasure was now far too keen. She was bound over to Lucia; indifferent to everything but the uplifting moment, perfect acting, heavenly voices! Critical enjoyment, which belongs to the musician, flavored her joy. Betty watched the girl in covert pride. When Rex McArthur and party came in at the end of the second act, Miss Ainsworth failed to see them. Her thoughts were with the operatic score she loved. The men, dining too long, to avoid an arbitrary rule, displayed a valiant front as they entered late, bowing and smiling to friends. Sydney scarcely noticed them. McArthur, always anxious to show superior ease before those who obviously ignored him, came to the box. His glib assertion attested the strength and quality of a stag dinner. Both Mrs. Ainsworth and her husband were relieved when the lifting curtain for the last act induced him to rejoin his party. Every one but Dudley waited expectantly. Lucia's dementia, Edgardo's passionate despair, were yet to come. "Tomba degl'avi mei" would afford Constantino the immortal opportunity of the night. Sydney forgot all but the somber perfection of a story told in song. Lucia's unhallowed bridal swept her imagination; sent her on with the score to silent stretches of Ravenswood. Here Edgardo's marchless grief sank deep. The hearts of all true lovers beat, as it were, with a last great song; the house seemed frenzied! Then the curtain falls. Miss Ainsworth rose from her chair. For her, Constantino had died too well to live again. She did not wish to lessen Art's triumph; would not forget the tragedy of Lammermoor's sweet maid, amid smiles and mannerisms of returning artists. Dudley held her snowy coat. She put it on, with fixed impression that the man was suffering from thirst and hunger. Uplifted and tingling with fine emotion, she was hardly just. Beyond the foyer, every one hastened away for supper. Tom Ainsworth, peering out, saw his carriages in line, and exulted over the luck.

"Hurry the forces, Betty. We shall reach the Grill before the rush," he said too eagerly for his sister's unreasonable mood.

The girl followed slowly by the side of Dudley. Her well-bred training gave no inkling of her thoughts. But later, neither blue points nor champagne dispelled her gnawing sense of unhappiness. A night of splendid music had made no mutual bond for herself and Dudley. Now he was equally interested in the noisy songs, the tinkling instruments of Filipino boys, performing in a sumptuous grill room. Miss Ainsworth told herself that she was justly disappointed in one whom she still expected to marry. It flashed over her that another man would have felt differently. She was rebellious, that the spell of noble opera should be broken so soon. The unhallowed clash of tongues and glasses jarred, when she again remembered that the other man had gone out of her life. She had turned him away. He seemed half-reconciled to a disappointment which failed to unnerve him for work. In her heart Sydney felt piqued. She ate supper, listening, like one in a dream, to the light remarks of friends; responding now and again in flashes, turned on and off, to suit requirements of social life. Still, an undercurrent ran beneath her apparent ease. While she talked with those about her, she was thinking hard; trying to decide her risk in accepting Ethelred Dudley.

Her stepmother's pinched, grasping, squirrel-like countenance appeared to rise in the froth of champagne; as in life, the face implored a stepdaughter to consider her father's inadequate bank account. Tonight the woman's chronic dissatisfaction, her ignoble hope for three daughters who must soon enter society, without either doweries or misleading costumes, was suddenly tragic. Perhaps, after all, the stepmother was right; perhaps happiness might be secured through ease and plenty. Miss Ainsworth permitted the waiter to refill her glass. The indulgence displeased her brother. The girl felt his intangible check, and merely held the bubbling wine to her lips. Sydney was not among the class of society girls and women who conduct a season's campaign to its bitter end, with the help of cocktails. She was in reality a different young person from the one which she often reflected. Her beauty ranked her in the challenging line for conquest. The world had established her place. But she was often unsatisfied; strangely humble before girls who were plain. She longed for happiness, yet feared to discredit the spirit of an age deciding for money above all else. Sydney had reached a point where the first illusions of girlhood begin to fail. That she would not permit herself to fall blindly in love, was a misfortune engendered by circumstances. Tonight she went from the grill to the waiting carriage, evolving thoughts which were mutinous; but, like one on the verge of rebellion, she smiled. At her brother's door, Dudley released her hand with marked reluctance.

"Tomorrow afternoon I will come—if I may," he entreated. "A few more lessons in driving will give you full confidence. After that I shall have to run away for a week."



BETTY CONSIDERED. "WHEN ONE DRIVES FOR APPOINTMENTS IN THE PARADISE SHOW THE LENGTH OF A FEATHER IS SURE TO COUNT," SHE DEDUCED.

She looked up brightly. "You are needed at the ranch?"

He nodded. "A Celestial I sent up there has had trouble with the fellow who formerly cooked meat for my dogs. I am called upon to straighten the quarrel. Besides," he went on, pleased that Sydney should evince interest, "besides there are articles to bring down for the Horse Show. I wish to have everything carefully packed. We must not turn up at the time with some appointment missing." He had included her so naturally in his plans that she felt strangely. That he was going away in a day or so gave her new courage to face intervening time.

"I can drive with you tomorrow at 2," she arranged quite calmly.

Dudley went off rejoicing in Miss Ainsworth's true English manner.

But the girl was now miserably unsettled around the heart. The hope which she indulged before the opera had failed. Dudley's unresponsiveness was all too plain. That he should flame at the end of the evening, soften because an ordeal had been passed, roused her anger. She fell into light slumber, dreaming of interminable drives upon roads that led on and on to no definite point. She seemed to be always moving, without chance to rest. Then persistent thrashing on the glass of the window sent her bounding from bed. A great moth, pounding out its life, flew against her face. She tossed it away, and again it attacked the pane. The insect's panic seemed the sequel to her dream as she lifted the sash and sent the unhappy little creature adrift.

CHAPTER VIII.

Sydney's introspection resulted in a headache. Then she rose up proudly to fix her mind on costumes to be worn at the Paradise Horse Show. For the tandem cart she had selected a tailored effect in pale gray. For the still more gala occasion, when she should drive a splendid pair, in a park phaeton, for appointments, she wisely chose an imported costume of heavy lavender linen, enriched with Irish lace. The spring-like color appealed to her perfect taste, as she put on for the second time the well-modeled skirt and dashing coat, which cut seriously into a month's bank account.

"There is no hope of economizing on my hat!" she bemoaned, in view of the violet dream, just sent in by her milliner. The dark head swayed critically before the mirror.

"Nothing could be more becoming!" declared Tom, whose sense of fitness was infallible.

"But the price! I really must not pay it," deplored.

Betty considered. "When one drives for ments in the Paradise show, the length of a sure to count," she deduced. "Besides, the hat made for your costume."

Sydney looked into the mirror. Her sister the contour of the cheek, just escaping the plumes. "It all does go well together," Miss owned. "Bertha Marshall will doubtless think took her kind advice when I selected the color." head rose while the clear undercutting of her fined more closely a charming throat. "Well, I say I shall have to be extravagant, then economize something else."

"One is young but once," said Betty.

Sydney took off the hat. "Now, Mrs. Bradford," ordered, like one convinced of her own style, "you pin under half an inch from the bottom of this wish to prove to my sister that I am not a crank." turned to the dressmaker, called in for the day. certainly see that the present effect is not chic wish the line of the skirt to clear sharply; otherwise realize my petticoats—I feel self-conscious. The knelt at the girl's feet, with a mouth full of pins.

"As usual I give in to superior judgment," said going from the room. Mrs. Bradford's devotion to ney Ainsworth amounted to humble passion. When that young person summoned her, she put aside other customers. Today, she had sacrificed herself the cause of the Horse Show, explaining when she that otherwise she might have stayed at home.

"My head has ached for three days," she confessed disconsolately that Miss Ainsworth begged her to pone work. Mrs. Bradford refused to give up to she termed "only passing faintness." "Don't about me," she insisted. "It won't take long under the edge; if I feel dizzy, I can stop."

The ordeal of stooping was not seriously by the frail creature. Her large eyes mirrored courage and hopelessness, as she bent at Miss worth's feet. The woman was miserable. through tears that smarted, all unshed, she felt her trous way around the skirt. Suddenly the row of ing pins danced like swords; everything became She worked on. When she reached the last inch went into the linen with an uncertain jab. She finished.

"It hangs much better," said Sydney, revolving the mirror. "The trifle you have turned up has a wonderful difference. To me, superfluous length a woman's short skirt is as disastrous as the inch to a man's nose." She looked down at the maker, who invariably endorsed her views. Mrs. ford was deathly pale. She hugged her knees, to rise.

"O!" cried the girl, "you are ill. Why did you tell me as you promised?"

Mrs. Bradford tried to smile. Sydney felt her needle-pricked fingers, as she helped her to the "Now please lie down," she entreated. "I will some brandy." She ran to her brother's room for flask. When she returned the woman leaned against a pillow. Her face was tragic.

"Take this brandy," the girl commanded. lie down."

"I will be all right in a minute," the patient "I have been having these spells—this one is worse usual." Her pallor gradually changed to ashen Sydney poured out brandy. Mrs. Bradford "There's no use giving me any more. I think I am enough to go home; I can carry the skirt with me." rose fiercely.

"But you are in no condition to walk. I will you in my electric machine," Miss Ainsworth "There is no haste about the skirt—do not think again. You are fit only for bed." It was not in girl's nature to pry into the affairs of others; felt certain that the cause of Mrs. Bradford's was due to some late escapade of her only a girl who constantly distressed the hard- mother. If Mrs. Bradford chose to speak of must of course listen. But Sydney shrank from a confidence which seemed beyond her power to Then the wish to ignore an unpleasant matter der to tugging consciousness of suspended Plainly, she must help this woman. She saw her ger, as she took off her work apron.

"Put on your jacket, and here is your hat," gently. "You must take a little more brandy we start."

Mrs. Bradford shook her head. "No, thank feel much better." She went forward to the Sydney walking by her side. In the open air Bradford seemed herself.

"How good of you to take me home!" when Miss Ainsworth helped her into an electric toria. "I haven't had a pleasure ride for nearly She folded her hands in her lap. "How beautifully goes—I never was in an electric before."

"Then you shall enjoy yourself—that is, if able to."

The woman's face brightened. "I would love to little way out of town, just to see the green on the and the wild flowers growing along the roadside," confessed.

Miss Ainsworth turned the machine east. "We'll a spin into the real country," she said.

Soft air played against their faces. The leaned back in luxury. "How beautiful the spring is!" she exclaimed. "Just see the green over everything. And the hills below the Did they ever look softer?" Sydney never before, her little dressmaker's own way the woman was an artist.

"The heavy rains have made the season answered. "I think the poppies are out Some day when you are stronger, I will "Perhaps we can go to the foothills after wild flowers." The girl spoke so kindly that Mrs. Bradford began to sob in her hands. Sydney pretended not to see the welling grief. Finally when they had left town, to skirt the foothills, in protracted silence, she braced for an ordeal.

"Won't you tell me about it? Perhaps I may help—make you see that things are not so bad," she gently pressed.

Mrs. Bradford seized at sympathy. "I think it would help me to tell you," she choked. "I know that I can trust you. And you understand about Sadie's longing for a good time. I've been too indulgent with her. But I was afraid to keep her too strict. I thought she'd get [illegible] away from from me—and she's all I have." The mother's eyes were now tearless. Her voice seemed [illegible] with hardened sobs. "Sadie was gone the most of the whole night," she faltered. "I didn't know where she was—what had happened to her, until after 2 in the morning." Emotion stopped the story; presently she went on. "You know Sadie would sing in the chorus of the May Flower troop? I was afraid from the first that she might get wild. I never thought of disgrace. Sadie always seemed able to look out for herself." Mrs. Bradford pressed her hands nervously. "She would have life—craved excitement—something outside of work. She never liked typewriting. Dancing and singing pleased her best of anything. And Sadie is pretty! I've often wished she was plain," the mother went on. "When I began to suspect the child of making up to fast young men, I tried my best to get her to quit the theater. But she denied everything—pretended to be very much hurt. She said she'd signed up with the manager and that it would be dishonorable to leave him. No matter how tired I was, I went to the theater to fetch her home. She used to laugh about my anxiety, and I [illegible] and let her come with two nice girls who live near us. One night she didn't come." Miss Ainsworth felt the climax. "When it got to be past midnight, I thought I would go crazy." Mrs. Bradford [illegible] went on. "I was beside myself with dread. The theater was completely dark when I got down there. I hated to go to the police. I couldn't bear to have my girl's wildness get into the papers. Then I thought of old Dr. McArthur. You know he always helps everyone in trouble. It seemed as if God spoke right out of the sky. I didn't hesitate a minute until I reached the doctor's house. It was late, but I saw [illegible] automobiles. Just as I stepped on to the porch the door opened and six or seven gentlemen came out. There had been some kind of a charity meeting. I was just in time. It didn't take me long to tell my trouble. Before I was through, the doctor hurried me into his automobile. He jumped in, with a man who offered to help us. As soon as I heard the voice, I knew the Episcopal minister was in the front seat—the one every one likes."

Miss Ainsworth sat transfixed. Would John Knight ever come to intrude upon her life? She pressed the woman's hand. "As soon as we got a private detective we began the hunt for Sadie. We went ever so many places. We put in such terrible two hours!"

"And you found her?" Sydney interposed.

"Yes. At early morning we took her from the man who might have ruined her."

"She was safe!" the girl exulted.

Mrs. Bradford bowed her head. "Yes, she was safe. But the shame of finding her in such a place! With a man who did not care about her good name! Dr. McArthur seemed to feel as badly as I did. His kind old face was drenched with tears; he acted as if his own child had done wrong."

"The man—did you see him?"

"No," answered Mrs. Bradford. "He got out of the room as soon as the detective demanded Sadie. I saw him jump into an automobile and ride off. In a few minutes Sadie came out between Dr. McArthur and Mr. Knight."

"I think you might be glad not to know the fellow's name," Sydney comforted.

"Yes," said Mrs. Bradford. "Sadie won't tell. [illegible] way. And now she's been sent to the country to stay for a while with friends of Dr. McArthur who promise to take care of her. I believe she was sorry. She cried real hard—said she'd be good, when she bade me good-by." The woman looked down again. Two burning spots shone on her cheeks.

Miss Ainsworth spun the machine onward. She could find no comfort to fit the situation. It seemed more kind to respect the mother's heartbreaking silence. The story was not an unusual one; it had simply happened. Sydney might have read a similar sickening tale any day in the morning paper. But this was different! The cudgel against crime had been wielded by the one man—she would not finish. The machine sped on. Mountain air fanned the girl's burning cheeks. The woman by her side construed a wordless sympathy.

"You're so good—so good!" she faltered. "It has helped me to tell you. Yesterday I thought I would die bearing everything alone."

A meadow lark on the roadside gushed gladness, then was still. From afar, the purple range bent down. Outlined against a sky of spring flashed hope. Mrs. Bradford dried her eyes. "Mr. Knight believes Sadie will be good—and so do I," she owned with bright, new hope.

DOWN TO THE MINUTE.

The author laid a manuscript upon the great publisher's desk, saying with enthusiasm:

"Here's a good automobile story, sir."

The publisher nodded and said tersely:

"Tell the author, Frederic, that if he will change the automobile to an aëroplane, we'll bring the volume out in time to catch the Easter holiday trade."

Wanted—An Ideal.

How the Girl Found It in a Blessed Reality.

By a Special Contributor.

"ARE you glad to be home again? Of course that is the conventional question, but perhaps you will forgive my being trite until I get adjusted to talking with you face to face once more instead of—concealing my thoughts with pen and ink."

"You are not talking 'face to face' now that you have the chance! You have been staring the fire out of countenance ever since you sat down on that least hospitable chair in the room. Straight-backed chairs have no business in libraries. That one has sneaked in during my absence, and I shall see that it is forcibly ejected tomorrow. Please sit here in your old 'Snorey Hollow' favorite and try to look less like company."

There was an undercurrent of tremulousness below the light words, which betrayed itself by little ripples upon the surface of the girl's gaiety. In her crimson house-gown her gipsey prettiness glowed like a deep-hued carnation, spicily sweet.

"There, you look natural now. I could almost believe that this is a certain September night three years ago if only Helen and Jim and Sue were draped around characteristically over the davenport and the chimney seat. Do you remember——?" she broke off with an odd, disjointed laugh—"but of course you do. Why don't you ask me to tell about my travels?"

The young man with the heavy, strong jaw and none too regular features which appeared to have been pounded rather than chiseled into shape, raised his head slowly, almost reluctantly, one would have said, and looked at the girlish, red-gowned figure on the other side of the hearth. He did not intend that his glance should rest like a kiss upon the piquant, questioning face, but that is what it did, so, suddenly shading her eyes with a slim brown hand that trembled a little, the girl took her turn at studying the fire.

"Your little scrappy notes have kept me posted as to your junketings," said the man, leaning forward with elbows on knees, unable to withdraw his obstinate gray eyes now they had once fastened upon the object for which they had worn a hungry look for many a long day. "But you might tell me now a little about yourself, about how things have changed you, made you happy or sad, how your study has progressed, or—anything you've a mind to tell me so long as it is strictly about you. Perhaps you will remember I have been interested in the subject for—well, hard onto twenty years now, and I don't like to be put off with—outside information."

"Now, Bob! that isn't fair. I haven't put you off, have I? And I'm not changed—not a bit about most things, at least about you—and—everybody. Well, perhaps that isn't quite true. Of course, I am some changed. We have to change if we grow, don't we? And I know I have grown a good deal in some ways. I have learned for one thing that home is the best place for me. It really is so sweet to have a home to come back to, Bob. And I have learned that I am not a genius, nor even—yes, I can openly admit it—nor even a student of quite average ability as they count things over there. Don't you see how I've changed when I can say that and not feel rebellious? Then I have discovered all for my own insignificant self that the experience of sages can't teach—that the best good sometimes comes to one through the keenest disappointments. You can't guess how much happier I am since I decided to give up trying to be a concert artiste, just take one last good long look at old-world things in general, and then come home to settle down and be a good little hausfrau for—for father. Dear father! I never realized before that he isn't a young man any more. Does it seem to you that he has aged in these three years that I have been away? I'm afraid that I have been very selfish to leave him just to Aunt Martha."

"Your father couldn't help missing you, Pussy, any more than some of the rest of us could, but he was happy in believing that he made you happy. But how about all the magnificent people you have met—the ducal coronets tossed at your feet, the German poets and music masters who were going to give you such draughts of 'atmosphere'? Is there anybody over there you think about right quick when some one quotes a bit of poetry or sings a sweethearty kind of a song? Out with it, if there is. I want to know the worst."

"Now, Bob, don't tease! Of course I was visionary when I went away. I hugged my little ambitions and I suppose my foolish head was somewhat turned at first by the rather interesting attentions people showed me. You remember that last night we were all sitting around in here, when we fell to talking of ideals. Sue said mine would be 'tall and dark and passionate-looking' or some such bread-and-milk nonsense, and Jim wagered I'd find him 'somewhere under the lindens.' Well, I remember I had a childish notion myself that I could be successfully wooed in German poetry if I could in anything, but that was the very first of my illusions to fall off its pedestal and get its neck broken. We met the cream of the cream, you know, wherever we stayed in Germany, because of the Van Haupts's semi-royal connections, but it didn't take even unsophisticated me long to learn that a scholarly American college professor—there were a good many floating around, you know, taking care of damaged football heroes abroad for their health—is worth a bushel of petty, puffy-faced dukes or counts or scarred-up, beery students or swaggering officers; and Bob—the poets and most of the musicians were not even tidy about their finger nails. Why, there was one pianist who composed an exquisite little nocturne all for me, and truly, when he came to play it for me, I had to sit on the opposite side of the room to keep the effect from being hopelessly shattered. But I told you about the people as I wrote, didn't I? It seems to me it's your turn to do a little telling. If my letters have been scrappy, yours have been—impressionistic. Isn't that a polite term? Now give me a few details."

Rosy with the earnestness of her own talking, the girl relaxed and sank back into the shadows of her deep chair. Her companion rose and walked to the fireplace, where he rested his elbow on the broad mantel shelf.

"'Tall and dark and passionate-looking,'" he repeated, drumming absently with his finger tips on the polished wood. "Then your ideal didn't turn up anywhere on your travels, Pussy? Didn't he paddle your gondola in Venice or show you the Coliseum by moonlight? If he failed to improve his opportunity to tow you up the Matterhorn, it seems to me he showed remarkably poor judgment." He turned and faced her suddenly. "No, I purposely kept myself out of my letters because there was only one thing I could write to you about myself. Whatever else I tried to write still showed the one great thing through it as clear as crystal—and I didn't want to interfere with anybody's ideals. I wanted you to meet yours if he was anywhere around, for your ideal would be a man any girl ought to be proud to marry. But you must tell me tonight, little girl, what ultimate chance a plain fellow who couldn't be dark and passionate-looking to save his life is going to stand with the girl who has meant daylight to him for a good deal longer than the past three years. I have lived through a century of uncertainty, but I'm at the end of my rope now you have come back. It's all I can do to hold on tonight." He came over and stood by her chair, laying one hand on the dark, bent head. "I'm not ideal in any way—heaven knows I wish I were, for your sake, dear. But I don't believe an ideal could ever love you any harder."

The head with its cloud of dusky hair bent lower under his touch, and a still small voice issued presently from the depths of the chair.

"Bob—please come down!"

Bob came. He almost embraced the arm chair in his haste, but he did not embrace its occupant. He knelt beside her instead, and held the brown hands very tightly as he went on:

"Do you honestly think, Pussy dearest—dearest—that you could put up with me for always? Always is a long time, you know, and shouldn't want to think you ever harked back to any dream lover when you belonged to me. I am only a man, and a real man is bound to be selfish, dear, when it comes to the girl he loves."

"Oh Bob! You break my heart! There never was any one but you, and if that were the only thing all my traipsing around the world has taught me, it would be worth the price. Now you are acting like a dear, rational fellow. Oh Bob, I used to get so tired for you away off there! Your letters made me afraid you were not caring the way I was so used to having you care—and ideals can't put their arms around you and rest you, and comfort you when you are blue."

"Bless your dear heart, Pussy! You can never understand, no matter how you try, what it means for me to hear you talk that way. I know I'm a better man now for having had a girl like you to love and hope for and wait for. Maybe, if you will help me out with a few more things like that—and this—I can develop into some sort of an ideal for you yet. Are you game for it, dear?"

"Oh no! Bob—no. I want you to stay just as you are—you are so blessedly real!"

NEETA MARQUIS

EBB-TIDE.

As the waves beat
With low perpetual roar
Against some shingly shore,
So through the long gray street
The tide of living flows.
But when day goes,
And shadows fall
O'er tower and blacken'd wall,
Then the full flood recedes and silentness
Comes to possess.

Dim ships beside the quay
Sleep restfully,
Save where a glare of light
Carries their lading through the night,
In rings of toil and sound,
By darkness hemmed around.
Rare are the feet
That strike the slumbering street;
In square and mart
We feel no more the city's pulsing heart,
But all is quiet as the dead
Who lie apart
From the day's toil in which they once had share,
The night's surcease of care.
As crags and caves
Have rest from fretting waves,
So from this city gray
The tide of fretful life hath ebbed away.

ARMOR-PLATED WHALES.

The remarkable fact that the earliest known ancestor, or primitive type, of the modern whale bore heavy armor on its back, in the form of strong, bony plates, has recently been set forth by the German paleontologist, Dr. Abel. The plates occasionally found associated with the remains of the primeval form of whale have generally been regarded as having belonged to gigantic turtles, but the German investigations show that they were part of the skeleton itself. They resemble in their character the impenetrable bony shells of the huge glyptodonts that formerly inhabited South America.

The suggestion is made that at the time when they carried armor whales were amphibious creatures, living on the coasts and needing special protection from breakers and from sharks.—[Unidentified.

"The Old Lady."

THE MIDST OF PLENTY SHE LONGS FOR JOYS OF POVERTY.

"MAGGIE," asked the Old Lady, "where's the washboard at? Sure, an' I can't be after findin' it anywheres."

To the Old Lady's homesick heart it was the sweetest picture in the world.

. . . .

Mrs. O'Shea had joined the Monday Afternoon Literary Club, and one day she received an invitation from the woman who chanced to be hostess that day to come to lunch and remain for the club meeting in the afternoon. Mrs. O'Shea's quality of sweet heartiness had, in spite of her lack of culture, won for her many friends among the clubwomen. She accepted the invitation joyfully. Surely she was "getting on" when Mrs. Russell Randolph invited her to luncheon!

When she returned at night, flushed and radiant with her social success, a sad blow awaited her. It was Birdie who delivered it.

"What do you think, mamma—something perfectly dreadful that grandma did! Just as soon as you had gone today she changed her dress and put on the funniest old thing—I didn't know she had it—and went to washing—actually washing! Annie says she was as happy as a lark, singing away and laughing to herself like anything. And she had to climb up on a box to reach the clothes lines. Annie was so afraid she'd fall. And when I came home from school this afternoon there was a line full, and oh, but they did look nice and white! There were some of my clothes, and some of Larry's, and some of her's that she'd been saving up—mercy knows how long. And now she's taken them in and dampened them all and rolled them up in a clean sheet. I suppose she'll iron tomorrow."

Birdie paused for breath, and her mother sank weakly into a chair. Laughter, in spite of her vexation, had overcome her.

"The old darlin'!" she said, with tears of mirth in her eyes. "Sure an' she came up with me that time, didn't she? The old dear! the old dear! Well, whatever the neighbors think or say, I don't care a cent. She's the dearest old woman in the world, God bless her!"

The Old Lady walked into the room looking very innocent and sedate in her neat black dress and little white apron.

Her daughter tried to look severe, but failed. "Mother dear," she cried, still laughing, "ye had a glorious time for once, annyway, didn't ye? When the kitten's away the old cat will play. Well, I'll forgive ye, ye sly old fox. Me off to the Literary, an' you at home standin' on a box in the back yard hangin' out clothes! The very audacity of it!"

She caught up the little Old Lady in a warm embrace. "What'll Dannie say? What'll he be after sayin' now, ye old sly boots?"

The Old Lady laughed too, in her daughter's warm arms.

"Sure, darlin'," she said, "I haven't been so happy an' contint in many a long day. Not since we lived down on Shamrock street an' took in washin'. Sure an' labor's better nor idleness for one that's not used to lit'ry things an' sich."

. . . .

One terrible morning Dannie came home with despair in his face. He looked around at his fine house with its gaudy furnishings—the pictures, chairs, rugs, the lace curtains, the gay china—with a dazed look in his honest blue eyes.

His wife ran to him and enfolded him in her strong arms.

"Dannie, Dannie!" she pleaded, "what is it? What's happened? Ye look so strange and wild-like. Have ye lost the money, Dannie? Tell me, are we poor again?"

Dannie freed himself from her arms and sank into the Morris chair, as limp as a rag.

He lifted to hers a face of misery. He tried to speak, but his lips seemed stiffened. He could only look at her with his honest eyes, like a hurt and wounded dog.

She sank on her knees beside him. "Tell me the worst, Dannie darlin'. I can bear it. If ye've done nothin' dishonest—an' ye couldn't, Dannie, ye couldn't—I can bear annything—annything. Is it that the money's gone an' we're poor again? Is it, Dannie darlin'?"

His head fell on her ample shoulder, and she mothered him with soft caressing words and loving arms.

"There, there, now, don't fret. If the money's gone we'll be happy annyway. We'll go back to Shamrock street to the old brown house, an' Birdie shall know what useful work is, like her mother an' her granny did before her. An' Larry shall learn the trade an' work wid you at brick layin'. An' mother an' me will wash again like we used to. Only tell me, Dannie dear."

The man was crying now, softly, helplessly, on his wife's shoulder. "I thought 'twas safe enough," he said. "I wint on Jimmie Lannigan's bond, an' he's skipped. An' there was a speculation, an' it's gone up. An' we're poor again, God forgive me. Whatever will poor Birdie do with the piano sold an' carted away? An' Larry, with his sports an' pastimes an' his high school? An' you, Maggie, with your Literary? Oh, God forgive me for a poor weak fool! I niver thought 'twould come to this."

She was her mother's own daughter. With soothing words she comforted him, and with kind arms she held him, and it was thus the Old Lady found them when she came in.

"Mother, darlin'," cried Maggie, "we're poor again, bless God, an' you an' me can bind over the wash tubs as much as we like. An' Birdie shall learn to work, an' Larry, too, an' Dannie need niver blame himself for bringin' us down to where we belong. The little old house, mother, down on Shamrock street, an' the snow-white clothes flappin' an' flyin' against the blue sky. An' our cosy cup of tay, mother, wid old Kate Flannigan droppin' in like she used to do. An' Dannie comin' home at night in his dirty clothes, God bless him, an' washin' at the binch by the back door an' dryin' hisself on the roller towel. An you an' me in the kitchen, mother, a-dishin' up the 'taties an' pork an' takin' the nice brown biscuits from the oven."

It was Maggie's turn now to cry, and Dannie's turn to pat her shoulder and laugh through his tears.

"Well, thin," he said, "if ye've been as homesick as that all this time we've been rich, 'tis high time we was poor again. An' by Saint Patrick! I'll enjoy puttin' on me overalls again, for 'tis me that can earn me $5 a day at me trade. An' why in the world you an' the Old Lady should go to talkin' about takin' in washin' again I'm blamed if I can figure out at all at all!"

The Old Lady came and stood on the other side of Dannie. She even sat down on the arm of the green velvet Morris chair and reached a withered old hand across to Maggie's bright hair.

"Darlin'," she said, the mother note in her voice throbbing with love, "was ye homesick, too, for Shamrock street, an' the little old house, an' the clothes lines, an' the ould neighbors droppin' in for a cup of tay an' a dish of gossip?"

Maggie lifted a wet face to the faithful old one on Dannie's other side.

"Ye old darlin'," she said, "I was homesick all the time, but 'twould niver do to own it. I just had to live up to the money an' make a bluff at likin' it. 'Twill not punish me to lave the Lit'ry Club, for all thim women knows a sight more nor I do, an' they know it an' I know it. So what's the use of pretendin'? One can't be anny more than just comfortable-like whether we be rich or poor. An' here comes the childer. Birdie, come here an' kiss your daddy, an' Larry come too. Daddy's wint an' made us poor again, an' we're goin' to be the happiest family on Shamrock street. There now. I'll run an' make some tay this minute, an' we'll all be happy an' contint together."

The Old Lady looked after her with proud eyes.

"Me own Maggie!" she said to herself. "Sure she's a child after me own heart, bless God!"

ONE WAY TO GET A HORSE UP.

ILLUSTRATED TO A CROWD IN BROADWAY BY A MAN WHO SPOKE NO ENGLISH.

[New York Sun:] This was about the most extraordinary thing ever seen in the way of getting up a horse that had fallen.

A man who spoke no English was driving a delivery wagon with a single horse east along Howard street, and just east of Broadway, on the south side of Howard street, on a particularly slippery spot, the horse, smooth-shod, went down. And the driver didn't try to get him up there, but loosened up the harness and backed his wagon away and then got the harness off the horse altogether.

Then he spread a blanket on the slippery pavement to give the horse a foothold. But the horse didn't seem to get his hoofs on the blanket, and that plan didn't work. Then the driver sprang on the people that had gathered around something that not even the oldest Broadway policeman had ever seen done before.

The horse lay crosswise of Howard street with his back toward Broadway and his legs and feet toward the east. Right at the horse's back as he lay toward Broadway there was an area of a dozen or so square feet where somebody had spread ashes, and what this driver now set out to do was to turn this horse over and bring his feet to where they could get a grip on that ash-covered spot, and he did it.

He tied the driving lines by one end around the horse's forelegs down by the hoofs, and then he tied a rope around the horse's hind legs in like manner, and what he was going to do was to get men to help him pull on these lines and help him turn the horse over, and when they had got the horse's feet lifted up enough so that the lines would draw across his body, men began to pull on them.

By this time a hundred or two people had gathered in a crescent formation around this unusual spectacle presented by an attempt to turn a horse over by hauling on ropes attached to his legs, and the opening between the two horns of this crescent of spectators, on the side where the men were pulling, was a mounted policeman, who found it hard work to keep a straight face, as in fact did everybody else.

But the policeman was on the job for all that. The two strings of men pulling were not pulling very evenly; they were getting the horse's forelegs over rather faster than they did his hind legs, to which the rope was made fast.

"Some more of you get on that rope!" said the policeman, and more men promptly did, and so they evened the pull, with the horse gradually turning as his feet went up slowly in the air.

And the interested spectators crowded in now, off the sidewalk into the street, and then the mounted man waved 'em back, to keep 'em out of the street and out of the way.

And meanwhile the men on the ropes were pulling gently but steadily, and the first thing you knew they had the horse turned over and lying on his other side, and now with his legs and feet toward Broadway and that little space of ash-strewn street pavement. And here it was different.

When the horse set his hoofs on this they did not slide out from under him, and when he tried this time to get up, the crowd looked on silently, and in a minute the horse, dusty-backed, to be sure, where he had been turned over, was up all right. And then the crowd laughed and cheered.

The young man who drove this outfit spoke no English, but he had shown Broadway something new in how to get a fallen horse on his feet.

AT THE OPERA.

"What was the matter with Signor Tenori? He sang the drinking song wretchedly."

"Yes, I think he had been drinking."

It was Charles M. Schwab's spirited singing of Scotch ballads that first drew Andrew Carnegie's attention to him.

GLIMPSES OF GREAT METROPOLIS AS SEEN BY A PASADENAN.

By a Special Contributor.

LONDON, to an American who sees it for the first time, is New York glorified a thousand fold. It is a great pageant from beginning to end, whether you are looking from Hyde Park corner down Piccadilly, which terminates in Piccadilly Circus, or witnessing the operation of a change of guards at St. James's Palace, where resides the commander-in-chief of the army. Every morning at about 10 o'clock the forty guards are relieved by another troop, presenting a brilliant show of soldiers wonderfully caparisoned in red and gold practicing their grand maneuvers.

Buckingham Palace, when the King is in residence, is also the background for a complimentary scene each morning when bands of Grenadiers, Scots or Irish guards play in the fore court.

HORLICK'S MALTED MILK
London motor bus.

The London 'buses are almost as gay as London soldiers. So completely covered are they with multicolored advertisements of every patent food and medicine under the sun that one is in doubt when he hails one whether he is about to take a ride to Chelsea or Putney—as the case may be—or a dose of Emulsion, or Malted Milk.

The most fortunate district in all London for the tourist to be situated in is Charing Cross—"the center of things," Ben Johnson called it—rare old Ben Johnson, some of the tourists say. Benjamin Franklin, too, must have thought it a point of vantage, for here he lived in Craven street in a "little hotel," which still opens its doors hospitably to the public. It is from the "top" of this same Craven street on the Strand that the 'buses radiate like great beetles to all parts of the city. If you are wise you will sit on top near the driver, who will give you much information and, occasionally, some misinformation. One of these drivers pointed out a mansion from the top of a victoria 'bus one morning and remarked to his Yankee passengers: "There's the home of one of your great statesmen, J. Pierpont Morgan." The prophet sometimes gets more than his share of honor outside his own country. Two horses seem scarce equal to pulling these huge vehicles, but the lover of animals has no occasion for worry. The London 'bus horses are the finest-cared-for creatures on earth, and are driven on an average of only two hours per day. Across the top of the front seat, outside, is printed: "We speak for those that cannot speak for themselves," of course referring to the horses. One wishes, in Paris, frequently when failing to be understood, that some such epithet were to be found on public conveyances referring to humans. The drivers are masters of the art of driving, and a street accident is almost unknown.

The streets of London, in spite of the congestion in some districts, are easier to cross than those of Los Angeles, because of the protection of pedestrians by the police. The police system here is the most remarkable in the world, and commissions have been sent from the United States, as well as from other countries, to study it. Each policeman is responsible for his district. He must know that it is clean, well lighted, and, further, he must keep one eye on every cab and 'bus driver to be certain that he is not intoxicated, and for all this he receives the magnificent sum of $6 a week.

There is today much of the old-time picturesqueness in London life. Lamp lighters, as in the days of Little Joe, go about at nightfall attending to the lighting of small streets; pretty donkey carts piled high with bright vegetables, after the manner of old prints, may be seen daily in Pall Mall or Piccadilly; the milkman calls cheerily from door to door in the early morning, measuring milk from cans of brass polished like the proverbial handle of the big front door in "Pinafore." Lads from 12 to 16 years of age sell flowers at your door on pleasant mornings, singing in their sweet boyish voices to attract attention, and hard, indeed, is the heart that can say them nay:

> "Come all ye young ladies, don't ye delay,
> My lavender's fresh for you once every day.
> You buy it once you buy it twice;
> It makes your clothes smell sweet and nice."

The sprinkling wagons of this great city are enough to make one shed tears of laughter, being the most lilliputian affairs imaginable—about the size of four of our ordinary apple boxes set on wheels. The driver lashes his horses lazily through the streets, apparently with unlimited leisure at his command, and yet the streets are as well sprinkled as our own. That is the delicious thing about London—no haste in evidence still everything is well accomplished in good time.

There is one important exhibition always to be seen in London, that of good manners. This is particularly noticeable in the shops, which are covered with carpets, and presided over by women wearing trailing black gowns, and men in obsequious Prince Alberts. They will produce no end of things for your unbuying gratification and then thank you in the end. To visit the establishments of Redfern or Worth is almost as good as being presented at court as far as the parading of grand manners and apparel is concerned.

Dentists' offices—which are few—display the most laughable of signs. You see frequently: "English and American teeth supplied here," and in most of the antique shop windows false teeth are to be seen among the salable wares threatening by their proximity to bite into Sheffield trays, or lose some of their number by being nipped from their gums by rare old snuffers.

Those who have been fortunate enough to dine at the Cheshire Cheese, after the fashion of Samuel Johnson and his associates, on toasted cheese or pigeon pie, are fortunate, for it is likely to be torn down in the near future. The wonder is that there has been room for it so long. Perhaps it is because it is so carefully hidden and takes up so little room. You enter a narrow passageway off Fleet street and are in Wine Office Court—a wee little courtyard glass-inclosed. You pass the bar where pretty girls with cheeks like apples dispense ale from the most fascinating stone mugs, and a step further takes you into the coffee-room. Being early, you will probably choose the worn bench by the chimney breast, designated as Dr. Johnson's favorite seat, over which hangs his portrait. It is interesting to note that the only other ornaments in the room are a small picture, in the opposite corner, of our own lamented McKinley and a framed poem of Markham's—"The Man With the Hoe." Here you may scuff your feet in the sawdust, while you try to recall the conversation of those convivial spirits who dined so many years ahead of you, and be proud to do so, since the King of [illegible] land is reputed to dine here occasionally, and it is a shrine for literary pilgrims from all parts of the [illegible] The room is absolutely unchanged, and you must [illegible] Wednesday if you would have pigeon pie, and be presented with a pipe, the fac simile of the one [illegible] the great philosopher.

One goes first, naturally, in any great city, to the things they have associated it with longest; in London, to Westminster Abbey, St. Paul's Cathedral, the Houses of Parliament and the Tower of London. There is, to be sure, a certain familiarity about all of them, but in every instance you will receive some new impression [illegible] foreign to the ones you have so long treasured. You know how the Tower looks, or think you do, but you have no idea of the effect of this hopelessly [illegible] pile covering thirteen acres, until you see it before you. There is something so terrible in the aspect as to [illegible] one with the utmost awe and dread. One actually shudders on beholding the Traitors' Gate, almost expecting that it will open and usher in some great [illegible] The Tower is literally alive with soldiery—the [illegible] bright notes in the hideous ensemble. Within, the armor and crown jewels are interesting, but the [illegible] very disappointing to people who have visited California hotels during the "season" when an even [illegible] show is to be seen. As you creep along dark passageways and through doors so low it is necessary to [illegible] to enter, and ascend stone stairs so cramped and [illegible]ing as to give no suggestion of their termination, makes you realize the feelings of a timid Lady [illegible] Gray, whose history until now has seemed as [illegible] a Grimm's fairy tale. Outside in the sunshine [illegible] you feel for your head as naturally as for your [illegible] after experiencing a gale.

You forget as the hallowed silence of Westminster Abbey presses down upon your soul, as Washington Irving expresses it, that this has been the scene of the coronation of great kings for hundreds of years; [illegible] now it is the last resting-place of old friends. Of Dickens, Gladstone, Irving and a host of them. But to [illegible] upon the tomb of André is bound to give one a [illegible] after all. André entombed in Westminster! and [illegible] on his tomb: "Sacred to the memory of John André, who raised by his Merit at an early period of [illegible] the rank of Adjutant-General of the British [illegible] America and employed in an important but [illegible] Enterprise fell a sacrifice to his zeal for his King [illegible] his country on the 2nd day of October, 1780."

It is well occasionally to wander from home [illegible] tain a fresh point of view! There was, [illegible] humorous incident in our visit to Westminster [illegible] verger took us, for the matter of a sixpence, [illegible] way of a winding staircase, to where wax figures of departed kings, queens and notables stand in glass cases forever and a day, wearing actual clothes possessed by them during their lifetime, Lord Nelson being one of this select company. After some preliminaries regarding the life of Nelson, the verger announced in a loud voice as a grand finale: "And at last he was killed by a bullet entering the spinal column of his back." His observation regarding Queen Mary was that "when she died they found Calais wrote on her heart."

St. Paul's, with all its splendor, seems to have taken on the spirit of its commemorial environment, and in some way makes one homesick for the vineclad cathedrals or abbeys of rural England. Almost in the center of St. Paul's a booth has been erected where you purchase tickets to the crypt, quite as if you were going to a six-penny circus. The crypt is the last resting-place of Wellington and Nelson; in fact, most of the naval heroes are buried here, and many artists, among them Sir Joshua Reynolds, and near by him, the great J. M. W. Turner, besides our own Benjamin West.

The Houses of Parliament if seen from the river on a hazy morning present a spectacle such as one sees in dreams but seldom in reality. You have then little concern with its great cost, the fact that it covers eight acres, has hundreds of apartments richly carved and decorated in gold, or that the bell, weighing thirteen tons, is one of the largest in existence; it is enough that it is beautiful.

There are so many delightful trips to be taken on the Thames, that if time is limited it is better to choose the important ones—say Greenwich and Chelsea at least. To be sure they are both only districts of London, and Greenwich may be reached by train or Chelsea by 'bus, in half an hour. But to go by boat on a pleasant morning with good company, is nice, since it will likely dislodge from your mind some of the weird impressions made there by Dickens, for who that has read "Our Mutual Friend" does not associate the Thames with Lizzie Hexam. The Royal Observatory is, of course, the real reason for going to Greenwich, where you may see the clock that sets the pace for the world, although it may seem something of an enigma to the novice. The beautiful Grecian Palace with its wonderful terraces along the river further repays one, and is interesting as the birthplace of Henry VIII, Queen Elizabeth and Queen Mary.

Along the river Chelsea-way are the originals of many of Whistler's etchings, including Battersea Bridge, which was a particular favorite of his. And the interior of the wheelwright's shop, often reproduced, is but a short distance from his Chelsea studio, where he died. Chelsea is full of ghosts of great people! George Eliot spent the last part of her life in a house situated only a short distance from Whistler's. Ellen Terry now occupies a house there, and John Sargent's London studio is in Chelsea.

The newspapers of London are very obliging, for when royalty is going forth they announce it very carefully, usually the evening before. That is how it came about that the Boy in our party saw the King, which consoled him (the Boy) somewhat for the worn, moth-eaten appearance of the coronation chair—"carnation" as the Boy called it. The King was to leave Charing Cross Station at 9 in the morning, so the Boy was there under the care and the arm of a policeman. What he expected to see was a chariot of red and gold with a king holding a scepter and wearing a crown. What he saw was first an advance guard in high-top boots of shiny black leather and a helmet hat, on a plainly-caparisoned but splendid steed; next, a coach—black and blue as if it had met with an accident, but was simply painted so, drawn by four black horses, and within the coach four "keepers of luggage," also in high-top boots; then and lastly the King of England, dressed as an [illegible], bowing slightly as infrequent cheers went up here and there, and looking very much older and graver than the Boy had pictured him. "Pshaw!" said the Boy when he had passed, "I thought the King of England was jolly."

CANNON TO SHOOT AIRSHIPS.

It is not generally known that so long ago as the year [illegible] a special kind of cannon was invented for firing at balloons.

The designer was a German named Treskow, an army [illegible], by whom it was offered to Gen. Von Moltke. The latter accepted it, and used it with such good effect against the balloons sent up from Paris, that during one [illegible] in November nine of them were brought to earth, such of their occupants as survived their all-too-rapid descent being made prisoners, to be afterward sent to German fortresses for trial by courtmartial.

This particular balloon-disabling cannon, however, could only be loaded and fired about once in three minutes, and at an elevation not exceeding 55 degrees. It is, therefore, far inferior to the new German gun which has just been designed for use against modern airships, and which is capable of discharging twenty-four shots a minute when tilted at an angle of 70 degrees.

Other nations, too, and more especially France, have been busy experimenting with similar weapons, some of which, exceedingly light, are mounted, not on ordinary gun carriages, but on powerful motor cars, in order to be the more easily to follow up the swift and elusive dirigible."

The patterns of the new guns naturally vary very considerably, and great secrecy is being observed; but it is known that some of them, at all events, fire a drum-shaped projectile, like the old case shot, but fitted with a fuse. The bursting charge is placed right in the head instead of being near the bottom, as it is in modern shrapnel; so that, when the explosion takes place in the air, the large iron bullets, with which its interior is filled, are projected up and down and all around.—Harper's Weekly.

St. Patrick's Day.

FACT AND TRADITION IN CONNECTION WITH IRELAND'S SAINT.

By a Special Contributor.

IT'S the bright-colored picture in the jingle book that rivets the gaze of the child seated on our knee, and as we grown-up youngsters turn the pages of history the romantic personality, the character glowing with life, flashing with activity, makes the same vivid appeal. Preëminently such was St. Patrick, pioneer, priest, patriot.

In just what nursery corner of the globe our little hero prattled baby talk is not known, England, Scotland, France, all contending for honors of parentage. The important point, big with future significance, is the fact that when about 16 the lad was captured by pirates and sold as a slave in the north of Ireland.

There he remained seven years. Learned the natives' habits, language—not a little of their hearts, for, while obeying the instinct of freedom by making his escape at the first opportunity, he carried away with him the germ of that love for Ireland which was to bud and flower into a life purpose of passionate devotion.

After thrilling adventures he reached "the continent;" turned student, scholar, entered the church, and step by step became deacon, priest, bishop.

Of rare mental ability, magnetic to a marked degree, a born leader of men and master of events, the ecclesiastical world and the glory thereof easily lay in the hollow of his hand—had he not outstretched that hand in yearning to the benighted souls in the land of his former servitude.

From the church's viewpoint, the Irish of that day were undeniably "heathen," but by no means ignorant savages. There was a certain barbaric splendor about them—in some of their dwellings, in their weapons of warfare, in their dress and their ornaments of gold, silver, and ivory; the picturesque embodiment of the same romantic spirit that poured itself out in fervent poetry and in a passionate, plaintive music. Finally, the youth of the land were steeped in the philosophy and learning of the Druids, who held religious sway over the entire people.

No easy conquest of untutored minds was the work of that brave missionary, and there was the power behind the throne to reckon with; keen-edged swords of contending doctrine crossed, priest to priest. But St. Patrick had studied in the best schools of France and Italy; soon "the paschal fire on the Hill of Slone burned brighter than the Druidical one on the Hill of Tara," and by a miracle of enthusiasm and persuasive argument Ireland was evangelized.

Before the feeble, blind old saint, great with age, lay down to his well-won rest, he had built 365 churches, with a school by each, established two colleges, and lifted the entire Irish people to a higher, more enlightened civilization, while as a side issue he had Christianized the west of Scotland and the Isle of Man.

But deeper tribute than statistics was the love universally borne him—an affection treasured by the sons of Erin for 1500 years.

"St. Patrick goes with the Irish race the world over, for the true site of his work, the abiding altar that he raised to God, was the heart of the people."

It is only when we understand this intimate, household affection for the man that we can rightly appreciate all those naive legends that have grown out of an idolizing faith that believeth all things.

The legend of St. Patrick and the snakes is almost too shop-worn for our fingering—yet how could one write a biography of Santa Claus without mention of reindeer?

"There's not a mile in Ireland's isle where the dirty vermin musters;
Where'er he put his dear forefoot he murdered them in clusters.
The toads went hop, the frogs went flop, slap dash into the water,
And the beasts committed suicide to save themselves from slaughter.
Nine hundred vipers blue he charmed with sweet discourses,
And dined on them at Killaloo in soups and second courses.'

According to popular tradition, St. Patrick was always preceded by a drum, or led on to victory beating one himself. The momentous day when he climbed the hill to preach his sermon that was to drive away the reptiles, so lustily was the drum beaten that it broke, but happily an angel appeared and mended it—at the critical moment when a large black snake, grinning with impish triumph, came wriggling down the descent toward the horrified band of his followers.

Not only were the snakes driven away, but also was the soil rendered so "obnoxious to snakes" that they never returned. As a test case, in 1831, a certain Irish gentlemen with the national trait of humor highly developed, imported six harmless English snakes and let them loose in his garden. One killed three miles from his place was such a curiosity that the lucky finder exhibited it to a distinguished naturalist as a new, remarkable kind of eel. So great was the general consternation when its true niche in the zoölogical temple of fame was revealed that the Irish gentleman refrained from making public any information he had gained concerning serpents and Irish soil.

There is an old legend—no doubt fondly hugged to an Irishman's conscience—that at the last day of judgment the sons of the Emerald Isle shall be judged by St. Patrick alone. And for many centuries there was pointed out on the island of Lough Derg a cave said to be the entrance to St. Patrick's Purgatory—"and it should be to any one who had courage to go into it as if he had passed through purgatory after death."

Of entirely different nature is the profane legend linking St. Patrick's name with that special delicate privilege permitted the fair sex every leap year.

Shortly after passing the snake exclusion act, St. Patrick met St. Bridget, who brought to him the compliments of certain young ladies in her nunnery because they were debarred the initiative privilege in affairs of the heart—celebacy not then being compulsory unless a special vow had been taken. St. Patrick, duly considering the matter, suggested that the desired privilege should be granted once in seven years.

"Arrah! Pathrick, jewel," cried St. Bridget, "I daurn't go back to the gurls wid such a proposal. Mek it one year in four."

It ended of course in her gaining her woman's way, he gallantly giving her leap year, "the longest one of the lot."

And leap year it must have been then by lucky chance, for St Bridget at once made good by popping the question herself. But as St. Patrick had taken the vow of celebacy, he could only offer the consolation prize of a kiss and a silk dress.

The shamrock has been associated with St. Patrick ever since his early missionary days when he held out a shamrock in his hand as a type of the Trinity.

"Chosen leaf
Of bard and chief,
Old Erin's native shamrock."

Early in the morning of St. Patrick's Day in Ireland, everywhere old women are crying: "Green shamrock! Buy my shamrock!" Eagerly are they bought and worn as proud badges of patriotism, while upon the sleeves of all the children's coats are pinned St. Patrick crosses.

In the beginning of February, wealthy farmers in Ireland brew ale to be drunk on the seventeenth of March—to the accompaniment of cake and pickled salmon. On that morning, a plateful of shamrock is on every table, and after the master and mistress have "drowned it in whisky," the rest of the bottle is sent to the servants for a like ceremony.

On this joyful day, it was a custom of the old village inns to furnish every guest with a pot of beer, oaten bread, and a piece of fish. If there was no inn in the hamlet, the largest cabin was selected, poles put up from one end to the other of the room, and a table board formed from doors unhinged from the other cabins. In this case every merrymaker furnished his own beer and fish.

There is no apparent connection between St. Patrick and the flood of biblical narrative, but it is traditionally claimed that it was on March 17 that Noah and his family went into the ark—an amusing coincidence when we consider the proverbial bad weather of the day we celebrate.

MAY C. RINGWALT.

AT FISHERMAN'S COVE.

Oh, there is an hour at Fisherman's Cove,
When quiet lies the sea,
And the tiny waves like homing gulls
Come softly in to me;
Far out across the vast expanse
The night comes swift and deep,
And the sun goes down, as I wave my hand,
Into the Ocean of Sleep.

Then out of the mists, o'er the sunset sea,
Come gently the water sprites,
And they dance and they sing and twist and twirl—
Oh, nothing their play affrights,
'Till the sun's last rays aslant on the sky
Fade out as the day is done;
Then suddenly under my very eyes
They vanish one by one.

But hastening away they failed to take note
Of the beauty they left behind,
For where they had danced on the blue baby wave
Were colors of every kind;
I loved in my heart the lavender crests
Of the purpled heaving swells;
And ever the gold on the flecks of foam
A tale of the daylight tells.

See! the evening is come in place of day,
And the stars are again in the sky,
The gray old cliffs stand as sentinels bold
For a world that will sleep by and by;
And there near the hut at Fisherman's Cove
The fishermen mend their nets,
And a tiny breeze at play on the shore
The strings of the meshes frets.

Then this is the hour of all the day
When peace lies nearest the heart
When earth and sky and sea combine
A feeling of rest to impart;
And this is the place that I love the best
In this hour dearest to me,
On the rocky shore at Fisherman's Cove
Near Clifton-by-the-Sea.

VEST POCKET PHILOSOPHY.

Every man knows of a job paying thrice as well as his own that he could fill far better than its present incumbent.

It is an interesting experiment to go up to one of those weak chaps said to be incapable of saying no, and ask him for the loan of a tenner.

Life, ladies, is mostly a matter of praying for a husband and then regretting girlhood's gaieties.

You can easily flatter a man by telling him he can't be easily flattered.

An Indian Heroine.

HOW CATHERINE SAVED THE FORT AT OLD DETROIT.

By a Special Contributor.

DOWN in front of old Fort Detroit the bright blue river sparkled and rippled in fragmentary waves. Across its half-mile of expanse the tiny houses of the Canadians huddled like snow-white doves. On every side the eye was met with the tender greenness and budding freshness of forest trees. Here and there the smoke from some Indian wagwam rose in curling spiral rings, melting, and disappearing in the clear spring air.

Late on the afternoon of the 5th of May, 1763, Monsieur St. Aubin, one of the principal and most respected of the Canadian settlers, stood upon the water bastion of the fort idly watching the greedy river lapping its very feet, and at the same time keeping an anxious lookout over its dancing waters, where every once in a while the bright silver scales of some small fish—pursued by a larger—glittered for an instant in the sunlight.

The Canadian had allowed his wife to cross over to the Ottawa camp that afternoon for a supply of maple sugar and venison. But she should have returned long ago. He chided himself for having consented to her putting herself in the power of the fickle Indians, even though they had vowed eternal friendship to the French and Canadians.

At last a deeply-laden canoe was seen putting off from the eastern shore, and as it approached, the watcher was rejoiced to see it contained Madame St. Aubin, her Indian paddler, and a great pile of venison.

As he accompanied his wife to their abode, St. Aubin asked in French:

"What makes thee so late? Surely, thou shouldst have been back before this."

"I saw in the camp of the Ottawas that which made me fear for the safety of the fort, and I remained to learn more."

"Well, what didst thou see?"

"I saw many of the warriors filing off the muzzles of their guns, making them much shorter. Dost thou not think that strange?"

"Ventrebleu! They are planning some new deviltry."

"And their manner to me was strange past explaining. If ever in my life I saw guilt, then I saw it in the faces of those Indians."

The blacksmith, who happened to be standing by, overhearing these remarks, here put in:

"And many of the Indians have visited my shop of late and tried to obtain files and saws; but when they refused to tell why they wanted them, I would not let them have them."

"These circumstances mean more than we think. I, also, have noticed a strange unrest among the Indians of late. I am going to warn the commandant to be upon his guard," said M. Gouin, an old and much-respected settler.

So down the narrow streets of the old fort he hurried, past its small, closely-built houses, till he came to Maj. Gladwin's quarters. He brushed past the sentinel and rushed into the commandant's room, where he soon told all he had heard.

Maj. Gladwin listened quietly till M. Gouin had finished, then, with a laugh, said:

"You Canadians are always hearing strange tales, and alarm yourselves needlessly at bugaboos; but as for me, I care just that," snapping his fingers, "for all the Indians encamped about here."

"Mais, Monsieur, hast thou taken to account how many have come to the settlement? The Pottawattomies, Wyandots and Ottawas have encamped right in our midst, while many other smaller tribes are not far away. What mean all these Indians?"

"Nothing more than that they like to feast at our expense. Not a day passes but swarms of them come begging for anything we will give them. So trouble me not with such idle tales," said Gladwin, dismissing him.

As M. Gouin walked away, he shook his head in disapproval. Though he knew that the Indians, when sober, pretended great friendship for the French, and Canadians as well, yet, when he thought of them as masters of the fort, and having free access to the large store of liquor, he shuddered.

On the same side of the river and a little below the fort lay the Pottawattomie village. In it lived an Ojibway girl of exceptional beauty. Slim and graceful as a young sapling, and with features unusually good for an Indian. Her thick blue-black hair was worn in two great braids over her shoulders. Her round, copper-colored arms were ornamented with silver bracelets, and her exquisitely-embroidered moccasins covered feet both slim and small. Among the officers of the fort she was called "Catherine," as many could not pronounce her Indian name.

Early on the afternoon of the 6th of May, Catherine softly lifted the flap of her lodge door, hesitated an instant, then stole out. She looked to the right and left, seeing the wigwams standing about silent and deserted. All the warriors had gone to Pontiac's council, and the young squaws were away in the forest hunting faggots. Here and there was a fire tended by some old squaw whose withered, toothless face turned upon her, and whose glittering, bead-like eyes peered malevolently as she passed. Groups of naked, wild little Indian children, interspersed with half-starved dogs, tumbled over each other in rough play.

But Catherine saw none of these, for she walked with a downcast head and eyes, that though they rested upon the soft spring turf, took no note of the delicate pink and white flowers that lifted their dainty heads at her very feet, and were wont to charm her. Light as a fawn was her tread as she stole through the intricacies of the forest, till reaching a great tree, lately fallen, she climbed upon its trunk and sat for a long time in a deep study, then suddenly flung herself down upon it, her face hidden in her arms.

There was a deathly stillness in the forest, broken only by the not unmusical voice of some home-faring crow, and the tap-tap of a red-headed woodpecker challenging the timid but inquisitive insects hidden safely under the tree bark to come out and see their visitor.

At long intervals the faint sound of an Indian war drum booming defiance and derision could be distinguished. Hearing this sound, Catherine shuddered, and again resumed the struggle in her mind.

Should she warn the English, or not? Dare she do so? To be discovered meant nothing short of death. But it was a horrible plot that Pontiac had laid. And she was much attached to the English because of their kindness to her. When she thought of the ruddy cheeks and bright blue eyes of the officers in their gay red coats, who good-naturedly chaffed her on her visits to the fort; then pictured how they would look after the massacre, she whispered in the Indian tongue: "No, no, I cannot see them murdered. I must tell. I must, even if I myself am killed for it."

At last she sat up and began making her plans. She knew she must go to the fort while the warriors were away from camp; for the old squaws, suspicious though they might be, would not seek to stop her.

Silently she returned to her lodge, and picking up a pair of beautifully-embroidered moccasins which she had made for Maj. Gladwin, at his request, hurried to the fort.

She avoided the forest path used by the Indians, for she was resolved not to be stopped. Carefully pushing aside the bushes and briers that with their thorny arms sought to detain her, she stole along. Her dainty moccasined feet skimming over the ground made scarcely a sound. Passing out of the forest, she soon reached the tiny houses of the Canadians, each set in its garden and small orchard.

As she passed the St. Aubin house, Madame St. Aubin, who was resting her plump arms on the top of her picket fence while talking to her gossip and neighbor, said:

"Mon Dieu! there goes another of them. I cannot understand why the English make so much of that girl. As for me, I trust none of them. They are all alike. Snakes, ready to strike at a moment's notice."

When Catherine reached the main entrance to the fort, the sentinel, knowing her, at once allowed her to enter. She hastened through the narrow streets till, reaching Gladwin's quarters, she was quickly admitted.

"Oh, 'tis you, Catherine," said the commandant good-naturedly. "I suppose you have brought me the moccasins, have you not?"

She silently handed them to him.

"Good, very good," said he, admiring the embroidery of porcupine quills. "You should be well paid for these. What is your price?"

The young Indian girl slowly shook her head.

"Catherine wants no pay," she at last said in broken French and Indian.

Gladwin glanced up quickly.

"How now, no pay? 'Tis strange talk for an Indian."

She raised her eyes to his beseechingly, and seemed about to reply, then suddenly dropped them again.

"You have done this work so well, my girl," said Gladwin, "I want you to take the rest of this elkskin and make me another pair of moccasins. See that no harm comes to the skin, for I value it highly. As pay for your work I will send rations to your lodge."

Catherine seemed confused. She put out her hand to take the elkskin, but withdrew it.

"Do you not wish to make the moccasins for me?" asked the commandant.

"Yes, Catherine will make them," she at last replied, accepting the skin.

Taking a step or two toward the door, she turned and regarded Gladwin earnestly. There was a something in her eyes he could not understand. Several times she seemed on the point of speaking, but as often stopped herself.

When she at last left the room Gladwin turned again to his interrupted writing, but could not concentrate his thoughts upon his work.

"I wonder what that girl has on her mind," he at last exclaimed. After a moment of thought he went to the sentinel at his door.

"Where did Catherine go after she left here?" he asked.

"'Twas but now I saw her lingering outside," the man replied.

"Go and bring her to me at once."

When the girl again appeared, Gladwin took her by the hand and gently led her to his office.

"Catherine, have I not always been kind to you?" he asked.

She nodded.

"Then why do you act so strangely? What have you on your mind?"

The girl pressed her tightly-clasped hands to her bosom and looked down. Still she did not speak.

"Why did you not want to take the elkskin?" he insisted.

"Because you think much of it, and Catherine cannot bring it back."

"But why? There is another reason, Catherine."

After a moment of silence the girl looked round the room, and seeing they were alone, stole close to Gladwin and whispered:

"If I tell you will you promise not to betray me?"

"Yes, I promise; I will see no harm comes to you."

Brokenly, and in a low voice she began:

"Tomorrow Pontiac with sixty of his warriors will come to the fort. Under their blankets they will carry guns with their muzzles shortened. Pontiac will ask to hold a council, and after his speech will offer a peace belt, holding it in the wrong position. This will be the signal for them to spring up and kill the officers, while the Indians in the street will kill the garrison. All the English will be killed."

"How about the French?" calmly inquired the commandant.

"Not a French scalp will be raised. All will be spared," she answered.

"I thought as much. Truly a devilish plot," exclaimed Gladwin, "and quite worthy this treacherous savage, Pontiac."

He studied a moment, then:

"Go back to your camp, Catherine; they shall never know who gave the information. Or"—seeing she hesitated—"you may cast in your lot with us and remain at the fort for good."

But she shook her head, saying:

"No, Catherine must go to her people."

When she had gone, Gladwin called several of his officers, telling them what he had heard. They decided among themselves to keep the information secret for a time, and make every preparation for their defense. Half the garrison was ordered under arms, and all the officers made ready to spend the night upon the ramparts. Gladwin feared the Indians might attack them that night instead of waiting to follow their original plan.

The form of the fort was almost square, with a wooden bastion at each corner upon which were mounted two six-pounders, a three-pounder and several mortars. Inside the palisades, which were twenty-five feet high, besides the soldiers' barracks and a small church, were packed closely together about 100 small wooden houses with roofs thatched with straw or bark, all highly inflammable. Above the main entrance to the fort a block house was built.

To defend all this from several hundred savages was a garrison of but 120 men, regulars and provincial rangers, with forty fur traders and engagés. But to assist them were anchored in the river two armed vessels, a schooner named the Gladwin, carrying six guns, and a sloop named the Beaver, with ten guns.

To another, the task would seem almost an impossible one. But Maj. Henry Gladwin's stout heart did not fail him. During that night he was everywhere. He paced the one wide street just within the palisades, called the "chemin du ronde," keeping a careful and anxious watch. The sentinels, who had not been told the reason, wondered why he personally inspected their posts so constantly, and why their numbers were doubled.

But the night of anxiety passed away, and with the dawn numbers of canoes deeply laden with Indians were seen crossing over to the western shore. Soon the common behind the fort was alive with them. Squaws with their blankets wrapped closely about them, and wild-eyed Indian children whose naked bodies rubbed with bear's grease shone and glistened in the morning sun.

The warriors, after scowling at the tall palisades, entered the gate, for Gladwin had made his plans and was ready for them. Pontiac and his sixty chieftains were admitted without parley at 10 o'clock. They were all wrapped closely in gay-colored blankets, their faces painted in vermilion and yellow ochre. Pontiac striding at their head started when he had passed the gateway, for on every side stood ranks of watchful soldiers, while the engagés of the fur traders waited, arms in hand, at the street corners.

But Pontiac, an adept in the art of subterfuge, did not betray by a sign his suspicions. Looking neither to the right nor left, he hurried into the council house, where he and his warriors seated themselves upon the mats laid for them. But he must have noticed that every Englishman wore his sword and pistols.

"Why," he asked, "do I see so many of my father's young men standing in the street with their guns?"

"To keep them perfect in their exercise," answered Gladwin.

Then Pontiac, holding in his hand the wampum belt that was to give the signal, addressed the commandant. He began by professing great love for the English, and said he had come to smoke the pipe of peace. Suddenly he lifted the wampum belt as if to give the signal, when Gladwin made a sign, and from without were heard the clash of arms and a drum sounding the charge. At the same time the commandant and all his officers drew their swords half-way from their scabbards.

At this, Pontiac stood for a moment like a detected criminal, then delivered the belt in the usual way.

After a pause Gladwin made reply to him. He promised friendship to the Indians as long as they should merit it, but threatened punishment should they deserve it.

The council then broke up, and the gates of the fort were flung open, while the great but treacherous war chief stalked out at the head of his braves. Baffled and chagrined, he returned to his village, where his rage was so terrible that none dared approach him.

In fear and trembling Catherine was awaiting in her lodge the return of the warriors. "Would their plot work successfully?" she wondered. "Or had her warning saved the occupants of the fort?"

Late that same afternoon Pontiac sent six of his warriors to the fort to demand the name of the informer. Maj. Gladwin refused to give it, but at length admitted it was an Indian. Then Pontiac made inquiries through the Indian camps, and at last heard of Catherine's visit to the fort. He had the girl brought to his lodge, a small, oven-shaped hut, built of rushes and bark, and stood a moment regarding her. His snake-like eyes shot glances of malignant hate upon her. Then in the Chippewa tongue he asked:

"Were you at the fort yesterday?"

"Yes," she answered in a trembling voice, looking down at the toe of her moccasin.

"Why?"

"To take some moccasins to the commandant."

"So you gave him warning, did you?"

She made no reply.

"We will make you talk," said Pontiac. Then seizing up a stick, he knocked her down with it.

"Kill her, kill her!" shouted the bloodthirsty warriors, while the fierce old squaws danced around, hitting her with their sticks.

"Why did you warn the redcoats?" resumed Pontiac. After the cruel treatment she had received, Catherine could scarcely rise to her feet.

"Why," insisted Pontiac, "did you betray your people?"

"The English have been kind to Catherine. Catherine keeps a warm spot in her heart for them."

"Kill her, burn her!" shouted the implacable squaws.

"Take her out of my sight," thundered Pontiac. "Do with her as you will."

Exulting and leering at their helpless victim, the toothless hags dragged her away to one of their lodges where she was left tightly bound to await the coming darkness. For would she not make a fine torch?"

As soon as darkness set in, the squaws took her close to the palisades so the English should see how they punished informers.

First a tall stake was driven into the ground, then some of the squaws started out to cut wood, while others of their number jeered and tormented the girl, who stood with stoical indifference to her fate.

Soon squaws staggered back under great loads of fuel, which they built up round the base of the stake, to which they had bound their victim. The wood was piled higher, but not high enough to cut off the enjoyment by a too speedy ending. A torch was applied, and soon a tiny curl of smoke was seen, and a faint resinous smell of burning pine filled the still night air.

The delicate outlines of a slim young moon were seen in the sky, where here and there twinkled the bright eye of some far-away star. In the forest near by the voice of a whippoorwill was heard complaining. The soft balmy spring air gently blew the fire beneath Catherine, and a crackling of burning wood was heard. The flames grew, and crept higher, licking with their red insatiable tongues the dry wood about the victim's feet.

At last she strained at her cruel bonds, then turned her head and looked upon the fierce circle of bronze forms dancing and yelling about her. As if realizing that no help or pity could proceed from them, she cast an agonizing and beseeching look at the top of the palisade. Though she saw no one, soldiers were watching.

"Volunteers to rescue the Indian girl!" shouted Gladstone.

"Here!" and "here!" his men answered back.

Suddenly the big gate of the fort burst open, and with the clash of arms and the rush of a whirlwind there appeared in the midst of the startled squaws a number of soldiers. Their coats vied with the red of the flames, and their bayonets glittered in the firelight, as the foremost among them scattered the brands and freed poor Catherine.

Seeing their number, the squaws scattered, screeching in fury at being balked of their prey, whom the soldiers carried into the fort, where she remained for the fifteen following months of the siege.

FLORENCE E. BROOKS.

WOUNDED HEART SEWN UP.

An astounding surgical operation is reported by Prof. Sultan in the German Medical Weekly. The heart of a person who attempted suicide and fired a bullet into it was taken out and sewn up and the patient discharged from hospital six weeks later absolutely cured.

Prof. Sultan gives the following account of the operation, which is believed to be without parallel:

"On June 22 last the patient, a cabinet-maker, 38 years old, fired at his heart with a small-caliber revolver. Examination showed a small powder-blackened hole in the heart through which hardly any blood issued. Late in the evening of the second day, thirty hours after the shooting, we decided to operate, and made an incision in the sternum.

"As soon as the cardial sac was opened a great quantity of dark blood oozed forth. The heart, lying quite free for its entire length, was carefully lifted up. Upon the frontal side appeared only a small extravasation the size of a lentil, but as soon as the heart was turned toward the right there appeared a small wound with ragged edges about half a centimeter in diameter. With three stitches of fine silk thread the edges of the wound were neatly joined, while for safety's sake another seam was made at the extravasation.

"To hold the strongly beating heart while sewing was in progress required considerable force. Every time the heart was turned to the right in order to make a stitch the pulse was diminished until it was scarcely audible, but when the heart was turned round the beats again became normal. After all the blood had been drained from the sac the entrance hole of the bullet became visible, and it was immediately closed by catgut. When the chest incision had been repaired breathing and pulse were entirely normal."—[Berlin Correspondence London Mail.

A FASHION NOTE.

"Here's a curiosity I have imported from Germany," said a haberdasher. "Seven shirts in one—price, 25 cents. How's that for high?"

The article was strange to see—a dickey, or false front, of paper, made in seven layers, like a calendar.

"It looks good, eh?" the haberdasher went on. "The paper simulates linen closely, doesn't it? As soon as number one gets soiled, you just tear it off and number two presents itself, white as the virgin [illegible], to view.

"Of course such a cheap toilet makeshift would not sell in this rich land of ours. It is for England, France, Germany, where youths work for practically nothing in order to learn languages. A young German will work, and keep himself, on $3 a week in London till he learns English. Is he to be blamed then, if, while learning, he wears one of these remarkable paper shirts?"

The patron, a deacon, took out his purse again.

"I'll take one," he said suddenly. "I'll wear it during Lent. What I save on laundry bills shall be contributed to the missionary fund."

A Modern Navy.

ITS EVOLUTION AND USE AS SEEN BY A NAVAL MAN.

By a Special Contributor.

ONE of the very first arts of which history gives us any authentic record is that of shipbuilding. Deity Himself was the architect of the ark, and to this day the lines of our safest, most commodious and best cargo carriers do not differ materially from those of that ancient craft.

The world, as it was first known, bordered the Mediterranean Sea, and it has ever been an axiom that to be of strength a nation must possess a seacoast. Powerful as is Russia, she is seriously handicapped by her lack of seacoast, and conversely Great Britain is second to none in power, and she is all seacoast, and her great dependencies, India and Australia, are much the same. The United States comes next, with her vast mileage on the Atlantic, the Pacific and the Great Lakes.

The demands of trade, of barter and sale increased with the growing population of those eastern shores till they became such a tax on the means of transportation that they were not equal to the necessities of the case. Horses, camels, donkeys and human beings were the beasts of burden. They were costly to obtain in the first instance, they were costly to maintain, and they were subject to accident, sickness and death. Naturally, living on the shores of a great sea, boats came into use; doubtless they were at first pleasure craft only, then fishermen's boats, and it could not have been long till cargo boats came into use loaded with grain and commodities of such sorts as were produced there.

Never in the history of mankind has there been a time when evil-minded persons would not seize and appropriate to their own use the results of the labors of others, and cargoes afloat are the concentrated results of labors in the soil, in mines, workshops and all the varied industries in which men have seen fit to engage.

The eyes of these marauders glistened and their mouths watered as they saw vessels put out for passage, laden with rich cargoes, and they too put to sea with the intention to swoop down on the merchant and spoil him of his wares. Sometimes they succeeded; sometimes it was the spoiler who was spoiled, and the merchantman came to port with a fierce glee on his face, for the corpses of the pirates hung at his yard-arm, a gruesome warning to evil-doers of the same kidney.

For their better protection, merchants got to going in company. There was nothing to prevent pirates from doing the same thing, and they did. Finally ships which were filled with fighting men and fitted with fighting material were hired to go along, as a protection to the cargo ships—and there you have the germ of a navy.

Capital has always been conservative; it never goes to war on its own account, and is rarely willing to be spent where it cannot see an increase of itself. The merchants of Venice when in the heydey of its power were the most enterprising and the richest in the world, and the shrewdest, and it was not long until they had saddled the cost of the guard ships onto the state, and there it has been from that day to this.

From being a protection to the merchant ships of Venice its guard ships saw their opportunity and turned marauders themselves on the ships of Rome and other maritime nations, till in self-protection those nations were forced to build and equip guardships—and naval wars were inaugurated.

These early men-of-war were merely open boats, rarely more than thirty or forty feet long, and depended on oarsmen to propel them through the water. These rowers were slaves always. Sometimes they had had been purchased, often they were men captured in war, and sometimes they were criminals condemned for punishment to serve in the galleys. Their life was something dreadful. It was expected that they would be cruelly treated and worked to death; men were plenty and hearts were as hard as adamant. Incredible as it may seem, these vessels were continued down to within a hundred years of the present time. I have seen several of them in the navy yard at Toulon, France, discarded now.

From the open boat, stealthily and with quaking dread, creeping close to shore, armed with half a hundred fierce, bloodthirsty pirates, it was a long, weary and expensive cycle of centuries to the close of the seventeenth century, where we stand face to face with the great ships-of-the-line carrying a hundred and more guns and more than a thousand men; a vessel with capacity for storage of provisions, water, clothing and fighting material for a year at sea; with strength to defy the fury of ocean at its worst; a little world of its own, and as a fighting unit irresistible except to vessels of its own class. The tremendous crews were then, as now, not so much to work the ship, huge as it must have been, but to man the batteries, to take the place of those put out of action by the casualties of the fight, for the guns must be worked by able men or the cause is lost. The losses in battle between those old-fashioned ships was something appalling. At the Battle of Trafalgar, one discharge from Nelson's ship into that of the French admiral put 400 men out of service.

But after all the dreadful fighting that men-of-war have done and the victories of war which they have gained (and they are not to be valued lightly,) their victories of peace have been of inestimable value to the world. The United States has just put out of service, within the last three months, a splendid old-fashioned man-of-war, the Saratoga. Built for a fighter, always manned and equipped for battle, yet there has never been fired from her guns an angry shot. For more than half a century she has gone up and down the earth, carrying diplomats and scientists, men whose achievements for good in their particular realm will last as long as the world lasts. Oh yes, peace has its victories quite as much as war. The name of Lieut. Maury, of Dr. Kane, of Commodore Perry and of Lieut. Wilkes will always rank with Nelson and Farragut, wth Dewey and Evans.

In the year 1814 Robert Fulton built the first steam-propelled warship, and its advent into the navies of the world created a tremendous sensation. Heretofore all on board had been seamen. A new class of men now came onto the decks—steam men; but still sails were largely depended on until within the last few years they have been discarded altogether in the best and strongest ships of war, and steam alone is the propelling power. Not one of the great battleships which are coming to the Pacific Coast under Admiral Evans is a sailing ship.

So, too, there has been a stupendous change in the ordnance, as between the old-time battleship and that of the present time. Then the guns were a multitude, into the hundreds, and of small caliber and weak penetration. Actions were fought at close quarters, from a few hundred yards to so close that the men serving the guns of the opposing ships were actually in each other's way. Now a modern battle is fought with a few guns of amazing size and force, and it is rare that the ships get nearer each other than half a mile.

I don't know who is the author of the saying: "In time of peace, prepare for war," but it is as true and valuable an axiom as ever was uttered. Owing to her isolated position, the United States has heretofore had but little to fear from the ships of other nations. In our early history, by the time sailing vessels got over seas to our shores their supplies of provisions and water were perilously near the end, and when steam vessels came onto the scene the space for a coal supply for so long a voyage had to be satisfactorily solved, and to tell the truth, that has not been done yet. The fleet coming to our shores at the present time is only kept alive at a frightful cost, and, were it war time, at a great risk to the coaling ships which must move with it with supplies.

As our old frigates Constitution and Constellation were never equaled in any maneuver or action, so our modern battleships Alabama, California, Rhode Island, Kearsarge and others of that class are not second to anything of their kind afloat.

Many of the readers of The Times will have the opportunity to see them in a few weeks, and when you do go aboard it would be a gracious and kindly thing to express your appreciation to the officers whom you meet—appreciation of what you see and learn.

After all, the question naturally comes to the mind of many thinking people: "What good are they in time of peace?" One thing, they are actually a part of the United States, no matter where in the world they may happen to be. Whenever a citizen of this country may choose to go, he may be certain that the flag of his country, backed by the cannon of a man-of-war, will protect him in any lawful enterprise or act in which he cares to engage. The education given the officers of the navy at Annapolis qualifies them as well to be surveyors, and they are almost continually making charts of harbors, of ocean currents and of winds. They observe the sun, the moon and the other celestial bodies and make record of their observations for the use of the public. They survey rivers, peaks and mountain chains. The Arctic seas and the Antarctic have been charted by officers of the navy. They gather the fruits and flowers, the seeds and roots of foreign varieties of plants for use of the people at home. They manage the fish-commission steamers. They have in charge all the lighthouses on our coasts, rivers and lakes. They are teachers in schools and colleges. No, indeed, the navy is by no means an ornamental and useless appendage of the government, but in times of peace is always doing a vast and useful work.

In time of war they fight for you and me. Yes, they fight. The pages of history record no more splendid achievements than stand to the credit of the officers and men of the United States Navy. The names of John Paul Jones, Stephen Decatur, Isaac Hull, Oliver Hazard Perry, Edward Preble and James Lawrence of the old navy, and of Farragut and Porter and Foote and Cushing and Worden, of Dewey and Sampson and Evans of our own time—these stars will shine in the firmament of our history forever. They were zealous in the performance of duty, obedient to authority, honorable in word and deed; they scorned an untruth; they were faithful to their trusts, and when the hour of trial came they shrank not, but taking their lives in their hands, endured suffering and death that you and I might possess this fair land in peace. Their eminence was not the result of luck or accident; it was hard labor and surpassing love of country that placed them on the heights.

A HAPPY THOUGHT.

Norah, the "green" cook, poked her head in at the dining-room door.

"Please, ma'am," she asked, "an' how will I be knowin' when the puddin' is cooked?"

"Stick a knife into it," said her mistress, recalling the cook-book instructions. "If the knife comes out clean, the pudding is ready to serve."

"Yes, ma'am."

"And, oh, Nora!" The mistress had had an afterthought. "If the knife does come out clean, you might stick all the rest of the knives into the pudding."—[Everybody's Magazine.

Artificial Diamonds.

SCIENTISTS HAVE BEEN TRYING TO SOLVE NATURE'S SECRETS.

From London Answers.

WHAT is a diamond? Why, nothing but the crystallized form of carbon, which is one of the commonest elements in existence. The burnt cork with which the nigger minstrel blackens his face, the lead pencil used to write this article, the lump of sugar you put in your tea—all these are practically pure carbon.

Then why all this fuss about making diamonds? Why these sealed formulae, why these thousands of pounds spent in experiments, why these hugely expensive lawsuits, which have filled the papers, and been the talk of the town for weeks past?

The reason is this. Although science knows roughly how nature has changed carbon to diamonds, yet men of science find the utmost difficulty in copying her methods; and although real diamonds have undoubtedly been made by man, yet the gems produced hitherto are so tiny as to be without commercial value.

Chemists have been hot on the track of the artificial diamond for eighty years past. In 1828 Gannal made experiments with a mixture of carburet of sulphur and phosphorous. One day he found in the bottom of his retort a number of little sparkling stones. "Eureka!" he cried. "I have solved the problem!" Alas! when he came to analyze his "diamonds" he found they were but morsels of glass melted away from his test tubes.

To manufacture a perfect diamond, intense heat is essential, combined with enormous pressure. When the electric arc was discovered, with its blinding radiance and furious heat, a French scientist named Despretz made experiments with pure charcoal, and produced little crystals so hard that they would cut rubies. He reported to the French Academy that he had succeeded in manufacturing real diamonds. But the famous M. Berthelot conclusively proved that Despretz was wrong.

A little later an Englishman appeared in the chemical-diamond field. This was Mr. Marsden, whose experiments had a most curious result. He produced crystals so hard that they would actually cut diamonds! It was a pity he did not realize the value of his accidental discovery. These crystals, now known as carborundum, are manufactured by the ton at Niagara, and have become an extremely valuable article of commerce. For instance, they have superseded the black diamond in the business of making drills for rock boring.

At last came the marvelous experiments of M. Moissan. Aware of the terrific heat required to melt properly that most recalcitrant of substances, carbon, he devised a novel form of electric furnace. It was made of hollowed blocks of limestone, and, by means of a hugely powerful electric arc, he secured temperatures of over 4000 degrees. Heat like this has never before existed on the surface of the earth. It approaches the temperature of that center of heat, the sun. When this oven was fully heated, pure white flames burst out upon each side, with a radiance so intolerable that it would have blinded the operator had he not protected his eyes with special glasses.

Moissan introduced another novelty into his experiments. He used molten iron as a solvent for his charcoal. Melting the iron in his furnace, and allowing it to take up as much carbon as it would, he then plunged the crucible of white-hot metal into a bath of boiling lead. This cooled the crust of the iron, leaving the interior still molten. Now, iron, in cooling, contracts considerably. Thus, the inner part of the molten mass was subjected to a pressure unattainable by mechanical means.

When the iron at last cooled, Moissan dissolved it away with acids. The result was a number of tiny crystals, which, when tested, proved actually to be diamonds equal in quality to those dug from the depths of De Beers.

Then, if the problem be solved, you ask, what need for all this present hubbub? The cause is this: The largest of Moissan's diamonds was only one-fiftieth of an inch in diameter, and the cost of its manufacture was probably 500 times greater than the sum for which you could have bought a natural diamond of the same size in a jeweler's shop.

Lemoine's claim is to produce artificial diamonds of marketable size. The world at large will be vastly interested to know whether this claim can be substantiated.

Sir William Crookes, one of our own greatest scientists, has made diamonds, but, as he himself says, it is impossible to produce stones of a commercial value. His method is similar to that of Moissan's. A quantity of iron is packed into a carbon crucible with some pure charcoal, and then heated to an exceedingly high temperature in an electric furnace. The mixture of melted iron and charcoal is then poured out in thin streams into water. The outside of the melted iron hardens at once, and this skin exerts an immense pressure on the molten interior, causing it to form into liquid globules. These globules, in cooling, crystallize, and form diamonds—real diamonds, but very small.

With other precious stones, Sir William has been more successful, having manufactured rubies which have been valued at £10 each.

As long ago as 1879, Mr. MacTear of Glasgow, working upon a scientific theory, produced a crystallized substance, in appearance so similar to diamond dust that even experts were deceived. Indeed, a portion of it was hard enough to cut diamonds—an infallible test of the genuineness of the stone. Mr. MacTear submitted his process to several scientists, one of whom pointed out its fallibility.

Dr. C. V. Burton, a Cambridge scientist, improved greatly on Moissan's method, which required the application of a very high pressure. This Dr. Burton's process avoided. He manufactured hundreds of gems, which, though very small, were perfectly transparent. Even through a microscope they were difficult to see. This process involved the employment of a molten alloy of lead, with about 1 per cent. of calcium, holding in solution a proportion of carbon. Dr. Burton is of the opinion that his experiments have a scientific rather than a commercial interest.

So far, the insuperable difficulty has not been in the making of diamonds, but in producing them of such a size as to be of a marketable value.

At an Irish Fair.

LITTLE COMEDIES ENACTED IN BUSINESS TRANSACTIONS.

From Pall Mall Gazette.

IF a stranger in Ireland wished to study the national character in some of its richest and raciest features he could not do better than attend some of the fairs—and for preference those in which horses are the staple commodity—which are being constantly held in all kinds of convenient and inconvenient places. They are an indispensable element in the pastoral and agricultural life of a country which is a fruitful mother of flocks and herds. Cattle and horses have from time immemorial represented an important portion of the national wealth, and it is only natural that the great marts of exchange should absorb a great deal of the countryman's attention and bring into play some very strongly-marked characteristics. On the fair green the peasant appears in a role which he has created for himself. In the shrewd, humorous bargainer one would have difficulty in recognizing the melancholy dreamer so dear to the poet's perfervid imagination. His pose is not one thrust upon him by poet or preacher or politician. He may indulge in dreams at times, and undoubtedly there is something of the mystic in the typical Celtic Irishman, but when he goes out to sell a horse and to match his wits against all the diabolical ingenuity of the whole race of horse dealers, like a wise man he leaves his dreams and his mysticism at home. At all other public gatherings and celebrations, political or religious, he is under the influence of some commanding personality, but here he is his own man, transacting business of which he is complete master, meeting all sorts and conditions of men on level terms, self-confident and independent.

Irish fairs are heterogeneous assemblies. Farmers are, of course, in a big majority and are easily distinguished. Their attitudes, their deliberate gestures, the rustic cut of their clothes, the weatherbeaten features, and over all the indescribable stamp of the land, all proclaim the tiller of the soil. But in noisiness, in self-assertion, in rapid whirling speech, in violent transition from place to place, the dealers attract far more attention. Keen, sharp-faced, using eye and hand with lightning-like swiftness, they seem to be of a different race from the slow-moving and apparently dull-witted agriculturist. Wedged here and there through the crowd are to be met with representatives of every class in the country—clergymen, country gentlemen, professional men, shopkeepers, hawkers, jockeys, showmen, thimble riggers, basket women selling cheap fruit, the camp followers and idlers to whom the horse and all that belongs to him seem to have an insuperable attraction, and, of course, the inevitable policemen. Jostling one another and dodging the horses that charge in all directions like flying squadrons of cavalry provide ample occupation for most of the lookers-on. The greatest good humor is the dominant note. The freemasonry that binds together all lovers of horses helps to level artificial distinctions, and the element of speculation and chance which is the very medulla of a "deal" charges the air with excitement.

The great protagonists are of course the farmers and the dealers. The conventional attitude of each to the other is one of unrelenting hostility. The uninitiated hearing a buyer and seller in the throes of a transaction would imagine that nothing but bloodshed and eternal feud would be the upshot of the interchange. Another feature of the business is the complete inability of the principals to come to terms as a result of their own efforts. A number of friends on either side are enlisted to act as intermediaries to throw out hints to minimize the force of ultimatums and generally to exercise a diplomacy that would turn a Talleyrand sick with envy. A most rigidly-observed convention is that which implies that neither does the seller wish to sell nor the buyer to purchase. An Irish farmer bringing a colt to market endeavors to convey to the whole world by a thousand subtle indications that he is quite indifferent as to whether he sells or not. The dealer on his part, on the very verge of "pourparlers," loudly intimates to all within hearing that he is only "lookin' about him," that he has more horses on his hands than he knows what to do with, and that he would consider it a dire affliction to be obliged to have anything to do with the particular animal whose points he is just then considering with the intent eye of a connoisseur. Sometimes he affects amazement that any sane man should offer such a horse for sale. One thing seems absolutely clear. The animal in question in regard to age, color, size and general want of promise and performance is the exact opposite of the type which he might be tempted to buy. The seller and his friends smile with infinite superiority. Such is their detachment that it is with difficulty they can be prevailed on to even hint at a price.

Now and then an exquisite little comedy is played without a word being spoken on either side. A dealer will approach, look sadly at a horse, shake his head with mournful emphasis, sigh, and turn to the owner with an air of profound sympathy, shake his head [illegible] and move off dejectedly as if the bare idea of the [illegible] being offered for sale caused him actual physical [illegible] The owner of the horse turns his back ostentatiously [illegible] this silent pantomime or looks away to some [illegible] point is if unconscious of the dealers existence. [illegible] he catches the eye of a friend the drollery of the [illegible] which he expresses his appreciation of the tactics [illegible] make the fortune of a comedian.

But when it comes to a genuine bargain. "I'll [illegible] forty-five pound for him, and not a single shilling [illegible] 'Tis too chape he is at the money altogether, begor."

The dealer's jaw drops. He looks severely at the speaker as if trying to gauge the immorality of the [illegible] who would ask such a price.

"Arrah, is it mad you are, man alive?" he asks [illegible] he attains to speech. "You must have left your [illegible] five-pound horse at home. Be raisonable. Ax [illegible] thirty-five for him an' I'll try and buy him, although [illegible] heavens I don't like a bone in his body, the ugly, [illegible] baste."

The owner shakes his head and starts a conversation with a bystander apropos of nothing at all.

"Well here, I'll not affront you wid a bid. I'll give you thirty-five pound for him if you give me a couple of pound back. I don't want yer horse, remember, at all at all, but I don't like to lave you widout biddin' yez."

"Oh, I'm foriver obliged to you, Mister," the owner declares with pitying sarcasm. "But I don't want yer bid, and you can walk off wid yoursel, my party [illegible] You are only keepin' dacent men back that both [illegible] and cud buy the horse."

"Yerra, man, yer horse is no horse at all. Look at him wid wan knee knockin' electric sparks out of the other. Let him go aisy for a minute till we see if he can walk like a Christian baste and not like a [illegible] nut oul' dromedary."

The horse is walked and trotted and his limbs examined with hands as delicate in touch as those of a surgeon. Irregularities invisible to the eye reveal themselves to perceptive fingers, and the owner's confidence weakens as little defects are pointed out and exaggerated to grotesque dimensions. Now is the time for friends to intervene.

"Ax the dacent man forty pound an' see what he'll do," says one.

The owner consents after much pretended hesitation and then the real battle begins over the last five pounds. There are secret consultations, negotiations are completely broken off, the dealer wishing the horse [illegible] luck—this is a high point of etiquette—and departs with the gesture of a man who has looked his last. [illegible] he is brought back, to all appearances only yielding to the violence of his bottle holders. A Mr. Moloney [illegible] suggested that the last five pounds be torn in two [illegible] is the critical splitting of the difference.

"Not that I want the horse, begor," the dealer declares, "but I wouldn't for twinty horses break Mr. Moloney's word, and although 'tis just throwin' good money away, I'll stand up to what Mr. Moloney says."

The owner still refuses, but after much striking of hands, and eloquent protestation, he, too, consents to make the price thirty-seven and a half, "just out of respect to Mr. Moloney."

And so the honor of both belligerents is saved. [illegible] of the purchase money is always returned, "for luck," and there is generally a little breeze about this [illegible] nothing like the tempest of objurgation which accompanies the main engagement.

When the serious business of the fair is over, and especially when sales have been numerous and prices [illegible] the tension is relaxed. Friends and relatives from different parts of the country meet, and even the most sober-minded are infected with the spirit of [illegible] The acute business man of the morning, to whom speech and facial expression were but masks to conceal his [illegible] sentiments about human beings and horses, now throws off the unwonted restraint. Those who are convivially inclined have an uproarious time. Of late years, however, the old hard-drinking customs are dying out. [illegible] for a genuine exhibition of Celtic light-heartedness and abandon the finish of a crowded fair would be hard to beat.

For weeks afterward the fair is a favorite [illegible] around the firesides and at social gatherings. [illegible] breeding and horse dealing are not by any means exact sciences, and they have all the fascination of gambling. To be a good judge of a horse entitles a man in Ireland to something like veneration. And the man who in addition to being a judge can handle a horse [illegible] fully is a person of real distinction in his district. [illegible] men are naturally proud of the world-wide reputation of their horses, and while the national predominance [illegible] this respect is maintained, the "fun of the fair" will always be an outlet for a considerable amount of [illegible] abundant Celtic vitality.

BARK FOR A LIVING.

A new profession, known as that of the "two-legged dogs," has been introduced by the Paris authorities.

A tax of eight shillings a year is imposed on each dog, and the owners are supposed to declare them themselves. Many of the owners evade the tax by giving four shillings a year to their concierge. When the local authorities make inquiries the concierge denies the existence of the dogs, and the revenue is defrauded.

The authorities are now paying £6 a month to a number of men who can bark. The men walk along the streets at night, bark outside every house, and when a dog replies take note of the address and send round the Tax Collector.

It is a hard-working profession, but for those [illegible] who have failed to get an engagement at the opera [illegible] are fond of exercise it means bread and butter.—[illegible] Correspondence London Express.

Good Short Stories.

BRIEF ANECDOTES GATHERED FROM VARIOUS SOURCES.

Compiled for The Times.

Poor Land.

FRANK RUCH, the keeper of the buffalo herd in the national forest of Oklahoma, was talking in his office the other day about some poor fodder that he had refused.

"Poor stuff it was," said the ex-cowboy. "It must have grown on poor land. The land must have been as poor as—as poor as——"

He laughed.

"Once," he said, "a Kansas farmer met on the hot, dusty road a homesteader pushing on excitedly toward the Cherokee Strip.

"'Whar ye bound?' said the farmer.

"'Fer a hunderd and sixty acres o' free land in the Strip,' was the reply. And the man vanished in the pillar of dust and sunshine.

"Well, a month or two went by, and on the same dusty road the Kansas farmer met the homesteader returning.

"'Hello,' he said, 'what ye done with them hunderd and sixty acres?'

"The homesteader pointed his whip proudly toward his mule team.

"'See them mules?' said he. 'Wall, I traded eighty acres of my claim fer 'em.'

"'What ye do with the other eighty?'

"'Don't gimme away,' was the reply, 'but the feller was a tenderfoot, an' I run in the other eighty acres on him without his knowin' it.'"

Ouida Was Shocked.

"I NEVER went to Florence," said a magazine editor of New York, "without visiting Ouida. This [illegible] woman of genius, with her white gowns, her white mittens, her horses and her dogs, had many eccentricities.

"But in her eccentricities lay always a seed of common sense. Take her hatred of the décolleté bodice, for instance. There's common sense in that, isn't there?

"Discussing this bodice one afternoon at tea, she nodded from the window toward a beautiful princess who was driving by, the Princess Orsini-Vecchi.

"'This princess,' she said, 'summoned her maid one morning and complained:

"'Dolores, I have been informed that you wore my [illegible] dinner gown at the guides' and cicerones' ball last night. You ought to be ashamed of yourself.'

"Dolores burst into tears.

"'I was ashamed, madam,' she answered, wringing her hands; 'I was, indeed. Beppo, my young man, said if I was ever seen again in public in such a costume, then he'd jilt me.'"

[illegible] Game.

"MANY witticisms fell daily from the lips of our late King," said a Portuguese consul.

"The King was, you know, a splendid shot. At a dinner the rather inferior shooting of an English visitor was praised, and someone said:

"'And Lord Gadabout, you know, sends everything he shoots to the hospitals.'

"The King laughed, and taking the long, black cigar from his lips, he said:

"'Naturally: since he never shoots anything but keepers.'"

Mean Farmer.

A LEADING official in the Young Men's Christian Association of New York said the other day of the late Morris K. Jesup:

"Mr. Jesup's charity was even broader than his wealth. Equally, then, he hated parsimony. I never saw him angry save when some instance of parsimony would turn up.

"Then he told us here of a particularly mean trick that had been played upon him by a multimillionaire. He said the man had inherited his meanness. His father, a Westport farmer, had been famed as a miser all over Connecticut.

"The farmer's cousin died in the sixties, and the old man attended the reading of the will, for he had hopes. And, sure enough, in one of the later codicils a [illegible] eight-acre field was left him.

"As the bequest was read out, the farmer sat up in his chair, rubbed his hands, and smiled delightedly round the room.

"But the lawyer, reading on, made known that the good gray mare then grazing in said field was bequeathed to a nephew.

"At this news the farmer clacked his lips in rage, and said excitedly:

"'Then she's eatin' my grass.'"

Questions Were Pertinent.

HEINRICH CONRIED, the retiring manager of the Metropolitan Operahouse, said at a recent dinner in New York:

"In that crisis I made a mistake, as queer a mistake as one that was made last week by a friend of mine, a Lutheran clergyman.

"This clergyman had advertised for a butler, and one morning after breakfast a well-dressed, clean-shaven young man in black was ushered into his study.

"'Name, please?' said the clergyman.

"'Henry Arbuthnot, sir.'

"'Age?'

"'Twenty-eight.'

"'What work have you been accustomed to?'

"'I am a lawyer, sir.'

"The clergyman started. This was odd. However, as he knew, many were called in the law, few chosen.

"'But,' he said, 'do you understand the conduct of a household?'

"'In a general way, yes,' murmured the applicant.

"'Can you carve?'

"'Yes.'

"'Wash glass and silver?'

"'I—er—think so.' The young man seemed embarrassed. He frowned and blushed. Just then the clergyman's wife entered.

"'Are you married'? was her first question.

"'That,' said the young man, 'was what I called to see your husband about, madam. I desire to know if he can make it convenient to officiate at my wedding at noon next Thursday week.'"

Right for Once.

IN an argument upon modern philanthropy, of which, as it is usually conducted, he disapproves, Prof. Charles Zeublin of the University of Chicago had for opponent a charity expert.

In the argument's course the expert pointed out a case where his society, stepping in with financial aid, unquestionably saved the lives of an entire family.

"Now what do you say to that?" the expert triumphantly demanded.

"Oh," grumbled Prof. Zeublin, "even modern philanthropy will do good sometimes. It is like the case of a West Side Mrs. Malaprop. The rain fell in torrents as she came out of church after the Lenten service the other afternoon, and she had no umbrella, and she had not ordered her carriage.

"'How irritating this is!' she exclaimed."

Few and Far Between.

CARUSO, the great tenor, listened with a sour smile the other day to a critic's defense of American banks.

"A very good defense," he said, "but to one who has suffered from your too frequent bank suspensions it seems weak."

He curled his mustache and smiled.

"Weak, weak, very weak," he said. "It reminds me of an incident I witnessed in a railway restaurant in the West.

"A man near me in this restaurant called for an oyster stew. When the stew was brought to him, he looked at it with a critical frown, and then he began excitedly to peel off his coat and vest.

"'What's the matter? What's the matter?' said the landlord, hurrying to the table.

"The man looked at the stew, then at the landlord, and said:

"'Bet you $5 I can swim from one oyster to another.'"

No Need to.

"IF you please, sir, father says he's going to kill a pig, and can you do with a side of bacon?"

"Yes, my boy," said the country schoolmaster. "Tell him to send it as soon he likes."

A week passed away, and as the bacon had not arrived, the teacher reminded the boy of his order.

"I expect you forgot to tell your father, you young rascal," said the schoolmaster.

"Oh, no, sir; I didn't," said the youngster. "My father hasn't killed the pig."

"How's that, Tommy?"

"Please, sir, it's got better."—[Pearson's Weekly.

Woeful Waste.

LITTLE PETER'S mother had a thrifty mind and on every possible occasion she instilled the ethics of economy into her offspring. He was taught never to throw away anything that was good or whole, and evidently the advice sank deeply into his infantile brain.

One afternoon Peter's mother and the few friends who had assembled to take tea with her were startled by the little boy appearing at the door triumphantly holding a dead cat aloft by the tail.

"Look, mummie," he cried gleefully, "see what I found in the road—a perfeckly good cat that some one has thrown away."—[Pearson's Weekly.

A Question of Veracity.

"I AM sorry, my dear neighbor," said Mehemed, in reply to Ali's request, "but I cannot please you. My son took the donkey this morning to the next village."

"I assure you," insisted Ali, "I shall take the very best care of him, my dear neighbor."

"Can you not take my word?" demanded Mehemed with a show of anger. "I tell you the donkey is out."

"But"—at this point the donkey began to bray loudly. "There. That is the donkey braying now.

"Well," said the justly indignant Mehemed, "if you would rather take my donkey's word than my word, we can be friends no longer, and under no circumstances can I lend you anything."—[Everybody's Magazine.

Went to the Point.

THE boy who goes straight to the point may make a few technical blunders, but as a rule he is about right when it comes to anything practical. A story told of the boyhood of Gen. Leonard Wood illustrates this fact.

"I remember one day in school," said a friend recently, "Wood was called up in the grammar class. The teacher said:

"'Leonard, give me a sentence, and we'll see if we can change it to the imperative mood.'

"'The horse draws the cart,' said Leonard.

"'Very good. The horse draws the cart. Now change the sentence to an imperative.'

"'Get up!' said young Wood."—[Home Magazine.

Chalking up a Race.

TWO Irishmen were about to run a race to a certain tree by different routes. Suddenly Mike slapped Pat on the back and asked how they were to tell who reached the destination first. After a moment's thought, Pat answered:

The Greater Evil.

ALONZO DE CAROLA, the famous Jamaican exporter of sun-dried turtle, was in New York last month looking after the American turtle trade, which enormously increases during Lent.

In Mr. Carola's office a reporter, picking up a clear, amber-like strip of sun-dried turtle—it resembled a strip of gelatine, and it was worth about $2 a mouthful—said eagerly:

"Tell me how you dry this? It will make a good paragraph."

And he took out his pencil and his yellow copy paper.

But Mr. Carola smiled and shook his head.

"Divulge the inmost secrets of my profession? Really, sir, you are inquisitive. You are worse than the natives of Quohang.

"You must know," he went on, "that a stranger of foreign aspect arrived in Quohang recently, and after a three days' stay, lo! no native of that most inquisitive of towns knew his name, his residence, the purport of his sojourn, nothing.

"Well, at the close of the third day, a Quohang gentleman could restrain his curiosity no longer. He called on the dark, foreign-looking stranger at the inn. The two men shook hands, and then, after a rather awkward silence, the inquisitor began:

"'May I ast your name, stranger?'

"'Pedro Mantilla,' was the reply.

"'Be ye goin' to stay long in these parts?'

"Mantilla took out his watch and a huge time table, and after consulting the two, he answered solemnly:

"'Just three days, four hours and twenty-six minutes.'

"The native started; he frowned, but Mantilla's air was gentle and mild. He might be eccentric. He was certainly no disrespectful josher.

"'Wall, Mr. Mantiller,' said the Quohang gentleman, and he drew a large plug of tobacco from his pocket and, holding it before him, considered the best corner from which to take a chew—'wall, Mantiller, wot's yer business here in our midst?'

"Pedro Mantilla laid his long finger on his lip.

"'Hist!' he said. 'I don't wish it generally known, but I am a Portuguese revolutionary.'

"'No!' said the Quohang man, starting back and dropping his plug on the floor. 'No!'

"'Fact!' said the other.

"'But wot's fotched ye here?'

"'Well, you see,' said the stranger, 'they arrested me during the trouble last month, and sentenced me to twenty years in Lisbon jail or a week in Quohang, and I was fool enough to choose Quohang.'"

Poor Economy.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL HENKEL had completed in New York the sale of thousands of dollars' worth of Paris gowns smuggled unsuccessfully in by women.

"It is poor economy, this smuggling, this saving of the legal duty," Marshal Henkel said. "Poor economy, foolish economy. It reminds me of a Philadelphia woman.

"Worn out with the winter's gaieties, this Philadelphia woman went to Atlantic City to pass Lent restfully. She departed in a very weak, rundown condition, and her husband was dreadfully shocked—yet not incredulous, either—when he received one day this wire:

"'Come down to Atlantic City at once. I am dying.—Helen.'

"The wretched man slammed down the lid of his desk, grabbed his hat, and reached Atlantic City by the first express.

"In a ravishing toilet his wife was at the station to meet him with the hotel motor bus.

"'But—but——' he stammered, 'what did you mean by that telegram about dying?'

"Oh,' she explained, laughing, 'I wanted to say that I was dying to see you, but my ten words ran out, and I had to stop.'"

A Hard Hit.

MARTIN W. LITTLETON, the eminent New York lawyer, is noted for his trenchant wit.

"At the beginning of his career," said an Albany judge the other day, "Littleton had an elderly, prosy, long-winded lawyer for an opponent in an assault case.

"The elderly lawyer in his concluding address spoke for six hours—an interminable, foggy, stupid speech. Then Littleton rose. He smiled slightly, looked at judge and jury, and said:

"'Your Honor, I will follow the example of my learned friend who has just concluded, and submit the case without argument.'"

The House Beautiful—Its Flower Garden and Grounds.

TIMELY TOPICS.

SOMETHING ABOUT GREENHOUSES AND THEIR USES.

By Ernest Braunton.

HE who has a greenhouse, a warm window with plenty of light, or any suitable place for starting seeds indoors, should sow now for plants suitable for placing in the garden after all danger of frost is past. If one has the greenhouse, either with or without heat, he may also propagate bedding and border plants from cuttings. Among the bedding plants most commonly used are Aceyranthes (properly Iresines,) Ageratum, Althernantheras, Coleus, Salvias, and Santolina. Some of these are of that ugly beet-top color which we have always tried to discourage the use of, but they are included for the reason that some people want them and profess to like them.

Bottom heat either in greenhouse of a hotbed made with stable manure will prove a great aid by insuring success, and in all cases bringing a much greater proportion of the cuttings to root. However, unless one has a large house, such conveniences do not pay, and the average garden owners would better rely on the nurseryman for needed plants. For those who wish to experiment, the following is recommended: Make all cuttings with a sharp knife, occasionally wiped clean, cutting through at an angle of about 45 degrees, just below a bud or eye. Insert these cuttings in a box of clean, sharp sand in rows. Do not force them down, but use a lath or other straight edge by laying on sand and making a cut in the wet sand with a piece of shingle, old table knife or similar utensil, and after insertion of cuttings press the sand back against them, and water well. After this, keep damp—not wet—yet never allow to dry, and see that drainage is good by first boring a few small holes through bottom of box.

Begonias of the tuberous-rooted section may be grown from seeds indoors, and it is also time to plant seeds of torrenias which are of a like delicate nature and suitable for the same positions—whole or partial shade. The bulbs of tuberous begonias may also be planted now, though a little early for the garden. They had better be started in pots during this month and planted out in April. A soil of one-third each of sand, leaf mold, and good garden loam is ideal for this or any other class of begonias, and this should always be the composition for pot culture. Remember in placing the dormant bulb on soil that the hollow side should be up. Set pots away in cool shady spot until tops show through soil, and then gradually inure to sun. Every year marks an improvement in this class of begonias, and no garden is complete without them. They range from white to deep orange and crimson, both single and double.

A Native Yellow-Flowering Currant.

For the past month visitors to the foothill cañons may have seen a fine yellow flowering currant, a showy shrub well worthy of transplanting to the garden. The pendant long-tubed blossoms hang thickly on all the branches, and are succeeded by small, very seedy currants of no food value except to birds and some of our smaller mammals. This species (Ribes tenuiflorum) and the scarlet gooseberry (R. speciosum,) which is also now in bloom, are both good garden shrubs. The currants are spineless, the gooseberries have spines.

American Laurels.

The name American Laurels has been given to the genus Kalmia, which inhabits the Atlantic Coast in the main, though one western species comes below the northern line of California. They easily rival the famed rhododendrons in beauty, and are far less particular as to soil and position. It is best, however, to plant Kalmias in partial shade in Southern California, and provide them with peat or leaf mold for soil; if you have none, put them in old much-used garden soil, such as we call a heavy loam. They will not thrive in sand, gravel or clay, but will almost grow in a swamp. If swamp muck could be mixed with leaf mold or garden loam Kalmia latifolia will prove a fine plant for partially-shaded positions, either planted out or as a pot plant. More of these planted in the south would greatly enrich our gardens.

The Unppreciated Andromeda.

In horticulture we have a number of fine dwarf shrubs of the heath family, suitable for peaty or sandy soils, known as Andromedas. It is only fair to the botanist and oft-derided scientific "fellows" to state that these are seldom true Andromedas, but belong to closely-allied genera, but we will not quarrel with either nurery-man or gardener, for we need more of these charming little shrubs in every garden. All need plenty of water and partial shade.

Small Shrubs for Shade.

For low-growing shrubs for shady places or for pot culture, we do not make sufficient use of the aucubas and ardesias. The main reason why they are not more extensively planted is that the general public knows but one form of each, but "there are others."

Spines and Prickles.

Ever since hollies and barberries were extensively planted at Singleton Court in Los Angeles and proven to do well in our climate they are slowly becoming popularized and each year notes their more extensive planting. Avoid sandy or clayey soils and do not line the ground or put them in the hottest, sunniest locations and all hollies and barberries will do well. Especially are they suited to northern slopes and shaded nooks. The foliage and berries of all species are both beautiful and interesting and land a charming variety to shrub groups otherwise monotonous and unattractive. When large hollies were planted in the garden noted several English gardeners predicted failure, but all have grown so rapidly that they have been heavily pruned many times and have also produced large crops of berries of the most vivid scarlet.

The Good Old Chicory.

Those wishing a clump of easily-grown, old-fashioned flowers of good color, lasting quality and real merit, should sow a few seeds of common chicory (Cichorium Intybus.) We have no plant in our gardens that produces a deeper or clearer shade of blue, nor any that needs less care in order to produce a crop of blossoms. Grown in a field of common alfalfa, this plant thrusts up its spikes of fine flowers much faster than does the alfalfa, and is much showier in form and color. Having a deeply-penetrating perennial root, all it needs is a good water supply. Try some; it is quite a favorite in some parts of the world.

Inviting Entrances.

We should have the entrance to our grounds present a friendly and inviting aspect, not a stern and forbidding one. Make it say (figuratively) "come in" rather than "stay out" or even "for business only." Make it look as though friendliness and hospitality dwelt just beyond. This cannot be accomplished by the use of two stone dogs or bare stone pillars, nor a hedge sheared to an architectural squareness. Make both entrance and grounds on a par with Riley's advice: "Say hello and how'd ye do;" (other folks is good ez you.)

NATIVE YELLOW FLOWERING CURRANT.

For Rocks, Gravel or Land.

Growers of cacti and other succulents are very fond of one of the large stone crops (Sedum spectabile) which is handsome in foliage and produces large trusses of fine pink flowers throughout a very considerable portion of the year. For the driest situations and poorest soils it has much to commend it, for under circumstances and conditions necessarily fatal to most plants it thrives marvelously. Given heavy, rich soil with plenty of water, it runs all to vegetative growth, produces no flowers and often rots away in the roots. Even then the tops readily root and blossom if given rational treatment.

Our Glorious Clematis.

The time is at hand when you may plant clematis with impunity—and a garden trowel. We have so many glorious garden hybrids that a choice of kinds is hard to make, better plant several, always where the roots at least, may be in cool, shaded soil. The writer has four glorious sorts, and all are just now putting forth the first leaves for the season's growth. Henryi is the largest, and pure white; Mrs. Hope is also a giant of a delicate lilac color; Marcel Moser is "simply a dream," if we accept the comments of the gentler sex, a light pink with a deep mauve stripe down the center of each petal; Gypsy Queen is a beautiful wine-color or reddish-purple, one of the indescribable but lovely "lake" shades. There are plenty of other good sorts on the market.

ACACIAS FOR STREETS.

DIFFERENT VARIETIES AND SUGGESTIONS AS TO THEIR USE.

JUST now the acacias are in the full glory of their season of bloom, and the street-tree student may select his favorite—not an easy task, for so many excellent species and varieties are among the possibilities that one is at times bewildered with much luxuriance of bloom on trees of various form and foliage. Least showy of all is the Blackwood (A. melanoxylon,) one of the entire-leaved section and most glorious, though for a short period, is A. Baileyana, a species with a finely-divided fern-like leaf of bluish tinge or glaucous-green. Used on the street this latter species would need to be well pruned, but is wonderfully resistant to drought. The Blackwood, of sober gray-green foliage is least drought-resistant of our more species, and thrives best in low flat lands having a deep and rather heavy soil.

A. decurrens, known locally as black wattle; A. dealbata, the silver wattle; and A. molissima, the green wattle, are the best three of all for street planting, and of these the showiest when in bloom and the most satisfactory to the writer at all times, is A. dealbata; though the more somber-foliaged A. decurrens is a faster grower and a most excellent street tree. Any of the three are equally satisfactory either in street or garden; and all are grown, in various parts of the world for the production of tanbark. A commercial plantation of great extent must present an almost dazzling sight when viewed at the height of its blooming season. Two other species of the entire-leafed section are also in use upon our streets, both eventually making a good, large tree, slower in growth than those listed: A. longifolia and A. floribunda. The former if kept trimmed up and back for a few years assumes a handsome form and will dispute the title of the most beautiful with any that blossoms, for it bears its blooms in catkins, like yellow pussy willows." The greater number we grow, like two or three varieties known as A. floribunda, bloom in globular heads or tiny balls. A. saligna, A. latifolia, A. [illegible], A. primrosa; and in moist situations, well grown A. pycnantha (golden wattle,) all give good results when planted for street ornamentation. Planters of street trees, and especially of acacias, should prepare deep, wide holes, water well at frequent intervals during the first summer (at least,) prune whenever needed, and exercise the same judicious care over them as is given to fruit-bearing trees. When this is done, we shall see street trees more nearly approaching the ideal, certainly superior in every way to any we now have. The planting season is the present. Get busy.

Why Are Our Factories So Ugly?

[illegible] newspaper articles are written about improvement of public streets; magazines galore are published devoted to beautifying homes and grounds; prizes are offered to certain classes of people as an incentive toward [illegible] backyards; public playgrounds are established and school yards tastefully kept. We pass judgment on all these things, and call them good. In this [illegible] where vegetation grows with almost no cultivation, and where to beautify at least the exterior and grounds of our manufactories would require so little effort, this should be done not only for the moral and esthetic influence on the employés, but really as an advertising feature, always showing tourists that even workingshops can be made beautiful by nature, in our California.

Not one, but many travelers have remarked about the vine-covered water tank (practical thing, truly,) at a certain station near Los Angeles, on the Salt Lake Railroad. The eye and mind are rested at seeing a bit of greenery there. The electric power-houses stationed at intervals all the way from Pomona Valley to several thousand feet above, in San Antonio Cañon, show what can be done in simple landscape gardening in waste places; every weary climber, coming around a bend in the trail up there among the mountains, can assure you that the vision of blooming flowers, well-kept lawn, and maybe a fountain, is a welcome sight.

The writer has in mind two factories; one so pretty and refreshing that the passer-by thinks it must be a pleasure to sit near the low open windows in summer and glance out occasionally from the work of cutting leather and hammering tacks, for it is a shoe factory in Holland, Mich., to which I refer, to a plot of fresh green grass. That glance does not detract from the work, but makes the fingers more nimble and the mind more clear. Must we of the Golden West go back East to find the beautiful in nature combined with utility in supplying needs of our bodies? Can we have no such ornamental practical factories of our own? Another, perhaps more pretentious, is the home of the famous Rookwood pottery, in Cincinnati. Do you doubt that the influence of these beautiful surroundings on the artists who decorate this ware, works out through their active fingers? Our ground is as fertile, our workingmen as appreciative, our own minds as esthetic as any in the East. Let us look to our factories, at least to the extent of improving them by the addition of a few clinging vines to hide and soften the glare of walls and the harsh, conventional outlines of the buildings.

A TYPICAL CORK OAK.

The Handsome Cork Oak.

One who has watched the Cork Oak in Southern California for several years cannot but be impressed with its unusual value in street, park, or garden; it is a tree of most exceptional beauty, and not surpassed in appearance by any oak that grows. For street planting or general use it is a far better tree than our native live oak, and is not sufficiently appreciated, for its merit dictates a much more extensive planting than has been accorded it up to date.

A Blue-Flowering Street Tree.

For our warmer localities we have an excellent tree in Jacaranda ovalifolia, a native to Brazil belonging to the Bignonia family (Bignoniaceae.) In our colder spots it gets an occasional nip from Jack Frost, which renders it unsightly for some time. This tree does not not appear particularly out of place in any soil or location, but like all trees, thrives best under best treatment. The writer has been watching some on Belleview avenue, in Los Angeles, for nearly a score of years; they are growing on the crown of a hill, under hard conditions, yet doing full as well as the average street tree. In suitable soil under reasonably good treatment the Jacaranda makes a fine, umbrageous growth that appeals to all tree lovers. A long avenue planted to these trees would, when in full bloom, attract more attention and admiration than if planted to any other tree we grow.

The Carob Tree.

Out at Glendora, on E. O. Kennard's place, are a few Carobs or St. John's Bread (Ceratonia Siliqua) that clearly show the adaptability of this tree to our drier situations, and together with a double row at Hollywood and two large lawn trees at Fourteenth and Main streets, Los Angeles, prove that any soil, climate, or treatment will produce a satisfactory growth in this tree whether in street or garden.

Practical Poultry Culture in the Southwest.

DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF STANDARD-BRED POULTRY AND THE PEOPLE WHO GROW IT.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

SOME THINGS "TIMES" READERS WANT TO KNOW.

By Henry W. Kruckeberg.

NOTE.—Short articles of a practical nature are cordially solicited from breeders and fanciers, relating their experience with poultry, giving their successes as well as failures. The writer will be glad, in so far as lies in his power, to answer inquiries of public interest bearing on any phase of an enlightened poultry culture, such as feeding and management, disease and its prevention, market conditions, fancy points, etc. The co-operation of utility breeders and fanciers is cordially solicited, to the end that the best thought and practice in an enlightened poultry culture may find a healthy expression in these columns.

JOHN STONE, Glendale, writes to know at what temperature Indian Runner ducklings ought to be kept in when taken from the incubator, and how long they usually require to be kept in a heated brooder.

In brooding ducklings they are usually left in the incubator for twenty-four hours before removed to the brooder. If small, not more than fifty should be kept together; as many as 150 may, however, be started in each pen of a large brooder-house. Begin the heat at about 90 degrees and continue for a week or ten days, then gradually reduce until they get used to a temperature of 70 degrees, which should be when about three weeks old. Watch them carefully and note how they act. If at night on closing the house up, they are stretched out on the brooder floor with their bills in the sand, well and good; if crowded together and unsettled, more warmth; if they sit around with open mouths, less heat. Ducklings do not need heat as long as chickens, and at three to six weeks (depending somewhat on the weather) should be able to do without artificial heat.

Mrs. A. F. G., Pomona, writes as follows: "My chickens look healthy, and their combs bright, but all at once they become droopy and their eyes half-closed with that sleepy look. They stand or sit around that way for days, then perhaps die. Then I have some that their combs will turn so dark that they are almost black, and these will sometimes get swelled eyes and often lose the sight."

It is to be regretted that you were not more specific in your descriptions. Fowls given to general listlessness without symptoms of specific disease indicate indigestion, due to overfeeding and want of exercise. Correct the diet and make them "get busy." Dark purplish comb and face, general ruffled appearance, and a brownish watery discharge indicate congestion of the liver; if the discharge is yellowish it is inflammation of the liver. If allowed to reach this stage, it is usually fatal. Liver diseases are due to overfeeding. Use a good liver pill, and of course remedy conditions. If the nostrils discharge profusely and are ill-smelling, it indicates roup and influenza, which is indeed a bad thing in a flock. In severe cases, kill the afflicted birds and burn the carcass or bury it deep, as the disease is contagious. If only a cold, any of the roup remedies to be had at the supply stores are good.

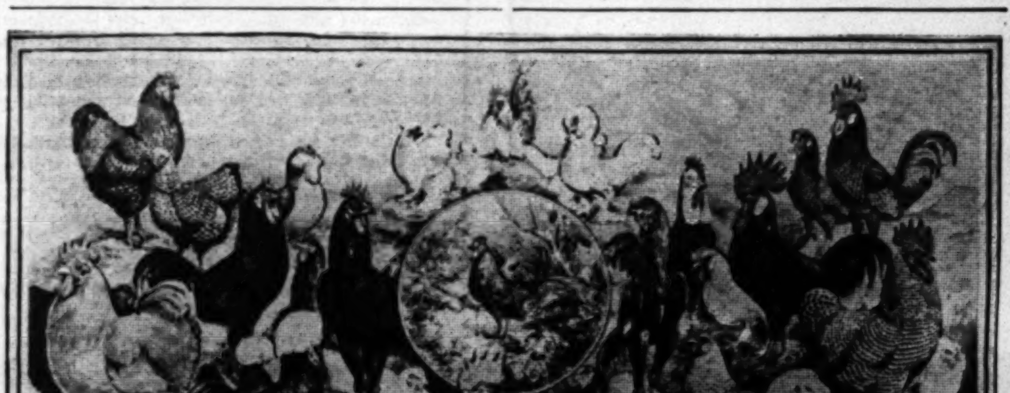
Mrs. W. S. Santa Paula, writes to know where she can secure some Silver Spangled Polish. We presume she means Hamburgs, as there are no S. S. Polish, but Silver Bearded. There is no doubt but her wants can be supplied by consulting the liner advertisement in this issue of The Times; if not, a want advertisement to that effect will be sure to give results.

Mrs. M. E. Ewing, Norwalk, writes as follows: "Will you please publish why chickens die in the egg just before hatching? It would be of great interest to poultry raisers all through the country."

That is a rather broad question, as the trouble may result from a variety of causes. What to do when chicks are hatching is best answered by Mr. Campbell, an experienced operator of incubators, as follows: "To get out the largest number of chicks I wait until a lot of the shells are pipped; then I open the machine, and as rapidly as possible turn all the pips up, and place the eggs as close to the door as possible. Those which pip in the air cell are safe, those which pip below, very often choke at once if not turned up promptly. When they begin to come, keep an eye on them—all that can turn around and break through the shell and membrane will get out best alone; those which turn and do not break, though every time they move will be apt to smother. All such need help by pulling off the top part of the shell to give them air, and then let them come out. This must never be done until the chick is struggling to get out; neither must the trays be pulled out. Open the door and reach in, and work as quick as possible."

The Jungle Fowl.

No other one thing lends so great an interest to the student in poultry culture as the consideration of the fact that all our diversity of breeds and varieties are the descendants of Gallus Bankiva—the native jungle fowl of India. And allowing further for the fact that the natural (original) color of our domesticated fowl was red and black, it is all the more surprising and wonderful that all this diversity of type and color of plumage should come about by man's intervention with the laws of nature or rather natural selection. The Games of our day come as near to resembling the native bird as any breed we have; indeed, the few exhibits that we have seen strongly suggest the Black Breasted Red Games, being a trifle heavier than the bantams of the breed when at their best, and smaller than the standards of the same breed. The evolution and convolution of breeds is altogether too intricate a subject to treat of in a short skit, even when tracing the life history of some of our modern varieties. When attempts are made to trace it over almost the entire period of our Christian era, we beg to leave the problem to the Darwins, Newtons, Tegetmeiers and other naturalist students, to whom we must refer the breeder and fancier who cares to delve.



RED JUNGLE FOWL (GALLUS BANKIVA) IN CENTER. SURROUNDED BY MANY OF ITS DESCENDANTS.

In spite of that, however, it is a wonderful study in bird life to learn the processes that have taken place in the evolution of the poultry industry from an insignificant beginning with the jungle fowl, until it represents an annual output in this country alone aggregating over $600,000,000, with proportionate values covering every civilized nation on the globe. Taking into consideration the natural history of our domesticated poultry, is it any wonder that breeds and varieties vary more or less from generation to generation in type and color of plumage? On sober thought, is it not remarkable that the skill of the breeder can warp and bend the bird so well to his liking and fancy, as experience shows to be possible? Which again brings us back to the query, Is color hereditary or structural?

Soil in Poultry Yards.

Where poultry is confined in small pens the care of the soil is an important consideration. By letting the droppings stay in the original heaps during six weeks of winter weather, a general spread of chicken pox will prevail. The lowest begins to rot and inflame the fresh, and no pure air gets to the fowls, while on the ground. Great care should be taken to avoid chicken pox. Where fowls are confined in small quarters the droppings should be taken out every day and heaped in the sun to dry and make fertilizer. The less fertile one can keep the yards the better for fowls, because they breathe air so near the soil, and cannot make any good use of the gases, which arise from decay, and which vegetation thrives upon. What animal life throws off as refuse vegetable life depends upon. Removing the refuse of fowls, before it can enter the soil upon which they live, is the greatest preventive of disease possible.

If the excrement be not round and firm, something is wrong with the feeding, and should be studied at once. A feed of boiled rice, or a mash with ginger, which are very constipating by nature, should be fed at once, and the soil which has absorbed the liquid excrement be turned over by spading ten or twelve inches deep. It is a genuine calamity to have a general case of bowel complaint in a small yard. If the soil be not turned, and the hens cared for, by the time they rally from the one trouble, chicken pox will attack them, and then roup. Sick hens never lay eggs, and are not fit to kill and eat. The defeats of the home flock in a small inclosure are largely due to neglecting the soil upon which they are confined; in not removing round, firm droppings every morning, and in not keeping it soft by plowing with a hand plow or spading.

The Well-Balanced Ration.

This department cannot recommend different kinds of food as being "the best;" neither can it give "the best" formulae for a well-balanced ration; neither can it give columns of remedies from pink pills for pale hens to liver pads for cock birds. One would suppose from reading some of the poultry literature of the day that the sick hen was the rule and the healthy one the exception—which is a delightful thought to people who order their spring chicken at their meals. The truth of the matter is that of late years proprietary chick and poultry foods have been put upon the market and sold at prices below those at which the average poultry raiser can buy the raw materials in the open market and do their own mixing. So pronounced has this phase of the business grown that many of the large breeders are buying their preparatory foods in ton and car lots—which is only another way of saying that it is the economic thing to do. As for disease among poultry, it is no more pronounced than with any other line of live stock. As a matter of fact, poultry culture, properly followed, is as free from drawbacks of this kind as almost any other division of our rural economy. Give a flock of this proper conditions and a healthy environment and you will never be called upon to refer queries to the care of the poultry body department of The Times.

The Man Behind the Hens.

Paid a big price for birds, that you might get hens to lay 250 eggs a year, and they are not laying well at all yet. Think you have been "done," eh? Before deciding that you have, consider yourself and see if you are as good a manager as the man from whom you bought the fowls. Without any doubt you are a poor manager of hens. A change of diet from one manager to another, even a change of environment, will stop the laying propensity of the hen for a time. She is a machine, and has to lay, if the obliging things are fed and put about her. Either the novelty of the new environment has not worn off or the necessary things are not fed her. Go to the breeder and tell him frankly how you stand, and he will be glad to put you right.

Albinos or Sports.

It is true that all white fowls are albinos, and that albinos are delicate as solitary specimens or freaks; but after they are bred inter se and built into a distinct breed, they become strong indeed. A White Plymouth Rock or Minorca is as strong a bird as a Barred or Black, while a white chick from a Barred Plymouth Rock or Black Minorca would be a delicate one, one hard to raise. Black Minorcas often throw albinos, and are interesting to the scientific breeder for so doing. In breeding Black Breasted Red Game Bantams, it is very interesting to grow the white sports or albinos, which are not infrequent, but very delicate. The Mendel law explains what to expect of heredity in building a new breed.

Turkeys in Our Mountains.

The area in which that grand native game bird, the turkey, can be found on this continent is indeed a one. Civilization plays sad havoc with wild and animal life, as witness the lordly King Buffalo plains and the wild turkey. Of the latter, we be- there are still a few stray birds in the wilds of and Arkansas, and not a few in Old Mexico. In- it is from the latter country that it is proposed to acclimate them in the San Bernardino Mountains foothills. W. E. Van Slyke has closed a contract the Fish and Game Commission whereby he will four months or more in the State of Sinaloa on west coast of Mexico and where wild turkeys are in abundance. He has orders to get just as many can.

"I expect to leave for the south within a month," said Van Slyke in discussing the matter. "I will proceed aymas by rail and thence by steamer to Mazatlan, which place the wild turkeys are found. Back the coast a ways are the foothills of the Sierra mountains, and between these flow many streams of the wide gulches. In these foothills and gulches many wild turkeys."

The experiment will be watched with more than pass- interest. Whether certain regions of our mountains foothills supply the conditions and environment for the turkey has a liking is problematical; if the taking proves feasible, it argues that turkey cul- be made a success. chicks, 100 for $15, from stock which is the of the Coast." Does it pay to "bother" with It all depends upon the personal valuational conditions. To the fancier eggs were never known bother. Incubating eggs is one long sequence labors, to the lover of fine poultry. Dickering as one is able with an incubator full of promises, is one continual delight, and the defeats go with it, only make it all the more interesting. who is conscious about the "bother" there is eggs, has a valuation of conditions which conducive to the best there is in poultry business. many people are not adapted to the business.

first place, consider the advertiser. Being true marrow of his bones, and sure he has the cream Coast in his stock, does not mean that he has. who has bred poultry long enough to get fine thinks honestly he has the best stock. We may not have it. The best judges in a big show failed to show a man his weakness many a time; working for the best are the pioneers of all in- and each most welcome to his valuation of Not infrequently the man with poor stock ad- much the same as the pioneer, and has more to The selling of day-old incubator chicks is compara- new branch of the industry. It is like a dream with $15 and take home 100 little chicks that look good a day old. It is not so dreamlike a month probably, because a breeder who has hatched 100 stock, which is the cream of the Coast, can better than to sell them a day old. Having faith stock, he will make the most he can out of it. The who sells day-old chicks and also breed- can't afford to sell his best a day old. a few fanciers, who are business men in other have not time to grow much poultry, but hav- stock and eggs, are able to run an incubator and chicks. The running of an incubator takes and morning, and leaves a business day quite Such men can sell fine chicks, it being a genuine for a fancier; to such the "bother" with eggs of experience.

another way to consider the advertiser of day- for him who has found "bother" incubating day-old chicks which a big breeder sells by the hundred may be as good as a man wants. The poorest a big breeder incubates are better than store eggs. The person who can't afford to spend much money starting a family flock may get his money value paying $15 for 100 day-old chicks, because he can eat up the poorer specimens as fast as they show up, and the next year find himself with eight or nine good hens and a cock. But it costs money to feed a hundred chicks good or bad, and if there is bother with eggs, there's bother with the helpless hundred, and he who bothers loses chicks; in an effort to get rid of bother, he gets rid of chicks, without a chance to eat them and get his money back. On the other hand, it is high living for a poor man, who succeeds in growing eighty of the chicks, to eat up seventy in a year because they are not good enough to breed from. Wouldn't a poor man be better off to forego high living one year, and breed one setting of fine eggs, costing from $3 to $5, under a mother hen costing $1? The second year he could run an incubator with his own good eggs, and take up high living with some show of certainty. Our conditions are all dependable; according as we "bother" we should select conditions, and not let conditions select us.

Scratchings from the Yards.

The Pomona Poultry Association has finally organized and is holding monthly meetings at which some particular breed or variety is taken up for discussion.

If you will separate the pullets and cockerels, both will make a better growth.

A Paris news item says that near that city are large poultry plants which use superannuated and injured horses for meat to be fed to fowls.

A consignment of Hungarian grouse have been received from Yardley, Pa., by Senator H. W. Willis of San Bernardino, for the game preserve. In the original shipment there were forty pairs, of which sixty-nine perished en route; the living, however, came through in good shape.

From February 1, 1907, to February 1, 1908, the Sonoma County Coöperative Poultry Association shipped 629,039 dozen eggs, or about 53,000 per month. For the same dates last year the amount was 439,410 dozens.

Human Bloodhounds.

Remarkable Keenness of Black "Trackers" of Australia.

From Pearson's Weekly.

A CRIMINAL in Australia knows that his chances for escape are nearly hopeless if a "tracker" is put upon his trail within a day after the crime is discovered. A "tracker" is a native black man having a natural instinct for running down criminals fleeing from justice. These men are veritable bloodhounds, and their strange power is possessed by no other race in the world.

So implicit is the confidence felt in them by the police that when a black starts out upon a man hunt the officer who goes with him merely follows in his wake. He does not question him, or in any way interfere with him, but, leading his own horse, allows the guide to go in whatever direction he pleases, no matter how apparently reasonless his course may seem.

The most successful trackers are in Queensland, near the edge of New South Wales. They will travel any distance, animated by no feeling of hatred for their quarry, but only desirous of proving their expertness. The reward they ask is absurdly small for the long and difficult trails. A few shillings or some cheap bracelets, rings, and so on, quite satisfies them. They have no idea of the value of money. Rum is their great weakness.

Once a tracker was employed to locate some valuable trees for a timber man. He had to travel some forty miles through a forest so dense that it was necessary to cut his way through with his tomahawk. All he asked for was a bottle of rum, while the timber merchant derived over £2000 from the sale of the trees.

The following description of a man hunt will convey a clear idea of the dangers and hardships to be endured:

In this particular case the tracker was a splendid specimen of manhood. The usual loin garment of kangaroo skin he had exchanged for a light covering of cotton cloth provided by the police. He led a horse, so as to make time in the open country districts where the runaway's footsteps could be seen from a horse. The hunt was very earnest, because the fugitive had stolen some cattle. In Australia the crime of cattle stealing is most severely dealt with, and considered a serious offence.

The offender was a well-seasoned bushman, cunning, and acquainted with the tactics of the "trackers;" furthermore, he had two days' start of his pursuers.

To accompany a chase like this is awesome; the utter silence and desolation of the woods is so depressing. Then, too, the trails are deceptive, often leading to a deserted wood camp beneath a foliage so dense that it is impossible even to catch a glimpse of the sky. Darkness closes in very quickly in the mountain regions, and by nightfall the "tracker" and his employer were glad to reach an "accommodation house" (or rancher's home,) where such as these were usually welcomed and allowed to put up for the night. At this house the officer tried to hear tidings of his man, but no one had seen him.

All the next day the black fellow led along as swiftly as possible. The way was extremely rough, and mile after mile was covered through wild silences, until a stranger would surely think the guide was playing a losing game. At no time could they ride, and it was with great difficulty that they reached a sort of clearing, where the horses were tied and camp struck for the night. Tearing huge strips of bark from the trees and wrapping blankets around them, each lay on the concave surface of one for a bed and rested.

At noon the next day a bushman's cabin was reached, and there the tired horses were tethered. The hunters then proceeded on foot. Another night in the forest, and the fourth day found these intrepid hunters making their way through underbrush peculiar to Australia, called "lawyers and barristers," because its thorns and brambles catch one at every turn. Once the guide hesitated, turned back, and struck off in another direction down an embankment, the rest tumbling after him.

A wild chase that must have been! Two white men following the apparently mad actions of a black fellow into places so remote that it would have been impossible to find the way out of them alone. But such is the confidence in that country in the faithfulness and ability of a "tracker." He now crawled for the greater part on his hands and knees, minutely examining twigs and branches for signs of a freshly-broken passageway for the fugitive. He was about ten feet ahead of the others, when he gave a subdued exclamation of delight.

"I catch white feller quick!" he said, and pointed to a scrap of cloth clinging to a broken twig. Four hours more, and a river was reached. There in the damp earth of the bank two footprints were plainly seen.

The "tracker" leaped into the river and struck out for the opposite side. Emerging upon the other bank, he ran, dripping, for twenty feet or so, following footprints that had again stopped at the water's edge.

Then the trailer paused. He was plainly puzzled. What had become of the cattle thief? Had he recrossed the river or swam down as far as he could and landed on either bank, then struck into the woods again? After sharply examining the ground, the troubled guide swam back and landed a few yards below his party. By his actions they saw that he had found the tracks again. The criminal had indeed crossed the river, but where had he gone after that?

Trust a "tracker" to solve riddles of that sort! Suddenly he began uncovering the leaves and twigs between him and the other two men until he reached them. They were sitting beneath a huge eucalyptus tree.

"White feller no fool black feller!" he said, smiling, wet and breathless. Then it was seen that the fugitive had carefully covered up his tracks by walking backward. Strange to relate, these tracks terminated under the very tree where the party were seated. But apparently the man hunt was finished; the game had vanished into space!

The "tracker" dashed into a thicket and hastily secured a strong, pliable vine, used by the natives to scale tree trunks too smooth to climb. This he threw about the tree, and began to ascend it. The others looked on in astonishment. Up went the black until thirty feet in the air. Then those below noticed that the main trunk of the tree had been broken off years before, forming a crotch for the new branches that had sprung up on either side.

A most astonishing thing happened. Reaching down into the hollow of the half-dead tree trunk, the "tracker" seized something, at the same time shouting to the officer beneath: "Boss, Boss, I catch white feller! He play 'possum!"

Out of the opening appeared a man's head, and a more wretched object could never have been seen. He was tousled, dirty, gaunt, half-starved.

In due course he paid the penalty of his crime. He said that, knowing a "tracker" would be put upon his trail, he had hoped to give him the impression that he had been drowned while swimming the river.

Trackers have a horror of traveling after dark, being constantly in fear of meeting the Bunyip, a fearful monster with glaring eyes, which they believe to be the spirit of an old aboriginal king who roams around the swampy land at night to catch black men. You can frighten a "tracker" half out of his wits by telling him you will send the Bunyip after him. They also believe that a giant lives on mountain tops, waiting to kill them with a club. Hence they never sleep on top of a mountain or near a swamp, always pitching their brush tents, or mimis, near a dry and level spot. Their only religious belief is that a big god, who has been asleep for ages, will one day awaken and eat up the whole world.

HOW KING-KILLERS ARE KILLED.

Those among the assassins of the late King of Portugal and his son who fell victims to the sabres and bullets of the soldiery and police were lucky.

For even in these humanitarian days the lot of the regicide, when caught, is not usually a very enviable one. To be hanged is the least he can expect.

Perpetual solitary imprisonment is a far more dreadful fate. It drove Bresci, the assassin of King Humbert of Italy, to suicide; and it has transformed Lucchini, who murdered the Empress of Austria, into a hopeless imbecile.

Among the plotters implicated in the murder of the late Shah of Persia, one was tortured to death in prison, while another was incased in wet plaster of paris, which, on setting, slowly crushed the life out of him. Three of the assassins of a previous Shah were boiled alive in huge copper cauldrons.

So late as the year 1831, the two Mavromichaels, who slew Count Capo d'Istria the first president of Greece, were immured within close brick walls, built round them up to their chins, and supplied with salted food (but no drink) until they died.

Damiens, who attempted the life of King Louis XV, was first barbarously tortured, and then torn to pieces by wild horses. This awful punishment was publicly carried out in one of the principal squares of Paris no longer ago than March 28, 1757. Ravaillac, who assassinated Henry IV of France, suffered a similar fate.

The murderer of Selim III of Turkey was publicly impaled, lingering five and a half days in dreadful torment. Those who did to death his immediate successor, Mustapha IV, were tortured and starved on alternate days, and deprived of sleep by night, until death came to their relief.—[Pearson's Weekly.

FIELD NOTES.

Report of Convention.

THE official report of the thirty-third Fruit Growers' Convention of the State of California is now ready for distribution, and is being sent out to all persons desiring copies of this work. It is a volume of 267 pages, being an account of the proceedings of the late convention held at Marysville. Copies of this book may be had by addressing John Isaac, secretary of the State Horticultural Commission, Sacramento. It is sent free to all who apply, but is designated especially to be given to fruit growers and those otherwise interested in our horticultural industries. The range of subjects treated in this report is very great, and every fruit grower may find something of value to him in the work required to produce good fruit. An unusual amount of printed matter will be turned out by the State Commission of Horticulture, as another report will be printed in June, giving the proceedings of the convention to be held at Riverside in April.

Representation Necessary.

THE RIVERSIDE ENTERPRISE advocates the maintenance of a committee upon horticultural legislation at the next meeting of the Legislature. There can be nothing illegitimate or offensive in this plan. I know there is nothing in the minds of any fruit grower in the State in the line of horticultural legislation in whose fruition aught but the good of the whole people would have place. If this is conceded by all others no one will object to the presence of a strong committee at Sacramento next winter to forward enactments upon which the future of horticulture so largely depends. This committee should be the product of the fruit growers themselves, and would thus know what legislation is necessary to conserve and protect our greatest industry, and hence promote every other industry.

It is not generally known by the farmers of the State that many meritorious bills upon horticultural interests have failed of passage at Sacramento purely through inattention or indifference upon the part of past Legislatures. One of the most meritorious horticultural laws passed and signed by the Governor in 1907 was made void by the failure to place it in the bill for the codification of the laws. It was purely accidental, but one of the accidents that is fatal. If a watchful committee had been on the legislative deck this law would be in operation today. Again, the farmers have never been possessed of any recognized vehicle through which their legislative needs could be made known. Hence there has been no encouragement for them to seek to know just what the State really needs in horticultural enactment. Unless some one can show that wrongful legislation has been sought in the past in these lines, or that it would be likely in the future there is no reason why this committee should not be appointed and join in the promotion of every measure that would assist the farmers in the development and stability of the foundation industry of California.

Vineyards and Soil Survey.

AT the Riverside convention of fruit growers the Bureau of Soils will be represented by Prof. Mackie, who will expound the actual work of his department and its practical relation to fruit culture. This department does not work merely to establish a record of the classes and characteristics of the soils examined. Mr. Mackie's corps of men is now engaged in the examination of vineyard soils, and is working in coöperation with George C. Husmann and his associates in demonstrating the fitness of different varieties of the grape to different soils. It is the difference of telling about it and doing it, and the work of these men will therefore prove of great value.

At the United States experimental vineyard, Stockton, seventy-three varieties of ten vines each of resistant stock are growing. At Oakville and Fresno the resistants that have proven meritorious in small plantings, have been more largely planted in order to afford broader opportunities for observation. Fifty-seven new varieties of European grapes have been grafted upon resistant stocks at Oakville for fruiting tests, for not only must a phylloxera-resistant stock from its quality as a resistant, but it must be adapted to the varieties to be grafted upon it to be of commercial worth. Fortunate will be the vine planter of ten years hence with the practical knowledge of vines at hand which is now being gleaned in California by these agents of the Bureau of Plant Industry of Washington. Coördinate with these viticultural experiments is the great commercial uplifting of the grape industry from the Mexican line to the head of the Sacramento Valley. The chain of government experiment vineyards could not have been established at a more opportune time.

White Fly Parasites.

WHILE the acute stages of the white-fly scare may be over, the citrus growers of the State will read with interest all that may be said of this pest and its natural enemies. As a matter of fact, it seems to have no natural foes but the ax and cyanide. In a letter recently received from Dr. Howard, of the Bureau of Entomology, he states that in Florida the fly seems to be immune from parasites. "I have just been talking with Dr. Morrill, who is in charge of the white-fly work in Florida in the south, and he tells me that there has been no oviposition in the Florida white fly by any parasites of native Aleyrodes, and in only one single instance did he see any evidence of any native parasites attempting to oviposit in the true Florida white fly. He made observations upon about thirteen species of parasites. Six or eight of these he thinks are primary. In the single instance mentioned above, there was an attempt on the part of the female to oviposit in Aleyrodes citri, which lasted some time, but she did not seem able to insert her ovipositor. There is apparently something about Aleyrodes citri that prevents ready attack by our native parasites while of course there is always the possibility that they may accommodate themselves to this species in a country like California where the native parasites are so abundant. In California you are quite right to pursue exterminative measures. In Florida, of course, it is vastly more difficult, and if we can do any parasite work there is the place to do it."

The State Insectary is sending Dr. Howard all the native parasite to be found, and there are plenty at Oroville upon many species of native shrubbery. There is also being prepared a complete line of native Aleyrodes to be sent to Dr. Howard for special identification. While we do not apprehend any danger of the fly's escaping from the Oroville or the Marysville infections, the more we may know about the habits of this and all kindred flies the better we may be able to handle the fly should it appear from a new importation from Florida, which may be looked for if the county quarantine regulations are not more strictly enforced. One trouble that may be expected if there is a colonization of the fly in a locality where all its known food plants can be removed may be found in the fact that the pest may be able to adapt itself to plants not used by it before. This is one of the unknown quantities in fighting this enemy of our citrus fruits.

Celebration at Whittier.

I HAVE referred in an indefinite way to an expected celebration of the opening of the Southern California Pathological Laboratory. Now the event has taken definite form in the issuance of a full programme of exercises. It will be in the form of a farmers' institute with a bill of horticultural and oleri-cultural fare four days long. The first day will be "Vegetable Growers' Day;" the second, "Walnut Growers' Day;" the third, "Laboratory Day," and the fourth "Citrus Growers' Day." This institute will be held under the auspices of the College of Agriculture in conjunction with the Whittier Board of Trade, Citrus Association, Walnut Association and Vegetable Association.

I have been asked by the programme committee to give publicity to the Whittier celebration. This request was unnecessary, for if I have a favorite institution in the State, it is that known as the Southern California Pathological Laboratory. It was my fortune with J. B. Neff and C. E. Rumsey to represent the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce at Sacramento when this institution was born, and since its birth to offer encouragement at every point of its brief but successful career. I modestly offer the congratulations of The Times, and of the fruit growers of the State to the university upon the possibility of the coming celebration, witnessing the opening of the new Laboratory with its fine equipment for studying plant diseases under such favorable conditions. May it be supported by the State with the richness it deserves, and forever remain under the guidance of men earnest in discovery, apt in relief and diligent in establishing practices that may be of benefit to the horticultural industries of the whole country.

Citron Culture.

ONE of the coming industries of Santa Paula, is the production of candied citron. Mr. Carter, one of the citizens of Santa Paula, has succeeded in producing a superior article of this well-known and expensive fruit. The climate and soil is admirably adapted to the growth of the trees and fruit and the profits are said to be enormous. About 100 trees are planted to an acre and they are continuous bearers. The fruits weigh from one and one-half to three pounds each, and a very conservative estimate by a leading lemon grower was 200 pounds per tree or 20,000 pounds per acre. At the present retail price of 35 cents per pound, the product of one acre will amount to $7000. Sugar will be the principal item of expense in the production of citron and that the most of that retained in the fruit and sold at a margin of profit. The fruit can be produced as cheaply as lemons and with the same cultivation and care.

"The discovery of the method of curing the fruit was made after several months of experimenting by Mr. Carter, and comparisons of citron preserved by him with the imported fruit carried in the local groceries, are greatly to his advantage. His product is far superior, both in flavor and appearance, being both lighter and clearer.

A company is a probability of the near future which will be organized for the purpose of carrying on the new industry on a large scale.—[Chronicle.

Plum Wilt.

PLUM WILT in its later stages somewhat resembles Rosette, but may always be distinguished from it by the fact that the tufts of the latter disease are absent.

This dangerous malady could be readily stamped out by a little extra care on the part of the provident orchardist were it not for the fact that irresponsible parties permit along abandoned fence rows and roadside hedges, thickets of seedling plums to riot undisturbed. These are not only a hotbed of infestation, serving to spread the malady and distribute it over valuable orchard areas, but are in themselves worthless. Should a crusade be systematically enforced everywhere against this serious source of infestation it will be found quite simple to eventually eliminate Rosette as a factor of moment in our orchard operations. For these worthless hedges and thickets also shelter and perpetuate countless numbers of the Curculio, and also disseminate brown rot where neither would otherwise exist. Far better would it be to wage a pitiless warfare against our native plum hedge rows, permitting the ground they occupy to eventually become a tangle of briars. These would serve even better as nesting-places for our valuable birds, while proving no menace to the great orchard industry of this section.—[Florida Agriculturist.

Valencia Orange Crop.

ACCORDING to Consul C. C. Winans, the latest estimates of the present Valencia orange crop in Spain indicate a prospective yield slightly in excess of the average of the last five years (about 900,000,000 pounds.) He adds:

As this estimate does not include the 10 to 12 per cent. normal yearly increase of new plantations, the present crop, barring accidents, will probably total 1,000,000,000 pounds. The trees and fruit, cleansed of parasitical growths by abundant September rains, generally present a healthy appearance. Shipments commenced at the end of October and opening prices are quoted at $1.80 to $2 per case of 420 oranges f. o. b. Valencia.

Onion Sets.

MARCH and April are the best months to sow onion seeds for sets. But I would caution any one without experience not to attempt it on a large scale. The best sets are grown upon lands that do not require irrigation, and sets grown upon such soil keep much better than where irrigation is necessary. It must not be inferred that when grown without irrigation I mean without plenty of moisture, but upon soils in which the water is near enough to the surface to rise by capillary attraction and keep the ground damp enough for the needs of the crop without irrigation. If the inquirer has very mellow loam or sandy soil he might begin on a moderate scale. It takes about 300 pounds of sets to plant an acre or about five pounds of seed.—[Q. A. L., in California Cultivator.

Grafting Walnuts.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY walnut trees in the Neff orchard southwest of town will be cut back in a few weeks to be grafted to a variety resistant to the blight. These trees are fourteen years old and have attained a large growth, but lost half their nuts the past season from effects of blight. During the past year Mr. Neff has looked over many orchards in Southern and Northern California for trees showing qualities resistant to the blight, and some months ago discovered in his own orchard a tree which seems to fill the bill. This tree produced 200 pounds of nuts last year, and seemed to have very little blight. Grafts from this tree will be taken and attached to the trees that blight. The work will be done by an experienced nurseryman from the north who has made an especial study of this method of ridding orchards of the blight.

A number of growers throughout Southern California have grafted a single tree with resistant stock, but Mr. Neff will work over ten acres of his orchard at once. If the grafts prove successful, and of this he has no doubt, he will graft a larger area next year, and continue until his entire orchard has been reset with new growth. He expects these ten acres of grafted trees will in five years produce three times as many nuts as the trees now covering the tract. These trees have been carefully attended to since being set out. They have had cover crops and fertilizers according to scientific methods and have made an excellent growth, yet they usually shed half their crop. The tree in the orchard which shows resistant qualities came from the nursery and was planted at the same time. However, it is a fact well established by experience, that different variations in nut trees are produced from nuts taken from the same tree.

This will undoubtedly be the largest area grafted in any walnut orchard in the State, and has already attracted widespread attention in various sections. The operation will take place in March, and due notice will be given so that growers may witness the process.—Anaheim Gazette.

Cantaloupes at Coachella.

MR. A. W. McGILL of Thermal gives his experience in cantaloupe growing, as conducted in Coachella Valley. Mr. McGill writes from several years' experience in that section:

"Raising a good crop of cantaloupes is much like raising a good crop of anything else. It requires good land, good seed and proper cultivation. First, your land must be in good condition, either with or without irrigation. For best results, plow under a leguminous crop. Alfalfa sod plowed under is best of all. Commercial fertilizers are not so satisfactory. Have land well plowed and harrowed two or three times before planting. Under irrigation have it well irrigated. Lay off rows six feet wide. Plant with hoe, ten, twelve or fifteen seed in a hill; get the best seed from the most reliable seedman, regardless of price. Plant hills four feet apart. By making a marker you can mark off three rows at a time four feet apart. By being careful one can plant so that the ground can be cultivated both ways, which is very essential while plants are young. Plant about one inch deep, and a short time before they are ready to come up, go over with a garden rake, drawn through the hills with a lifting motion. This will remove any lumps or clods.

"The seeding period is the critical time in the growth of the cantaloupe. It is at this time that it needs close attention, or it will receive a setback from lack of moisture, from high winds or cold weather.

"The roots that develop when the seed germinates go down from the seed, while the stem is pushing upward. These roots form a support for the plant during the first two or three weeks, for up to that time the stem from the seed root up to the surface of the ground is smooth and white. The second root system starts from the stem about the time the fifth leaf appears. These roots are the main feeders for the plant, for the growth of a vine of melons is insignificant until it feels the impulse of the larger and better root system.

"The question of early cantaloupes depends on the grower in supplying conditions that favor development of the lateral root system. Hoe and cultivate once a week, and when the fourth leaf appears hoe the dirt well up around and under the leaves, and don't be afraid to throw it well up, as too much cannot be said in favor of packing the dirt firmly, and have it rather moist around and under the young plant at this time. The feeders for the plant are putting out now, and the more of them you get, the better growth the vine makes, and the more matured melons you get. In fact, I grew a 1200-crate crop one year, and I had one man in the field nine weeks hoeing, or the equivalent of one man's labor, and my success was due to thorough hilling up of the young plants when they had four and five leaves on. In that crop I did not have 10 per cent. ponies. By pulling the young plants until they have six or eight leaves on, one can see just how they develop. Thin to two, or even one, to the hill; pinch off plants when thinning; do not pull out, it will disturb the growing plants. I have best results with one plant to the hill. Cultivate often, but farther away each time. After the fifth leaf appears, by all means do not disturb the surface roots. They are the only roots the vine has. You can pull up a grown vine and the first root that starts downward does not make much of a growth, but the surface roots spread on all sides, and in cultivating never turn the vines around out of the way, as that will cut off your supply of early cantaloupes, caused by the plow cutting off the surface roots. In irrigating one has to be governed by the kind of soil he has. It is fatal to soak the ground where soil 'subs' good. One furrow on each side gets good results or one furrow to the row. I never could see much difference. The main thing is to irrigate before the soil gets too dry, and after the vines get to spreading over the ground one can see by the vines when they need water. The points will point upward and have a slightly withered appearance.

"The cucumber beetle, the rust and the aphis are enemies of the cantaloupe. The beetle may be checked by applying road dust. We have some success against the aphis with the ladybug. The rust is not prevalent. By planting rust-resistant seed one can overcome that disease to some extent. In marketing, we are all up against it. I get best results by putting up a standard crate of forty-five mellons to the crate, five in a row, three rows on the side of a crate.

"Another size are ponies, fifty-four to the crate, six in the row. Pack good melons; wrap your own brand if shipping a long distance; use paper fifteen by fifteen. It will pay, as the loss is small and the appearance of the fruit will help to sell at a good price.

"I have shipped crates of standard melons packed that way and sold for $9 in Denver.

"In selling to commission houses, select good, reliable houses in each city to ship to, and stay with them until acquainted. Visit them if in their town, and you will find they will treat you right. I still ship to the same people I started in with. Don't ship a few to one house and then another in the same city. Show your commission man you have confidence in him, and don't expect him to get a fancy price for your stuff when you would not eat it yourself. Sell f. o. b. as much as possible. Melon associations are good to ship through. The main thing is to get good fruit, know when to get it, and make a good pack.

"In conclusion, will say: Have good ground, good seed, hoe shallow but well, cultivate often, get your surface roots started as soon as possible. Study the root system and you can raise from 150 to 300 crates to the acre, and mostly standards.—[California Cultivator.

Sulphur Question.

ARTHUR R. BRIGGS of the State Board of Trade and leader of the dried-fruit growers in their fight against the sulphur ruling of the Department of the Interior, is well pleased with the personnel of the board of scientists that President Roosevelt appointed to decide the controversy.

"The principal point at issue between us," says Mr. Briggs, "is whether the test of the effects of sulphur in curing fruit shall be made before or after it is cooked. The view that the commission takes on this point will be crucial and of course we have no intimation as to what it will do. However, the men the President chose are of the character and ability that we desired, and we are content.

"We are at the present time devoting our energies to secure an abrogation for this year of ruling 76. This must be done if the marketing of the crop of 1908 is not to suffer seriously."

On the other hand, Congressman Needham writes as follows:

"The whole question involved in the sulphur proposition is whether or not sulphur dioxide, which remains in small quantities in dried fruit that has been dried by the use of sulphur, is deleterious to health. If it is deleterious to health, then of course it is unlawful, and no matter how many thousands or millions of dollars it may involve, its use will have to be abandoned.

"The appointment of a referee board to determine the question as to whether or not sulphur dioxide is deleterious to health naturally suspends Decision 76 until the referee board has made a finding, but of course the department will not be warranted in saying that sulphur may be used in unlimited quantities, because such a result might leave in the product a substance deleterious to health, and would therefore be unlawful; but the department will probably make an announcement, which will be in effect a ruling, that the ordinary amount may be used, provided those using it mark upon the label of the product the fact that it was prepared with sulphur. This is undoubtedly the best that can be done, in fact all that can be done under the law. This announcement will probably be made within a short time."

The Carob Tree.

IN connection with the suitability of this economic tree for growth in California which we recently indicated, it is interesting to read an account of the tree in the countries bordering on the Mediterranean, written by Consul-General G. B. Randal from Beirut:

Arabs and Moors eat carobs. In the south of Europe they are employed as food for horses, cattle and swine. In Cyprus, next to barley, they constitute the principal article for export. The total yield of the island of carobs or locust beans (not to be confounded with St. John's bread,) in 1906 amounted to 69,000 tons. In August the carob tree is seen bearing both flowers and ripe fruit. The latter is a pod, brown and leathery, four to eight inches long, a little curved, and containing a fleshy and at last mealy pulp, of an agreeably sweet taste, in which lie a number of shining seeds; these are bitter and of no use.

On account of the abundant sugar contained in carobs the latter form a nutritious and fattening food for horses and cattle. England, for the feeding of cattle, imports large quantities of carobs in the form of flour (that they may be more digestible) from Spain, Italy, Crete, Samos and Cyprus. Most of the Cyprus carobs, however, are exported in bulk, and the grinding is done in England. I am informed that a considerable quantity of this "cattle food" is exported from Great Britain to the United States. If proper steamship facilities existed between the United States and the Levant, carobs would probably be carried direct to the United States to be prepared there into cattle food. Carobs are also used in considerable quantities, especially in France, for distillation, and the spirits obtained are deemed choice. Carobs are also employed for the production of a semi-liquid substance resembling molasses largely used in the manufacture of oriental sweets.

KITCHENS BECOMING USELESS.

Coincident with the transfer of household industries outside the home, our methods of living are undergoing a slow but steady revolution. The housewife of today is not so busy a personage as was her grandmother, says the Delineator. The food and the clothing that the house mother once made herself are now largely produced in the factories. Every article of wearing apparel may be had from a department-store bargain counter. Bakeries turn out bread at 50,000 loaves to the baking. Soups that our mothers spent a day in making, now arrive all ready to add hot water and serve. Our bacon is sliced and our cereals steam-cooked before they reach the kitchen. Puddings and desserts are minute-made, and pickles and preserves come in fifty-seven varieties, bottled and beautiful.

THE LAND OF FIRE AND ICE.

A new geological map of Iceland, by Dr. Thoroddsen, who has spent many years in the work, gives much fresh information about one of the world's most wonderful islands, which few visitors ever see.

An example of the strangeness of Iceland is furnished by the volcano, Matla. This is buried under immense snow fields, but from time to time its fires burst through the glittering blanket, and then such floods are poured from the melting ice that a great stretch of country between the volcano and the sea is inundated, and huge masses of ice are carried out into the ocean.

It is unsafe even to cross the territory lying between Matla and the sea, so suddenly come the floods.—[Chicago Record-Herald.

Rational Diet.

A WOMAN correspondent in Oregon sends the following communication, which affords the editor of this department an opportunity to answer several inquiries of similar import:

"I would ask, why, if nuts and fruits are the natural food for man, people don't take more kindly to such diet? I have tried for the past three years to make the change at our family board, but the results are very discouraging. The 'lord and master' takes his meals out, the young Americans in the family openly rebel and ask for meat, bread and pie; so we are left to munch our nuts and fruit in undisturbed loneliness, as most of our friends give us a wide berth. The difference between the usual dinner and a meal consisting of a spoonful or two of shelled nuts, a handful of dried fruit, with a bit of salad, is a shock to both their minds and stomachs. They suddenly remember a pressing engagement calling them home, and with ill-concealed pitying looks they leave us, to return no more.

"The very few we know who follow vegetarianism and various other 'isms' are all thin, yellow-faced-looking persons, entirely lacking in old-time hospitality, when 'three square' meals was the rule, dished up with a liberal hand, instead of consulting a pair of scales."

In answer to the first question of this correspondent, the editor will say that a majority of people do not take kindly to a diet of fruit and nuts for the simple reason that not only have they been living quite otherwise since they were born, but that their forefathers for a hundred thousand years, more or less, have also wandered far away from the original dietary of man. You cannot expect suddenly to change acquired and inherited habits within a few days, or weeks, or months.

Don't attempt to force such a dietary upon those who don't think they like it—because they have never given it a fair trial. To do so is not only injudicious, but impolite. To set before guests who are accustomed to a mixed diet a "feast" of fruit and nuts reminds the editor of Aesop's fable of the fox and the stork. The person who should commit such a breach of hospitality ought not to be surprised if, when he returns the visit, he finds set before him a spread of beef broth, pigs' feet, liver and bacon, blood sausage and mince pie.

Don't go to extremes. Your extremists do much harm to the cause of food reform, dropping one thing after another from their dietary, until they think it a cardinal crime to eat anything that grows underground, while some of them go as far as to eat grass, as did Nebuchadnezzar. There is a wide margin between a diet of nuts and fruit and one including such objectionable foods as those above referred to. Persons with weak stomachs should go slow on nuts, until they get their stomachs in condition.

Here are a few suggestions:

First of all, remember that quantity is really of more importance than quality—quantity and the mastication of the food. Adopt the two-meal-a-day plan, omitting breakfast. Eat your meals dry, without any slops—not even soup—and chew the food most thoroughly. This will insure against overeating, and will itself be a most important step toward dietetic reform. Begin with a short fast.

If you have genuine hunger on rising, take, an hour later, something light—say a cup of something warm and a piece of toast, if you are not satisfied with a little fruit—but by all means avoid that American abomination, a heavy breakfast as soon as you get out of bed.

Then, omit from your dietary (1) fermented foods and beverages, (2) emasculated foods, (3) minerals. This includes fermented bread, vinegar, white bread, white flour products of all kinds, refined cane sugar, vegetables from which the water in which they were cooked has been discarded, and chloride of sodium (common table salt.) Here you will have taken several more important steps.

Stimulants, if used at all, should be cut down to a very small amount. Stimulants include alcoholic beverages of all kinds, patent medicines—which contain from 15 to 50 per cent. of alcohol—coffee and tea. Tea and coffee are worse, from a hygienic point of view, than pure light wines, or beer. If you use tea, take black China tea. Let it draw in a China pot, not over one minute, and use a little cream, but no sugar. Coffee, on the other hand, with a little honey or molasses, and no cream, and not more than a small cupful. Do not take it with meals. The less tea or coffee you take, the better.

As to meat, it is an undesirable food, first, because, even if the animal had been healthy it always contains more or less foul matter that the animal would have excreted had it lived; secondly, because it contains an excess of proteid material, and third, because it is a clumsy and wasteful manner of getting food, instead of taking it direct, in the shape of plants and vegetables. However, on the other hand, as the editor has previously said, more dyspepsia is caused by starches and sweets than by a moderate use of meat. This is why so many vegetarians look sick and tired of life. An entirely non-flesh dietary is the best, but if you eat meat, confine yourself to a small piece once a day and avoid swine flesh—unless you know how the hog has been raised—also such filthy foods as liver, containing the bile of the animal, and kidneys, containing urine that had not passed out when the animal was killed, also sweetbread, which contains more uric acid than any other known food, and tripe. A person who, knowing the facts, can deliberately sit down and eat kidneys, should not shudder at the idea of lapping down, with satisfaction, the contents of a chamber utensil.

This will leave you a long list of foods to select from, including fruits, fresh and dried, nuts, salads, vegetables, pulse and cereals, to which may be added milk, cheese and eggs. A meat menu is poor indeed compared with this. You will find it a good idea to make one of your meals entirely of raw foods—fruits, nuts and salads in their variety. The salads being prepared with olive oil and lemon juice, not vinegar. For the cooked meal, if you are not an adept in that line of cookery, you should get one of the hygienic cook books, of which several have been published during the past few years. One of these, a copy of which was recently received by the editor, is the Hygeia Cook Book, by Mary A. Heard, D. O. It is not bulky, but contains a good assortment of recipes of soups, eggs and savory sauces and vegetables, salads, puddings, desserts, pies, sherbets, breads, cake and beverages. The editor's wife says that the recipes are given in good proportions, which cannot be said of many cook books, hygienic and otherwise, in some of which the proportions are so absurd as to be ridiculous.

Mrs. Heard is quite in accord with the teachings of the Care of the Body, except that she recommends cane sugar, for which the editor would substitute sweet fruits, honey, maple sugar or molasses. She avoids fermented foods and liquids, such as yeast, bread and vinegar, omits meat and fish, impresses the importance of retaining the organic salts in cooking vegetables, and alone among all the hygienic cook books that the editor has seen rejects mineral salt (chloride of sodium.) As she properly says, and as the editor of the Care of the Body has so frequently endeavored to impress upon its readers, inorganic salt cannot be assimilated by the human organism, and this puts an unnecessary tax upon the depurative organs. The Hygeia Cook Book is published by the author, Dr. Mary A. Heard, 248 Warren street, Roxbury, Mass. Price 50 cents, postpaid.

Now, by reading—and heeding—the above simple suggestions, the editor believes that many perplexed readers of this department may be able to steer clear between the Scylla of Gross Feeding and the Charybdis of Crankiness. Then, after having once established in your mind a definite outline of a rational dietary, "forget it." Don't think any more about it. Nothing tends so much to dyspepsia and nervous collapse as to be always thinking about what goes on in your "innards." The most important rule of all is: "Never eat unless you are hungry." And appetite is not hunger. Not "by a jugful." Appetite is when you can sit down and pick through a banquet beginning with Manhattan cocktail, oyster cocktail, oysters on the half-shell and clear turtle soup, and winding up with ice cream, black coffee and cigars. Hunger is when a piece of stale dry bread looks good to you. If you follow this rule, you will never go far wrong.

Finally, aim at the ideal, but don't believe that you are risking your mortal stomach and perhaps even what Plato says is your immortal soul, by occasionally eating a slice of roast beef, a broiled squab, or even a slice of Swiss cheese with a stein of beer. Even the editor does this, sometimes, when the cranks drive him to desperation. It isn't an occasional lapse from an ideal dietary that counts, but the habitual eating of unwholesome food.

You don't have to be either a crank or a hog.

Salt.

HERE we are again. Following is a Washington dispatch:

"The requirement that all cattle, horses and sheep, grazing under permit on the national forests be given salt at frequent intervals is a regulation which has been found to go a long way in protecting the range and conserving the forage crop.

"Forestry officials say experience has shown that the want of salt makes stock restless. If cattle and horses are not supplied as they need they roam and wander, haunting old salting grounds.

"Salt is so necessary to the easy and profitable handling of sheep on the range that no flock master would think of getting along without it.

"Sheep need less salt on dry range than on green. An average quantity for 1000 head of sheep would be from "A merry life is like good medicine;" but to be merry you must be well. "There is health in the pines," the aborigines and our forefathers knew this. When they had rheumatic pains, kidney and urinary troubles, they had recourse to the pine, fir, and juniper trees, scraping and steeping the bark which was so efficacious that for generations the above troubles were but light as air. Today science teaches how to obtain the essence from those trees, and when properly compounded, as in the case of Kinney's Rheumatic and Kidney Remedy, we have the rare, pure aromatic essence which, taken in the small dose, invariably removes the poison urea, uric-acid, allays irritation, relieves the pain, and thus removes the cause. Why not try this wonderful little remedy? Among the scores of preparations whose ingredients come from a drug store, you may have wrongfully classed this marvelous remedy and thus overlooked that which you needed so much when suffering from rheumatism, sciatica, lumbago, urinary and kidney trouble.

There has been no monumental newspaper advertising yet; its fame has gone throughout the Coast and to many States east, solely on its merits. Mailed everywhere for $1.00. Also, at druggists.

scavengers of shallow waters—fattening near —often containing the germs of typhoid and other diseases. Great food to put into sick, susceptible stomachs. Is it to laugh, or to cry?

Last, but by no means least, here is a treatment for grip—"or any other infectious disease"—which grip is not—there are no infectious diseases—set forth by Florence Morse Kingsley in the Nautilus:

"I deny emphatically that I have the grip, or that the grip has me. I am Spirit, and spirit is not—cannot be touched with the foulness of infection. I am aware of my oneness with God. I live continually in Him; my being cannot be separated from His eternal being. I am clean, whole, well, through the word of His truth, which at this moment penetrates every atom of my being with clear white light.

"The source of fever and inflammation which is apparent in my body lies in the animal mind, which cannot be depended upon to tell the truth about anything. I deny the truth of its statements, and affirm what is real and eternally true of my true self. I decree that I am and always shall be perfectly whole, and I direct and order my body to manifest health, and I command my animal mind to cease from troubling me."

Simple, isn't it? The editor would advise you, however, not to forget Dr. Brook's pomelo dope. Also, go to bed, and keep your bowels open. Then you may safely amuse yourself by affirming, as often and as loudly as you please, that you are all kinds of things that you are not but would like to be.

How You May Do Good.

SCARCELY a day passes in which the editor does not receive one or more letters from grateful correspondents, scattered all over the United States and in foreign countries, telling how they have benefited by following the teachings of the Care of the Body.

These people can show their appreciation in a practical way, and at the same time help others, by calling the attention of friends to this department of The Times. Send sample copies of the magazine to any you know who are in poor health—or in apparently good health, for that matter, unless they know how to live, for they may at any time become sick—and write to them, calling their attention to the Care of the Body, and suggesting that they subscribe to the Sunday Times. Apart from the Care of the Body feature the Sunday Times Magazine is the best 5 cents' worth of literature in the world.

"Henry White, when first secretary of the American Legation at London, told a story of some German and English officers who were dining together recently. After he sat down he waited for a time for a return toast to King Edward. Noting that it was not given, he asked the Germans if they were going to comply with the custom. Receiving a negative answer, the Englishman arose, and, assuming a threatening attitude, shouted:

"'You'll toast my sovereign, or,' as he put his long, middle finger in his mouth, 'up comes your blooming Kaiser.'

"The toast was given."

Better Than Drugs.

MANY people on attempting to eat oranges freely complain that they make them bilious. This is quite natural. The effect is of the same kind as where people who eat strawberries break out with rash. Why? Because, with stuffing and wrong eating for months, or years, they are full of impurities. The organic salts, in which oranges and strawberries abound, act as good medicine. Instead of stopping eating strawberries and oranges, when you get an eruption, or become bilious, keep on eating them. First fast for a few days to clean your stomach, then begin with a few, and gradually work up until you can eat plenty of them. That is much better than taking drug-store dope.

Again, fruit should not be eaten on top of a lot of other food. Then, of course, it will disagree with you. Make a meal of it occasionally.

Fried Fats.

A CORRESPONDENT sends a clipping from a hygienic exchange, describing how to make peanut butter, in which article it is stated: "Do not brown. Browning changes the fat into a poisonous acid." The correspondent asks whether thousands of people are being slowly poisoned.

Well, yes. Slowly. Heating fat at a high temperature liberates certain acids, which are difficult of digestion. This is one reason why fried foods, cakes and pies are unwholesome. Another is that frying causes a thin film of melted fat to spread over the surface of the food particles, so that they cannot be properly acted upon by the saliva and gastric juice.

"As a Man Eateth."

IN the March Swastika a Los Angeles correspondent asked the following question:

"Do you believe in a course of diet for the development of the subconscious faculties, intuition and inspiration? If so, what do you suggest, or would you advise fasting?"

In his reply, Dr. McIvor-Tyndall says:

"The subject of diet, fasting, etc., is related to the health of the physical body only. It has practically nothing to do with the subconscious. Our greatest geniuses have been chronic dyspeptics, and more than reckless as to the subject of diet, while men who are perfectly healthy may and generally do lack the quality called 'genius.'"

Why? Because genius is an abnormal—a more or less morbid—manifestation. Genius and insanity are closely allied. Wherever there is genius you will at least find a trace of the neurasthenic habit. Genius is an exotic, that flourishes in warm moist places, or like an orchid, springs from rotting wood.

Sporadic flashes of genius may emanate from one who has a dyspeptic stomach, but never clear protracted mental effort, that may be of service to its possessor and to the world. To say that diet relates to the body only is highly erroneous. A sound mind can only dwell in a sound body, and a sound body can only be enjoyed by him who eats right, and digests well. As a man eateth, so is he.

As to diet having no influence on the subconscious mind, just eat a dish of lobster a la Newburg and plum pudding with hard sauce, before retiring, and see what tricks your S. M. will play you, while you sleep.

The Proscriptive Spirit.

EDITOR BOK complains as follows in his Ladies' Home Journal for March:

"No single magazine of general circulation has perhaps given over so much space to articles voicing the principles of the 'regular medical profession,' or has had so many doctors of the allopathic school among its contributors. Not a word of protest has ever issued from the thousands of our readers who believe in the medical principles of the osteopathic school of treatment. But two months ago we deemed it wise to allow Dr. Still, the founder of the School of Osteopathy, to tell how he discovered his treatment of the sick. And, presto! Immediately there issued forth a shower of abusive letters roundly condemning us because we 'advocated' osteopathy. This time, again, the editor had turned: now he was an osteopath! Although there happened to be in that same issue of the Journal not fewer than six articles by physicians of the allopathic school of medicine, those were completely overlooked, and we were 'osteopaths:' we were 'indorsing quackery!'"

The Treating Habit.

THE prohibitionists display more enthusiasm than judgment in expecting suddenly to wipe out by legislation an appetite that has prevailed among men since the days of Noah. Much, however, may be done, by regulation and education, to lessen the evil of over-indulgence in liquor. Among the greatest contributors to this curse is the absurd and illogical treating habit. This habit is well hit off by the Chicago News. Commenting on a suggestion that mince pie as well as alcohol produces evils, the News says:

"Mince pie may be as bad as liquor taken in moderation, but the pie eater never is dragged into a restaurant and forced to eat twenty pieces of pie in succession under penalty of being called stingy." To which another exchange adds: "No wonder a man is 'cross at home' after this experience."

Too Many Laws.

GROCERY dealers complain that a separate food law for each State is ridiculous, as it makes the manufacturer print different labels for different States.

So it is. And so is a separate law for divorce, and bankruptcy, and a few other things. What we want is a good Federal law to cover each of these broad questions, and then to see that it is strictly and impartially enforced.

• • •

Long Life.

WHEN referring to length of life, writers are fond of quoting Moses, in the 90th Psalm, who set the moderate limit of 70 years as the ordinary span.

Why don't they sometimes quote from an earlier and higher authority—that of the Lord God Almighty, as reported as follows, in the third verse of the sixth chapter of Genesis:

"And the Lord said, My Spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he is also flesh, yet his days shall be an hundred and twenty years."

As mentioned by the editor, in his recent article on longevity, there is a tradition that the shortening of men's days began when they forsook the Edenic diet—"I have given you every herb yielding seed, which is upon the face of all the earth, and every tree in which is the fruit of a tree yielding seed, to you it shall be for food"—and took to the eating of the flesh of animals. Certain it is that a simple, temperate, non-flesh dietary is conducive to long life, while a liberal dietary, consisting largely of flesh foods, tends to result in a short life, that is not always a merry one.

The United States census report for 1900 gave 3504 persons in the United States 100 years of age or over. Remarkable to say, the centenarians in the little principality of Bulgaria, with less than three and a half million population, number 3883. At a similar ratio, there should be 100,000 centenarians in this country.

Recently the remarkable longevity of the Bulgarians has been attributed to their free consumption of sour milk. As the editor said, in the article above referred to, it is more probably due to their simple, frugal diet, and out-of-door life. In confirmation of this, the following has been received by the editor from James Thymanki of Phoenix, Ariz., who is a native of Cos, Asia Minor, the birthplace of Hippocrates:

"About twenty miles out there is a small village of 500 people, all of them Greek Christians, who never taste meat except on holidays such as Christmas, New Year, and Easter. They thrive on black bread, that made out of barley being the cheaper, and wheat with garlic, onions, olives and greens. All those people are considered by the other inhabitants of the island as the most long-lived, strong and healthy. Their women are as strong as the men. Many years ago I remember some of their women defied the Turkish guards of the Regie—the monopoly of tobacco.

"I quite agree with you that the sour milk does not make the Bulgarians strong and long-lived, but the simple diet."

What Is A "Cure?"

THE Literary Digest says:

"This question arises in connection with the prosecution of several Washington druggists under the pure-food law, for selling a compound with the odd name of 'Cur-Forhedake Brane Fude.' The act provides that a drug shall be deemed to be misbranded if its package or label 'shall bear any statement, design, or device regarding such article, or the ingredients or substances contained therein, which shall be false or misleading in any particular.' The Agricultural Department holds that the name as given above means a 'cure' for headache, and that this designation is false.

"The National Druggist (St. Louis, February,) which looks upon Dr. Wiley and the Pure Food and Drugs Act with a critical, if not hostile, eye, takes this occasion for another criticism of Dr. Wiley's work which is interesting as showing the 'other side' of the question. This journal thinks that if the defendants are convicted, every druggist and a large number of medicine manufacturers will at once be subject to fine and imprisonment."

So they should be, if they sell drugs as "cures." Drugs never did, never could, never will "cure" disease. They only complicate conditions, interfering with nature's effort to cast forth impurities.

Incompetency a Disease of the Times.

FREDERICK L. HOFFMAN, statistician of the Prudential Insurance Company, says there has been a marked decrease in the efficiency of American mechanics, from year to year, and that more trades schools are needed, in order to eliminate the industrial inefficiency.

In the January number of "Tomorrow," the editor, Parker Sercombe, tells how he walked into a shop, where, under the direction of a woman, with a high-keyed voice, little girls were stringing beads, and that they rejected all that were unlike, only those of the same form, material and color being placed on strings. Then, he tells how he went through railway offices, and wholesale houses, and manufacturing establishments, in all of which he found "steady and reliable" employés, and everywhere, he declares, it was a case of undernutrition of body and soul, it seeming to require "unnutrition" to make them become dependable clerks. Commenting upon this, he writes:

"It is self-evident that in this land of so-called freedom there is no hope, no future, for the really free spir-

Flat-Foot
NO.1. NO.2 NO.3
1—Natural foot. 2—Partial flat foot. 3—Complete flat foot. The print of the wet foot tells the whole story. The foot is like a bridge. When the cement becomes weak and a train crosses it, it naturally gives way. The ligaments (bundles of fibrous tissue, which unite every joint) are the cement of the foot; when too much weight, by much standing or walking, is placed upon them, they stretch and allow the joints to open and the bones drop down. The bridge is propped with heavy timbers, the foot with Arch Supports, until the cement or ligaments become strong again. Price per pair, $2.00 and up. Consultation free. DR. H. A. ts. In our large establishments it is not the most brilliant, the ones with the greatest gifts, with the highest powers, that reach preferment—it is not those of the highest nutrition and assimilating powers who reach the high places in the gift of employers, but it is those who, through the stress of poverty and by means of narcotics, by wrong diet and by means of an overstrenuous and false competition, are brought to a state of body and mind so that they become efficient automatons for the use and purposes of their economic masters."

In the February Swastika, the editor, McIvor-Tyndall, had an article entitled "The Cry of Incompetence." He declares there is a vast army of workers who are not worth (commercially) even the smallest pittance which they receive for their attempts at service—not one in [illegible], he says. Dr. Tyndall adds:

"The reason why they succeed in holding their position at all is due to the fact that the business concern that employs them is run on the lines of a huge machine, and the only really important thing about it is the management, whose efforts are concentrated upon keeping the various parts of the machine oiled and in place.

"Go into the office of any large corporation which employs a number of clerks or office help, and ask for a simple scrap of information such as any one of the numerous employés ought to have at his fingers' end, and note the result.

"The query will be passed from one to another like a rubber ball, only to be thrown back in your face, with a vacant stare from the astonished group.

"Ask any of a row of young women in any department of a mercantile house for something not in their special little corner of the shop. The answer will invariably be: 'I don't think we have it.'

"If one of them should chance to be particularly accommodating she will ask some one else, and again your query goes down the line, and is finally tossed back into your teeth, generally with an air of offense that you should so tax their mental capacity as to ask such a question."

Incompetency, Dr. Tyndall says is a disease of the times. He concludes his article as follows:

"This condition will exist until there is lifted from the shoulders of the mothers of the human race the heart and brain and soul-crushing load of care and anxiety and necessity for labor which makes the weary wage earner tired and hopeless ere he sees the light of day in this work-crazed world."

This is one reason, but the editor would remark that there are others. Such, for instance, as the fiercely-competing struggle for existence, which is constantly becoming more strenuous, the loose training of youth, the abolition of the apprenticeship system—largely owing to the tyranny of labor unions—and unnatural methods of living, physically and mentally, that are now the rule rather than the exception. Dr. Tyndall is undoubtedly right when he says that incompetence is a disease of the times. The man who can do any one thing thoroughly well is becoming a rare bird.

Another feature of the prevailing mediocrity is the prevalent fear of being odd, or different from other people—of being held up to ridicule as a "crank," because one does not think, and speak, and act, and clothe oneself, and eat just as every one else does—not as every one else did a hundred years ago, or perhaps will be doing a hundred years hence, but as they happen to be doing just at present. How many men or women have the courage to come out and say and do things that they believe to be right, regardless of what the "world"—that vague term—may think and say? This is an age of slavery. A vast majority of the human race are abject slaves to Mrs. Grundy. Not one in ten thousand can truthfully say:

"It matters not how straight the gate,
How charged with punishment the scroll;
I am the master of my fate;
I am the captain of my soul."

Woman's Work.

DECLARING it necessary for the welfare of the race that women shall not be compelled to perform enervating labor, Justice Brewer gave a decision that laundries and other concerns employing women workers in Oregon, may not require them to work more than the ten hours a day provided in the law enacted by the Legislature.

In upholding the finding of the Oregon Supreme Court, Justice Brewer held that woman is entitled, owing to her physical structure, to greater protection than her brother. He declared that the limitations placed on her power to contract herself outside the act were quite proper, being for the benefit of mankind and necessary to protect her from the greed and passion of men.

This is a just decision. Such a provision is necessary, not only for the woman, but for the coming race.

American travelers in Europe sometimes express sympathy for women who work in the harvest fields. [illegible] They are healthy and happy. Reserve your pity for the poor slaves of the factory, and sweat shop, and of some department stores.

Medical Men and "Laymen."

IN the Berkeley (Cal.) Daily Gazette, for February 12, was reproduced, from the "Care of the Body," an article on the plague situation on San Francisco Bay, in which article the editor of this department criticized the folly of spending thousands of dollars in killing rats, so long as the filth on which these vermin feed—and on which filth diseases feed—is allowed to remain. The Gazette also printed a column editorial, commenting on the article, and concluding as follows:

"This is sound common sense, from one of the ablest medical men in the country. Follow his advice, and don't allow any one to frighten you. Fear, cowardice and disease go hand in hand."

The editor of the "Care of the Body" is not a "medical man." Simply a close and conscientious student, in Europe and America, for nearly forty-five years, of the laws of health, and especially of those relating to diet. He is, therefore, what the doctors call a "layman"—which may or may not mean that he ought to "lay low," say nothing and take his prescription when it is offered. It happens, however, that he wasn't constructed on this plan, so the doctors think he is bold and presumptuous to dare to venture to question venerable medical "authorities." Yet, when we see what some of these recently-recruited medical "authorities" are, we find that they "ain't so much." As, for instance, read this, from an exchange:

"In support of an assertion he had made that the present medical curriculum in the average medical college does not properly prepare the student for the practice of his profession, Dr. Henry Beats, Jr., president of the Medical Council of Pennsylvania, and also head of the State Board of Medical Examiners, has gone a step further and offered statistical proof.

"His criticism of the average medical graduate was replied to the day after it was published by several of the leading medical school professors in Philadelphia. These all held that he had overstated the facts.

"Dr. Beats, in turn, has given out a statement of the examinations for physicians' diplomas held in Philadelphia last month for persons desiring to practice in this State. Out of eighty-eight applicants for the coveted diplomas, he said, fifty-one failed to pass examinations in all the subjects, while twenty-nine failed to qualify for the diplomas, the passing mark being only seventy-five out of a possible 100.

"Of the fifty-one it was shown, with only a few exceptions, the successful applicants failed in the elementary subjects in which an examination was held, physiology and pathology.

"'If any medical college in the United States,' said Dr. Beats, 'desires me to substantiate my assertion, I invite such to accompany me to Harrisburg, and, abiding by the results, examine the papers of those illiterate students—men so illiterate that it is self-evident they are utterly incapable of understanding medicine—upon whom they have conferred degrees, and permit me to unfold the names of the colleges and faculties that conferred such degrees.'"

Yet, these young men, who lack even a rudimentary knowledge of physiology and pathology, are now duly authorized to treat, and poison, and carve, and kill any sick person who may apply to them, while worthy men, who have, perhaps, spent half a century in studying the laws of health and disease, will be arrested, prosecuted, and fined or imprisoned, if they dare, for pay, to rub a sick person, administer a wet pack, or an injection, or even give advice in regard to diet.

When, in addition to these things, the editor remembers that there hang "regular" medical diplomas in thousands of offices of scoundrelly "specialists," who should be serving time on a chain gang, he is somewhat inclined to be more proud of the degree of "No-Doc," conferred upon him last year at the Christmas jinks of the University Club, than he would be of a handsomely framed "M. D." diploma.

Dyspepsia and Crime.

THE following sensible remarks were made by Theodore Sutro of New York at a hearing on proposed Federal liquor legislation before the House Committee on Judiciary:

"The only way to make temperate men and women is to teach them moderation as they grow up from boyhood and girlhood, and the only genuine, constitutional way to keep them temperate when they have grown up if they are not strong enough themselves to be moderate is to make overindulgence—drunkenness—a crime, a misdemeanor. And that is the province of the State, not of the central government.

"If the law can say to a man, 'Thou shalt not take a sip of wine or beer or whisky or brandy,' it can, by the same authority, say to him, 'Thou shalt not take a mouthful of mince pie and a tumbler of ice water.'

"Gentlemen of the committee, overindulgence in intoxicants is not the only excess conducive to crime in this country. I give it as my firm belief that as many murders have been committed by dyspeptics made dyspeptic by too much mince pie and ice water as by men inflamed to violence by strong drink."

EVERY BIRD A WEATHERCOCK.

"Where's the wind?" scoffed the sailor. "Why, look at the birds—they'll tell you. Don't you know that every bird's a weathercock?

"Stop moistenin' your finger and holdin' it up," he went on, in a tone of disgust. "The practice ain't hardly cleanly. Look at the birds is all you got to do, for, by crinus, every bird sets with its head always straight at the wind. Every live bird in a tree is as reliable a weathercock as them dead birds on the spires what is so much considered in this here Lenten season."

Shoes For Children

The first requirement in healthful footwear for children is that it fit perfectly. To do this, shoes must be correctly shaped. Our children's shoes are made on orthopedic lasts. They have style and wearing qualities—but correct shape is the first consideration with us. As a result, our shoes ensure healthful foot conditions in children; and because they fit perfectly, give longer and better wear. If you are unable to visit us or send in the children, write for Catalogue "T." This will enable you to order intelligently.
